SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST

We shall commence January 26 a most graphically written series of articles, fully illustrated, descriptive of Alaska and the Pacific Coast, by Hon. A. K.. Delaney, who has frequently traversed the entire route. Mr. Delaney is an attorney of national reputation, practising before federal and state courts. His pleadings are noted for their fluency, and he has injected into his articles the same grace and style which have won the closest attention of the courts, and will win that of his readers.

Starting from Chicago he takes the reader with him on his transcontinental ride to the Puget Sound country, thence to Victoria, B. C., and the famous Inland Passage, considered one of the wildest, most broken and rugged regions of North America. A sketch of Vitus Bering, and his discoveries, directed by Peter the Great of Russia, with a resume of the Russian occupation, is here given. Then the reader is taken to Sitka, the site of Fort St. Michael, founded in 1799, to the mining camps of British Columbia, the gold discoveries of Alaska, the Treadwell mine and mill, and to the seal islands; then follow descriptions of Alaska Indians, the Alaskan glaciers, the civil government and the people of Alaska, the coast line steamers, and a hundred and one highly interesting features in connection with Uncle Sam's far north possessions. The illustrations will be direct from photographs, by the halftone process, and the whole will form a most valuable and instructive series for sportsmen and tourists alike.

CAMP LITHGOW

BY STEVE

"Tell Steve he had better stay at home, We would only have to divide our chickens with him and be bothered with his everlasting cackle."

The above is a copy of a postscript added to a letter written by W. F— to F. L—, and was intended as a bantering reply to a message sent by the writer, through F. L—, to the effect that he was going to get all the prairie chickens this Fall. W. F— in his stocking feet measures about six feet two and one-half inches and turns the scales at 223 pounds. The writer in his stocking feet, standing on a pair of stilts nine inches high, would be able to see a prairie chicken in just as tall corn as W. F— could, and with a twenty-five pound bag of shot on either shoulder and one in his hand would tip the scales at about the same weight. This difference in physical make-up makes it exceedingly unpleasant and unprofitable for the writer when an altercation arises over the interrogatory as to "who shot that chicken?" Many a nice plump prairie chicken have I, with Christian submission, allowed that giant to stow away in his massive shooting jacket, when both of us knew that I shot the bird. And it required considerable Christian fortitude on my part, in the evening, after the rest of the party had returned to camp and each one counted his bag, to hear, in silence, this braggadocio laugh and crow over the fact that he had one or two more birds than any other member of the party. Forgive me, reader, if ever I go out with such a man again. Think of it! You and your friend, who is about twice your size, are going through a cornfield. You start into the corn about twenty rows apart. After you have gone a short distance a prairie chicken gets up right out of the same row that you are in, and about twenty-five yards away. You fire, and the bird drops. Thereupon the other fellow fires his gun, making a terrible roar, for he shoots a 10-gauge and loads with 5 drams of powder. You, of course, think he has knocked down a bird, too. But you haven't picked your bird up—and you never will. Don, your friend's red Irish setter, has saved you the trouble. You say, "Here, Don," but Don does not hear. He takes the bird straight to your friend, who puts it in his pocket with a complacency that would shame the devil. By this time it will begin to dawn upon you why your friend (?) always shoots just after you do, and why it is that he always misses when you do. Your first impulse will be to assert your rights. You start in accordingly. In a little while you are willing to arbitrate. But your friend does not see that there is anything to arbitrate. You are told most emphatically that you didn't shoot that bird, and reminded very forcibly that your stature does not permit of your shooting prairie chickens in the growing corn. But there are more ways than one of killing a cat. If you can't kill him with a club, perhaps you can set a trap for him, and in that way get him at your mercy.

When F. L— showed me W. F—'s letter and I finished reading it, the above mentioned P. S. and all, it suddenly occurred to me that here was a splendid opportunity to set a trap for W. F—. I explained my scheme to F. L—. He was a little dubious; thought W. F— could not be caught that way. But we both concluded it was worth trying anyway, so that same day I sent W. F— the following letter:

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 12, 1894.

MY DEAR W. F.:—I was to be one of the party to go to O. next Friday to take part in a prairie chicken hunt with you. I had looked forward to some good sport and a very enjoyable time with my old friend, W. F—. However, the postscript which you added in Mr. L—'s letter and which he showed me to-day, counts me "not in it." I must be one of those very stupid people who never take a tumble. Until I read that postscript I had no idea that you looked upon me as a bore and branded my conversation as "everlasting cackle." Fred tried to assure me that what you wrote was meant as a joke, but I know you to be too serious a man to indulge in a joke to that extent. Most people will joke to a certain extent verbally—in fact, I am one of that class myself—but I seldom put in writing anything quite so cutting as your postscript in Mr. L—'s letter unless I mean it. However, I cannot forget the good times we have had together in the past, and for the sake of them I certainly bear you no ill-feeling, and hope that you and the rest of the boys will have a very successful and pleasant hunt. I must at least thank you for your candor in expressing to Mr. L— your feelings toward me. I can assure you that this time, at least, I have "tumbled." With best wishes I am Yours very truly,

A. C.

He got the letter the next morning, and that same morning I got the following telegram from him:

"A. C—, Home Insurance Building, Chicago, Ill.

"No offense intended. You must come. Will write to-night. W. F—."

A few minutes after receiving this telegram, and while I was still shaking with laughter over the way my bait had been swallowed, F. L— happened in on me and showed me a telegram that he had just got from W. F—. It read as follows:

"F. L—, c-o Marshall Field Wholesale, Chicago, Ill.

"Steve must come. Don't let him disappoint me. Have written him. W. F—."

To say that F. L— and I enjoyed a hearty laugh right there and then at W. F—'s expense, hardly expresses it. Suddenly a new idea struck me. I ceased laughing, turned to F. L—, who had also stopped laughing, and was now really looking sad. I said to him, "What do you think of it, Fred?" He replied, "I think it is cruel." "That is exactly the way I am beginning to feel myself," I said. "I must stop that letter some way. The telegrams are bad enough. If W. F— writes a letter apologizing and declaring his friendship for me, his humiliation when he learns that the whole thing was a joke, may be so great that he cannot forgive, and you know, Fred, I would not lose his friendship for all the world." Fred agreed with me, so I telegraphed as follows:

"W. F—, ——, Ill.

"Will see you to-morrow. Don't send letter.

"A. C—.

But before the above reached its destination, W. F— had posted the letter. I hesitate about publishing it, but as I have mentioned no names and have already published the rest of the correspondence, I can see no really good reason for withholding the letter, so here it is:

MY DEAR S:—Your favor of yesterday just received. Had a thunderbolt stricken me down I would scarcely have been more stunned. Our friendship has been so cordial, we have enjoyed so much a great many days afield, we seemed to be so well acquainted and to have such a mutual understanding, that the thought of saying anything that would so wound you had not entered my mind. I want to assure you with all the seriousness of which I am capable that what I wrote was but a few words in a joke and intended as a little banter merely. I cannot adequately express my regret, chagrin and misfortune at the turn things have taken. I must assure you of my true, lasting friendship, and while I realize that such words as these do not heal your wounded feelings, yet they are something of a relief to me, and I beg that you may regard me with enough consideration to believe me truthful, even if you cannot look upon me as honorable. The bantering talk in which we have mutually indulged, as well as in our letters, led to what I wrote. It is difficult to realize that written language doesn't convey the same meaning as words spoken.

You say you joke verbally, but not in writing. I beg to cite you to an instance, and do not think I use it to complain, but simply as an argument to show you that not only what has been said, but also written, has led up to this that I wrote. Two years ago I wrote you that on account of building I might not be able to accompany you, but you must come as usual and take the dogs and have the best time possible. You replied that you had no regrets to express that I could not accompany the party; you cared nothing for my society; all I was considered good for was to get things ready that your party might go and have an enjoyable hunt, yet it was always well to have a long-legged galoot in the party who could look over the cornfield and see if there were any prairie chickens in the next stubble, and that I better make arrangements to go. In Fred's letter he said: "Steve says he is going to get some chickens, so you will have to shoot to kill. I hardly think there will be any use in the rest of us taking any shells if you and he feel that way."

I have been very busy, and besides some worried for fear the dogs I will have would be a "scratch pack." I hurriedly wrote Fred and then glanced over his letter to see if I had omitted anything, and noticing what he said about you, I took the liberty to add the postscript, which I now regret as much as anything I ever did. I beg of you, if you value my friendship, not to disappoint me. You must come by all means. L— was in and says he thinks we will have good sport. It has rained until some fields are quite muddy, and the weather is cool and pleasant. Birds are fairly plentiful, and the only thing which will prevent us from having a good time is that you do not come. With kindest regards, I am, as ever,

W. F—.

When I finished reading the letter I must confess I felt that my joke had proved a boomerang. I had no idea at the start that it would go so far. I felt it my duty now to apprise W. F— of the fact that my letter was intended as a joke, so I telegraphed him as follows: "My letter was a joke. Am feeling bad. Forgive me."

It was about 10 o'clock in the morning when I sent that message. At 2 o'clock that same day I, with the rest of our party, took a train for the home of W. F—. On the way down the merits of my joke were discussed quite freely. The boys had seen the telegrams but knew nothing of the letter. That I considered good enough to keep all to myself. As we neared our destination I began to feel curious as to how W. F— would receive me. However, my fears were soon allayed, for no sooner had I landed on the depot platform than he met me and gave me as hearty a shake of the hand as he ever gave me before in his life. I asked him to please turn around that I might give him a free and liberal application of shoe leather. He complied with my request at once and very meekly. I fully satisfied my own feelings, but he seemed to think he should have more, so I gave it to him, much to the amusement of the bystanders. For once they saw their giant completely cowed, and that by a featherweight too. This little circus over, W. F— shook hands with the other five of our party, and, after getting dogs and baggage into the wagon, we drove to W. F—'s house where we found his exceedingly amiable and jolly good wife waiting anxiously to receive us. After a welcome handshake all around she informed us that she had sl oot on Thanksgiving afternoon as a compliment to Mr. A ams f Chicago and myself. I could, of course, do o but avail myself of their hospitality. Mr. dly me with him on this occasion, and, o miles under a broiling, hot sun, we acre tract owned by the club, which is beautifully located on Eimendorf Lake in the "West End" of the city. Here we spent a delightful afternoon with Mr. Adams of Chicago, and Messrs. France, Shields, Rothwell, Paris, Vernor, Volbrecht, Samuels and many other club members whose names I would be delighted to recall, the shooting only ceasing when it was too dark to see the target. I wish to stick a pin right here and say that if any visiting sportsman fails to avail himself of the hospitality of these men he misses one of the golden opportunities of his life.

Mr. Paris having invited me to accompany him on a shooting expedition gotten up for my especial benefit, we started from the Mahnke Hotel at 4 a. m. on November 1, for a day's hunt on the Rio Medina. For a wonder the morning and day were cloudy and the weather crisp. Being well wrapped up in our overcoats and robes we did not suffer from the keen "norther" upon our backs. The back part of our "trap" was filled with lunch enough for five men, some horse feed, and as good a setter dog, the property of my companion, as one would care to own. A drive of seventeen miles south, passing several old missions on the way, we crossed the Medina on a new iron bridge one-fourth of a mile long, passed through a small Mexican village and arrived at our objective hunting grounds at 7 o'clock.

Putting up at a Mexican's farmhouse, seeing the horse in a bundle of corn fodder up to his ears, giving the dog a light breakfast and promise of more, filling our canteens, taking our guns from the cases, putting them together and getting started on our way, was the work of a very short space of time.

A small cotton-field to the north yielded two doves, but no quails where we certainly expected them. Mr. P— now proposed that we work our way to the river some two miles south. We had not gone far when I stumbled onto a small bevy of six or eight birds and which bevy was just as large an hour later. My friend talked nicely to me, encouraging me by saying he thought I would do better next time. We came upon a Mexican repairing his wire fence along the road which some miscreant had cut in a shameful manner. He talked English well and kindly gave us permission to hunt over his extensive ranch, notwithstanding he had the same posted. We immediately voted him into full citizenship.

After fighting our way for forty rods through a patch of cockleburs higher than one's head, we came out into a cotton-field that proved to be the very place we had been looking for. The dog was certainly kept busy for a couple of hours, for he was constantly holding a point, trailing or retrieving birds. True to his master he carried my birds as well as his master's to him. I could not blame the dog, but it always does a shooter good to finger his own game.

By the time we reached the river our game bags were quite well filled, the dog having in the meantime learned to give me an occasional bird; and besides several cottontails swelled the bottom of my coat. The dog being very warm a halt was called and Mr. Paris took him by a circuitous detour of a half mile to a place where the bank was not so steep so that he could enjoy a bath in one of the pools of water that here and there dotted its otherwise dry bed. While this was being done I busied myself gathering and eating pecans, which lay thick upon the ground beneath the almost naked trees. Soon I was saluted as follows: "Doctor, it's your treat!" At the same time my friend drew from his game bag an eight-pound live catfish. An inquiry as to the modus operandi of securing it elicited the fact that he had shot it while it was flying over a hackberry tree. As I did not see any wings, of course I felt like doubting his word, but knowing that Mr. P— had lived in Texas a long time I discreetly kept my thoughts to myself. Little by little it leaked out, however, that some piscatorial Mexican had set his line and gone off to gather pecans at a very inopportune time, for him, and my friend, being a member of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, felt it to be his solemn duty to remove from the fish's mouth the cruel hook which impaled it. Retracing our steps about forty yards from the river's bank, our dog, while climbing a short incline covered with brush, and when, as the sequel showed, was half way past a quail, got its scent, and there he stood stiff and stanch, his body bent sideways, somewhat in the shape of a horseshoe, with his head and tail pointing in the same direction. Both of us took in at a glance the peculiar point. I was for getting the quail at once, but "hold on," says P—, "let him play with it a while," whereupon he dived down into the mysterious realms of his hunting coat pockets and, producing a yellow paper, some tobacco and a nally make and smoke a vile him of his obligations to his was cruelty to animals to let his on. He gave me a look or two ne bird,

Another act of this remarkable dog occurred a few hours later that deserves mention. Mr. P— had dropped a bird with one barrel. The dog retrieved it to within sixty feet of his master, when he pointed another quail with the first one in his mouth. This bird was flushed and killed and the dog let go the first to retrieve the second, at which time bird number one took to its wings and transferred itself to an entirely safe locality.

There is no water here except what you procure from wells and an occasional pool in some dry river's bed, consequently when hunting it is always necessary to carry water along for the dogs. They soon learn to ask for it, and when thirsty will come up to their owners, nose the canteen, and by barking ask for a drink. All one has to do is to pull the cork, tip the canteen so that the water flows a small stream, and the thirsty canine will stand with open jaws and lapping tongue and intercept it before it reaches the ground.

We hunted until 3 p. m., when a count of our game revealed sixty-two quails, twenty doves, three cottontails, one jack-rabbit, one chicken hawk and a catfish, certainly to me an excellent day's sport; but my friend regretted that we had not been unable to capture more.

The delightful ride back home, the keen appetite for supper, and a good one it was too, the cigars over which we recounted the exploits of the day, the aching limbs and good soft bed dwell in memory yet as component parts of one of the most delightful days ever spent afield.

THE PROPOSED INDIANA GAME LAW

MUNCIE, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I read with interest the proposed revision of the Indiana law for the protection of game recently published in the AMERICAN FIELD, and taken as a whole I believe it to be a most admirably constructed law. In all such laws, however, there is not alone the ultraprotectionist idea to be followed. Game laws to be operative to their fullest extent should not take on too much of a criminal code idea; they should be popular as well in the sense of affording such privileges as will be most easily attained by the shooting public in general.

If I understand it correctly when the present "quail law" of this state was enacted some two years since, one of the principal reasons given for the change from the then existing statute was, that in extending the open season from December 20 to January 1, it would include the holidays. Each year of course sees many city or other visiting people with their country friends, and this is particularly true of the holiday season. Hunting is probably not followed by any class so generally as by country people, and with them, and the juvenile element of that class in particular, it is what might be termed a standard form of amusement.

Quails are found on the farm, not in city streets, and the quail season should extend to such a date that when the Fall work has been finished and it is convenient for the farmer, his boys and friends so inclined may hunt them without overstepping any legal limitations, therefore I believe the open season on quails in Indiana should be from November 10 to January 1, inclusive. I think the rabbit-shooting season should close with January 1, also. January and February snows and their attending rabbit hunts are a menace to the physical welfare of our quails, for then it is that the pot-hunter and the pot-shot are most in evidence.

By a liberal open season, such as I regard the one I name above for quail, I believe the incentive to break the law would be very much lessened. The Fall and early Winter months in Indiana are the typical hunting seasons, and I think the law should be so framed that no person should have any excuse to go afield with a gun after January 1 until the succeeding Fall.

I heartily concur in the other provisions and limitations as proposed by Mr. Sharp in his article, and especially with the anti-Spring shooting portions. The parties having the matter in charge should, as my friend Frost suggests, have such help as can be accorded them by the shooting element of the state. They will, in all probability, have the "stop quail shooting for five years" crank and cranks of various other sorts to deal with, and withal their paths will not be strewn with roses.

In this locality we have fully twice as many birds, I think, this year as we had last, and if the weather keeps up the "Southland gait" it has of late been going, a spendid stock of quails for breeding will welcome the rising sun on May 1. I believe that it is the bounden duty of the Indiana shooters to give their individual and collective support to this proposed law, and if anyone thinks it can in any particular be improved upon right now is the time for that person to "speak his little piece" through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD.

G. G. WILLIAMSON.

PLAINFIELD, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I am much interested in the proposed Indiana game laws, especially in that part of it regarding the open season on quails. In the AMERICAN FIELD of December 29, someone suggests that the open season of quails should be from November 1 to December 25 inclusive. This suggestion is altogether wrong. The open season as it is is too long. The open season should begin when the birds are strong of wing and able to take care of themselves, and close before the snows come when the birds become weak and when the pot-hunter comes from his lair and begins the butchery. My idea would be this: That the open season begin on November 1 and close on December 1. This would give us four weeks' shooting, and the man that cannot get enough shooting in four weeks should quit hunting and migrate to some other county where pot-shooting and slaughter are tolerated.

Any fair minded sportsman that has hunted to any extent the past season will agree with me that quails are very scarce, and that any change that is made in the law should be for the protection of the birds and not to please the whims of a few sportsmen.

GAME PROTECTIVE LEGISLATION FOR ILLINOIS

ST. LOUIS, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In reference to Mr. J. F. Schmeltzer's communication published in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 15, relative to game protective legislation for Illinois, allow me to call attention to that part in which he suggests a close season on all game found in the state at any time of the year, until the first day of October, 1897; after that time an open season from October 1 to December 1 on everything excepting quails, which should be protected until November 1 of each year, the close season to begin December 1 as on other game.

Mr. Schmeitzer must think that if the season was closed on game for two years he or anyone else could go out and have grand sport, the same as could have been done perhaps ten or twelve years ago. But those days will never come again, even if firearms were prohibited in the state of Illinois for the next five years. It is not the sportsmen that decrease the game, but the farmers, merchants and game-hogs.

I do nearly all my hunting in Illinois, with relatives, and learn and hear a good deal from them that perhaps would open the eyes of lawmakers, as for instance: On the morning of October 1, 1894, there was a certain commission house in St. Louis that received fifty dozen or six hundred quails (shipped in butter tubs and marked butter), from a small town in Illinois within one hundred miles of St. Louis. I examined several birds and was unable to find any shot marks. The merchant said, "Oh, well, I suppose they shot under the birds and stunned them to death!" "Well," said I, looking at my watch, "this is the opening day for quails, and according to the time the birds got here the hunter must have caught them asleep!" I have also noticed this Fall, while out for a day's shooting, quail traps, and have found as many as thirteen captive quails in one trap, which I released by turning the trap over. I did not shoot at them while escaping, but watched where they went and followed them with two young dogs, and I presume I got four of them afterward. It gave me more satisfaction to see the little puppies point and back, than it would to have shot into the trap and killed a dozen birds.

Let the sportsmen of Illinois have two months each year for recreation, and don't allow the good to suffer for the evil; but stop the shipping of quails in butter tubs, trapping and shooting for revenue, and have the open season on quails from November 1 to December 31. The latter date should be the closing day on all game, otherwise the rabbit hunters will continue to kill quails, as I have often seen done. I have been invited by farmers to come out during January for rabbit shooting, they stating that I could kill a dozen quails with one load when the snow is on the ground.

The above are the only suggestions I care to make regarding changes in the game law of Illinois. By substituting the month of December for that of October there will be fewer birds killed during the season, and shooting would afford more sport as the birds would be stronger and not so easily brought to bag, and it would also leave plenty of birds for seed.

QUAIL SHOOTING IN NORTH CAROLINA AND GEORGIA

ASHLAND, WIS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Having read with interest in the AMERICAN FIELD so many communications from brother sportsmen, giving their experiences in shooting and fishing, it is a pleasure to me to relate some of my experience in quail shooting in North Carolina and Northern Georgia, where I have gone annually for several years to participate in that most delightful of all sports. Quail shooting gives me more enjoyment than shooting any other kind of game, a conclusion I have reached after having hunted every kind of game found in the United States.

One can scarcely fail to find quails in any locality in North Carolina or Northern Georgia along the main line of the railway, now known as the Southern Railway, or any of its branches. This system was formerly known as the Richmond and Danville system. The birds there are large and strong, and everywhere there is good cover for their protection. It is always best for strangers who go there to take letters of introduction to some prominent resident of the locality you expect to visit. This will insure you the greatest hospitality and kindest treatment from all. Many owners of land have their holdings "posted." That is, a notice is put up, forbidding intruders without permission of the owners. "Posting" there means all that it purports, and such a notice is respected by all. Indeed it is very unsafe to disregard such a command. I wish every owner of land where quails abound would "post" it. I have never yet found a place where I failed to get permission to hunt on "posted" land, and only in one instance have I had to pay for such privileges. I paid three dollars once and the owner of the land had ten fine bevies of birds on his plantation and I shot among them for two days. He sent a man to show me where each bevy used and I found every one of them, consequently I am an advocate of "posting."

The Southern Railway has a corps of gentlemanly employes and every gentleman who goes over that line to shoot receives the most courteous attention. The company makes no charge for carrying dogs and the baggage men take the best of care of them. Of course no owner of a good dog will fail to properly compensate the baggageman who takes charge of his dog. This he will do even when enormous charges are made for its transportation.

I will also state for the information of fellow sportsmen that the Baltimore & Ohio road makes no charge for transporting dogs accompanied by their masters, and courteous and kind treatment is always received from the officers and employes of the road. The Richmond & Danville, now the Southern Railway, is entitled to the consideration of every lover of dogs and quail shooting. Most of the officials of this road are themselves lovers of the sport, especially Mr. Turk, the General Passenger Agent.

I spent over two weeks in Northern Georgia, about seventy-five miles east of Atlanta, in the month of November, and I shall start for another visit there and in North Carolina, in a few days.

CROWN STEEL GUN BARRELS

McDONALD'S CORNERS, N. B.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Some time ago one of your readers asked a question concerning crown steel gun barrels. My experience with them is hardly sufficient to justify my saying much about them, but as no one else has answered him, and as I am greatly indebted to sportsmen for much that I know of guns and shooting I will reciprocate by doing the best I can.

It is claimed by gun manufacturers that crown steel barrels have been thoroughly tested, both privately and in European proof houses, and that they are equal in tensile strength to those made of the Whitworth fluid compressed steel. It is said that they have successfully withstood the strain of 28 drams of quick, strong, black powder behind 4½ ounces of shot. They are undoubtedly harder than the common damascus, but never having experimented with the special hard damascus advertised by Francotte and others, I can make no comparison. I believe they are as hard, and they may be harder. I have a friend who has shot a pair of crown steel barrels about four years and he likes them, but my own personal experience is confined to the last two months. I am a little inclined to be nervous at times, and when shooting a good stiff charge of nitro powder, it steadies me when I think that I have a pair of gun barrels that nothing short of dynamite can burst.

No one looking for beauty should invest in crown steel barrels, for even in the most expensive guns it is sent out with a plain blue finish like decarbonized steel. But I have no doubt that it and the Whitworth, which only costs about eight dollars more, are the barrels for hard service.

NOTES

I DESIRE to thank the AMERICAN FIELD and Mr. Armin Tenner for the exhaustive and almost conclusive series of tests of wadding material which have been lately made by him and published in that estimable journal. It is something that the sportsman's world has needed for a long time. Many curious and remarkable results are found; not the least being the unexpectedly good behavior of all the powders with only a single cardboard wad. It does seem to me now that the old idea of wadding with stiff, hard wads a size or two larger than the bore of the gun is at last successfully exploded. About a year ago I wrote an article for your paper on the method of loading American Wood powder, in which I made some remarks about the manufacturers of that powder which some of your correspondents thought were rather rough. I acknowledge that I was a little "brash," but the advice they gave to beginners, in their circulars, was so utterly at variance with my experiments that I could not but think they were lax in making the necessary experiments with their own powder. My article led to a friendly and very interesting correspondence between myself and a member of the company making the powder, which ended in our both clinging to our original opinions. In the light of Mr. Tenner's experiments and tests, I cannot refrain from saying, "I told you so," and calling the attention of those interested to the opening sentences in Mr. Tenner's report in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 8. Also to a comparison of all loads of American Wood powder where 10 or 11 gauge wads were used with all loads where 12-gauge wads were used. A comparison also of loads No. 34 and No 46 will be found interesting. Also to the fact that all the loads mentioned by Mr. Tenner in his summing up of American Wood powder were made up of hard and soft wads. The table of effects from increased charges also shows that under these circumstances American Wood powder and Troisdorf are the only American-made nitros that do not decrease velocity and increase pressure or bursting strain when soft wadding is substituted for normal wadding. The fact that the soft wadding with the large loads not only increased the velocity but decreased the pressure shows that this powder, more than any other American nitro, needs soft wadding, or, better still, a combination of hard and soft wadding, and especially is this so with increased charges. I believe that the day of 10-gauge, hard, stiff wads in 12-gauge shells, with bulged shells and other inconveniences, is at last past.

IN reading Mr. Chas. Payne's article in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 22, of the recollections called up by the dead buffalo exhibited on the streets of Wichita, Kan., my own mind was carried back to the Winter of '71-72, when a silk hat on the streets of Wichita would have created more excitement than a herd of live buffaloes The writer pleads guilty to being a hide hunter, and Wichita was my market and outfitting point. Then "Red" and "Rowdy Joe" were the noted characters of the town and held the boards at the west end of the bridge. I was only a boy then and went on the buffalo range in quest of health, with hardly enough strength to do the necessary walking to get hides enough to pay my expenses. My partner, Mr. Joe Ball, one of the finest specimens of physical manhood I ever saw, used to carry my heavy Sharp's rifle for me, mile after mile. Poor Joe! He has been dead now many years; contracted lung disease and died in a year. When we were hide hunting we hauled our hides to Wichita and sold them at from $2.50 to $4 each. We used to peg them down on the ground to dry, and then when we had a load would load them on the wagon, heads in tails out, with a boom pole running lengthwise of the wagon to hold them on, and funny sight such a load presented with the tails shaking and dancing as the wagon jolted along to market. Those who were not there and "helped skin 'em," say it was slaughter and a sin. Admitted, brother; but what would have become of them? The inevitable was death. The noble game had to go down before the march of civilization the same as the noble red man. The buffalo fulfilled its mission and vanished from sight, and two years after the last herd was slaughtered in southwestern Kansas scarcely a bleached bone was left to tell the tale to the farmer who followed in the wake of America's noblest game. As the settlers came the bones were gathered and hauled to market and sold as fertilizer. I cannot blame the old-timers for the touch of sadness on seeing the dead buffalo in Wichita, and well might they have exclaimed with Mark Anthony: "This was the noblest Roman of them all."

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of December 15 is an article stating that a bill is to be presented to the Pennsylvania Legislature this Winter asking for the appointment, as a supplement to the game laws of the state, of a game commission. Now, if there is to be any change made in the game law of our state, and I think there should be, the open season on ducks should be changed to October 1. September 1 is too early, and probably was an oversight when the law was enacted. No game should be in season until October 1, and the season on all kinds of game should close on January 1. In other words Spring duck shooting should be abolished. Three 'months' open season is enough, the other nine months of the year should be given game to propagate in. Another thing or two ought also to be considered. Game should not be shipped out of the state and people not citizens of this country should not be permitted to hunt in this country for they cannot have the interest in our game laws that our own people do, and are more apt to kill game regardless of the law, just so they are not caught in the act. I have a petition, which I expect to present to the Legislature, embracing the ideas I have here suggested, which has been signed by over four hundred people and I am not done circulating it yet. I realize the [illegible] is not done right away to protect our game [illegible] five years more until Pennsylvania will [illegible] game laws, there will be no game to pr[illegible] time for sportsmen to act, and I hope to [illegible] is interested in game protection put his shoulder to the wheel and help all he can.

Pittston, Pa. E. W. CAMPBELL

THE legislatures of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan and North Dakota all meet this Winter, and it is the purpose of the sportsmen in each of these states to see if they connot get game laws passed that will be more uniform than those that now exist. Northern Minnesota sportsmen suggest that there be a close season for several years on deer, such as has proved so succesful in increasing the number of moose in that part of the state. North Dakota people want to make a license necessary for all outside sportsmen, and a law that will stop the commercial shipment of game altogether. Wisconsin wants to change the time of its deer shooting season so that there will not be so great a loss of the meat by the warm weather, while sportsmen in all these states want the close season, on big game particularly, extended. The Minneapolis Journal, speaking editorially upon this, subject, says: "The present wholesale destruction bids fair to completely exterminate all classes of large game in a very few years. This Fall there have been more hunting parties than ever before, and they have loaded the markets, not only of this state, but of Chicago and other large cities, with the product of the forest. If care is taken the woods of this state and of Michigan and Wisconsin and the prairies of Dakota should furnish good sport for the next fifty years, if not indefinitely. If the present condition of affairs is allowed to continue, there will be no shooting except in the most remote and secluded localities at the close of the present decade."

THE members of the Baltimore Gun Club and other like organizations in Maryland say that the regulations governing duck shooting on the famous Susquehanna flats are so openly and continuously violated by night hunters who hunt for market, that the shooting there is nearly ruined. President William H. Linthicum, of the Baltimore Gun Club, says that these night hunters openly violate the law under the encouragement of the Havre de Grace dealers, who reap a rich harvest, especially in the early part of the season, by purchasing and shipping ducks to Philadelphia and New York, paying for them a price about or less than half what they realize in the two cities named. "The report," says Mr. Linthicum, "that there is no wild celery on the flats and no grass in the rivers is false. There is plenty of food for the game, but the first bunch of ducks that alights is fired into by night hunters, who sneak down on them, and before they get used to the grounds they are driven away and go down the bay." Mr. Linthicum said that in the early part of the season he saw a flock of canvas-backs nearly half a mile long in the Susquehanna, but that they did not come on the feeding grounds because of the shooting at night and because of the puffing of New York and Philadelphia steam yachts, which come down there and help the pot hunters scare the ducks away.

STRENUOUS efforts will be made by the true sportsmen of Missouri to have the game law of that state amended in many respects at the coming session of the state Legislature. It is argued by many that the months of October, November and December constitute too long an open season for quails; that hundreds of the quails killed in October are scarcely able to fly and that the mother bird is robbed of her progeny at too early a period. It is proposed, therefore, to at least reduce the season to November and December. Another proposition is that the killing of deer in the state be absolutely prohibited for a period of five years. There is no question but that the deer are being rapidly destroyed. There are now in the state only a few counties hunted. Therefore it is held that a law to prohibit their killing for a limited period should be immediately enacted. Still another effort will be made to increase the powers and duties of the State Fish Commission and appropriate a larger sum of money for its maintenance. The commission claims that it is not encouraged as similar bodies are in other states, and that its operations are rendered ineffectual because of insufficient appropriations and inadequate laws.

THE sportsmen of this country are under great obligations to Mr. Armin Tenner and the AMERICAN FIELD for the publication of the most exhaustive gun wadding test ever made and published. I have spent time and money at different times during the last ten years in this same work, but never obtained such satisfactory results as Mr. Tenner and the AMERICAN FIELD have given us free of charge. I consider that I am under great obligations to Mr. Tenner, and shall some day, I hope, be able to assist him in his new enterprise of testing guns. I am surprised that some of our American gunmakers do not furnish Mr. Tenner with a new trap gun for these tests. It was an opportunity for an advertisement that [illegible] only once in a lifetime. English gunmakers are so well [illegible] have had so many years of experience with [illegible] that their guns are as nearly perfect in point [illegible] penetration as they can be. American [illegible] but who knows? I have pasted Mr. Tenner's [illegible] in a scrap book with numerous others, including my own, but I pronounce Mr. Tenner's the best of all by long odds.

Beatrice, Neb. ALMO.

HAVING always kept alive my interest in and for anything pertaining to our game birds, I am generally informed of anything in this vicinity which would interest sportsmen in general, consequently in a conversation not many weeks ago with Samuel Davis, a farmer living about four miles northeast of Rushville, I learned that he had a bunch of about twenty California valley quails on his farm. He said, "I have seen them several times and cannot be mistaken, as I have seen thousands of them in California." He said they would fly and scatter, each one running as soon as it touched the ground, and he thought they would increase fast if not killed off. He said he was almost tempted to prohibit shooting on the place for a season or two until they became settled and had increased more. In this I encouraged him, and I will probably have more to write about them later. Where did they come from? Did Dr. W. O. Blaisdell of Macomb ever liberate any California valley qualis? I am under the impression that someone in this state did so, that they all disappeared, and that these birds are the product of some of the stragglers.

MR. THOMAS W. FRAINE, of Rochester, N. Y., speaking recently regarding the Mongolian pheasants belonging to the Genessee Valley Fish and Bird Protective Association, said: "Our Mongolian pheasants hatched from eggs procured last Summer have done well. We have about thirty birds in the pheasantries and have just purchased twenty-one hens to augment the stock. With this supply we expect to get a goodly number of eggs next season for hatching purposes. The product will be liberated in this county and must result in some good. Many pheasants are reported to have been seen in the woods. They undoubtedly came from Austin Wadsworth's estate, where they have been propagated for several years. Four young birds escaped from L. D. Ely's pheasantry last Summer and one of these was positively seen about a week ago, and we hope the others may have survived. The association is now negotiating for a lot of quails. These will be liberated as soon as they arrive and if the farmers will only aid us in protecting them and our sportsmen give them a fair show until the close season on them expires, we may again hear the familar 'Bob White!' "

I HAVE been watching for a long time for something to appear in the AMERICAN FIELD concerning the dove. We in this section of Illinois have came to the conclusion that the law is entirely wrong in not giving us an open season on doves. Why they are to be protected until full grown, and a splendid table bird, and then are allowed to migrate and be shot on all sides of us, is more than I feel is right. I see chronicled in the AMERICAN FIELD, quite frequently, accounts of successful hunts on doves and I think there should be an open season on them in Illinois. I should like to hear from others on this subject and, if possible, to have the dove enrolled as a game bird on our statutes. Let the open season be from July 15 to August 15, or from August 1 to September 1. I have set the ball rolling, now let everybody jump onto me.

MEMBERS of the National Game, Bird and Fish Protective Association should not forget, nor fail to attend, the second annual meeting of the association, which is to be held at the Sherman House club rooms, Chicago, on the evenings of Wednesday, January 9, and Thursday, January 10. Business of importance will come before these meetings which members cannot well afford to miss. This, too, will afford an excellent opportunity for those interested in game and fish protection, who are not already members of the association, to join the organization and assist in the good work the association expects to accomplish during the present year. Question and answer blanks have been sent to all members, and the replies, it is expected, will form a valuable collection of suggestions as well as a record of work performed during the year past.

A VERY important meeting of the New York State Association for the Protection of Fish and Game is called to meet at Syracuse on January 10. New and vital subjects in relation to the protection of fish and game, and the [illegible] amendments to the code, is the [illegible] At every session of the Legis- [illegible] the [illegible] ment of the code it has been [illegible] interest and then another, until [illegible] exists, as formerly. It is possible that an effort will be made to have the Board of Fish and Game Commissioners abolished and place the department under a single head, with power to select game and fish wardens regardless of political considerations.

MR. HIRAM STREET, an old-time hunter and trapper of Northern Colorado, who was recently in Routt County, that state, says that the Ute Indians are slaughtering the deer at a shamefui rate in their Winter feeding grounds, some fifty miles east of Rangeley. He further said that along the White River, where deer are usually very numerous, the number is now greatly diminished owing to the ruthless manner in which they are being slaughtered by both white hunters and Indians, who kill them almost solely for their antlers and hides; and that while Colorado has laws for the protection of its game they are not enforced sufficiently to accomplish the end for which they were intended.

THE Crawford Hunting Club is the name of a new organization of sportsmen at Rushville, Ill., which has purchased a tract of swamp land on the Illinois River between Rushville and Beardstown as a duck shooting preserve, and on which, in a pretty grove of pin oak and pecan trees, they have erected a small club house, or cabin, which will be headquarters during the open season for members of the club. Those composing the club are E. J. Pemberton, John S. Bagby, Dr. A. W. Ball, Dr. R. C. Amrine, D. F. Greer, Geo. E. Walker, Geo. Dyson, John S. Little, J. L. Scripps, H. K. Church, W. R. Leach and Cleon Sweeney, of Cincinnati.

WHILE so much is being written about the pot-hunter and game-hog, let me ask what about the so-called gentlemen sportsmen who go out with eight or nine and sometimes ten pound guns loaded with from 3½ to 5 drams of powder and 1¼ to 1½ ounces of shot to shoot quails, thus giving the birds no show for their lives? These same men, too, will go home after a hunt, brag about the large bags they made and curse the game-hog because birds are getting scarce in their section of the country.

Two boys of Middletown, N. J., had quite a battle with a monstrous raccoon the night of December 18, while out coon hunting. Walter Field and John Larkin treed a raccoon, which was dislodged from the treetop after being hit with two or three loads of shot. As soon as it struck the ground, the animal attacked the dog, and when Larkin stepped in to separate the combatants he was bitten on the leg. Young Field then took a hand, and with a club killed the animal, which weighed thirty-three pounds.

QUAILS and prairie chickens were more plentiful in this part of Kansas last Fall than they have been before for ten years. This is probably largely due to the failure of crops in Nebraska and Western Kansas, driving the birds east for food. The sportsmen of Kansas are making an effort to have a law passed at the meeting of the next Legislature, this month, to forever put an end to the sale and slaughter of game in the state.

Olathe, Kan. FRANK HODGES.

GOVERNOR JACKSON of Iowa was in Chicago last week, and among those who called upon him were Mr. M. R. Bortree, president of the National Game and Fish Protective Association, who asked the Governor who was the man to lodge complaints with regarding violations of the game and fish laws of Iowa. The Governor said that Fish Commissioner Geo. E. Delavan, of Estherville, Ia., would attend to all complaints and prosecutions brought to his notice.

I STILL read the AMERICAN FIELD regularly and have done so for several years. I could scarcely do without it. I hardly ever lay it down until I have perused every page, advertisements and all.

THREE GOOD RUNS

WAVERLY HALL, GA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The weather has been very dry for some time, and I have had no chance to run my pack, but last night about dark we had a fine rain and a clear-up, so I decided to give my hounds a run. The distance to where I go sometimes to hunt is about six miles, so at 4 o'clock we left home—myself and a friend of mine, Mr. Gus Storey—for the hunting grounds, only taking with us eight hounds, five young ones and three old ones, namely, Sound, Renor, Lucy, Till, Burnice, Kate, King and Hyland. Leaving four young hounds I bought from Mr. Pooler and one that Maj. G. V. Young gave me, they being too young to run (only about eight months old) and leaving eight of my hounds out that were not at home (they were at my brother's), we reached the grounds a little after daylight.

The morning was favorable; the fog hung low and the wind was still; everything was wet. The pack was wild and ran on ahead of us for a mile or so. Pretty soon I heard Lucy give tongue to our right, then Renor, and then King, Kate and Burnice followed. The trail was warm, but I heard nothing of Till and Sound. Away the six hounds went to our left, and they were soon on a dead run. But where were Sound and Till? They drove the fox east about two and a half miles, and then he made a tack. By this time we were going toward them. They made a whirl to the right and then to the left. Now we had reached the top of a high hill. They were driving the fox at a terrible speed whirling and keeping close in the ravines and hollows. Pretty soon I saw them ascending a hill; I could see them plainly, but I saw nothing of Lucy. Over the hill they went like a cyclone every hound trying to see the fox and to gain the lead. They swung to the right all at once, and then it was that I heard Lucy giving tongue as though she was running by sight. The rest of the dogs had hushed. Away she went through an old brier-field, and I heard the balance with her giving tongue down through a long hollow; over a hill they went, and all was quiet. Just over the hill in a swampy place was the fox's burrow, and in it safely he landed, just forty minutes from the time they jumped him. We rode over, examined the burrow, and left, blowing the dogs off.

"Now," says Mr. Storey, "we must have another run."

We went back near to where we first struck and soon had another trail, and pretty soon had one going. This fox ran straight east for five miles, then whirled south, and then turned northwest through cotton-fields and swamps until he gained the forks of the creek; thence due north into a level stretch of thickets of pines until he reached the big road, the pack gaining on him. He went right by some negroes' houses with the pack sighting him and the negroes running over one another trying to catch the fox, throwing rocks, and holloaing like Indians. He kept on down through the orchard and through the cattle pen, into the thicket of pines, and down a ravine for half a mile, and then all was quiet again. Safely in his burrow he had landed.

I thought my friend Storey would kill himself trying to get to the pack, thinking they had killed the fox. The negroes all got there, and they wanted to dig him out and kill him. One of them said, "dat am de berry fox dat ketch all my chickens las' Summer;" another one said, "dem ar July dogs done paid him for dat foolishness; never mind, old fellow, next time he comes heah I send for these heah dogs sure. Boys, whar did yo' get dem dogs? Dem dogs goes foolish when dey am running a fox; dey run over yo' sho' if yo' git in de way." By this time Storey had got the pack away and we were in our saddles again.

"Hush!" I said; "I hear more hounds running."

I got away from the noise of the negroes and listened, for I thought of Sound and Till. Yes, away to our left I heard Sound and Till pegging away at their fox; they had gone in another direction at the start and had trailed and jumped their fox and had run it all by themselves.

I called to the hounds and galloped up onto a hill where they could get the sound, and away they went to Till and Sound, which by this time were getting nearer by running in what we call the hills. We dashed on and on until we were near them. By this time our hounds were all in and running as steadily as rain dripping off a house. We rode furiously until we got close to them, and then it was that I gave one of those keen yells that send terror to a red fox. Away he and hounds went to Baker's Creek bottoms, through the swamp up and down like a cat, trying to throw the hounds off to get a long run on them. I dashed into the swamp and gave a yell or two, and he couldn't stand it. He left for his home with all eight hounds close to him and running like demons—with Lucy and Sound in the lead. A straight run of two miles, and he reached his burrow under a high cliff of rocks on a bluff in Taylor's Ridge. This ended the third chase. First run, forty minutes; second, ninety minutes; third, something over three hours, and only two hounds nearly all the time after the third fox.

Now, Mr. Editor, I call this fast running. I thought of Capt. Bryson's long-winded hounds that he and Brother Spears ran seven and one-half hours after "Old Bob" on a July day, and it so hot that a lizard would hunt the shade; then I thought how Avent's hounds ran twenty hours, with his Hunter leaving the Julys or collies lying in the shade; then I thought of how Messrs. Spears and Avent were going to challenge the world to a fox chase for money; then I thought of Willis and wondered what would be Roger Williams' decision on Willis when he judges him, or what would be his decision on the Whitlock shaggy, or the Kentucky shaggy, or the Goodman shaggy, or the Robertson shaggy crossed on the Maupin and English, all these strains being the Maryland or Irish or July hounds, and all running back to old Whitey and Fury that Mr. Robertson of Mount Sterling, Ky., bought from Nimrod Gossneli and A. Winters of Westminister, Md.; the same gentlemen I bought Willis' ancestors from. Then I thought of how I would do if Mr. Spears were to challenge me for a race with borrowed hounds, as Mr. Avent says he is going to do; then I thought of how much money it would take to get one of those black and tan hounds; then I thought maybe it was all a dream of mine, and that I just would not pay any more attention to Mr. Avent's bragging, nor would I gamble on dogs; for it is not my purpose to outrun every man's hounds, nor to be so smart as to win their money by training my foxhounds to break off from a red hot scent and hark to me to get the lead. More than that, I thought of how I belonged to the Methodist church here and what my good praying wife would say, and what old Brother Pitts would say if I were to turn gambler on foxhounds, not that I think Mr. Spears' or Mr. Avent's hounds could beat mine, for if Mr. Avent bases his judgment on Willis' speed he would be fooled.

Then I thought and wondered why had Mr. Avent taken particular pains to single out Willis and abuse the whole July strain, going beyond the courtesies of a foxhunter to attack hounds when it was none of his business. I did not sell Mr. Avent Willis; neither did I know at the time that Mr. Spears was running Avent's hounds. Mr. Spears told me in his letters that they were Mississippi foxhounds. I did not send Willis to Mr. Spears to pit him against the world. I never told Mr. Spears that Willis could outrun any man's hounds. I only recommended him to be well bred and a good foxhound, all of which Mr. Spears acknowledged to me. If not, why did he pay me for him when he had him on trial. I wrote Mr. Spears that I had faster hounds than Willis by a long way.

Now I never will believe that Avent, or any other foxhunter, has foxhounds that can run seven and a half hours on a hot July day; neither does any other hunter believe it. It sounds like a burlesque on fiction. They may lope along and fool about trying to run, but the thing is do they run at the top of their speed for seven and a half hours on a July day?

Then I thought Mr. Avent might be a better hunter than I am, for he says he can hark his hounds off a red hot fox track half a mile away, as they are bred nervous and will go to the lead or die in the attempt, and they know when they hear him what he means. This is something I can't do. Then again he says that Hunter would get clear away from Willis unless a man was on a fast horse and blew his horn to hold him back. This I cannot do with my foxhounds. Then I thought that Mr. Avent might be a better judge of foxhounds than myself, to breed them so they could trail a track twenty-four hours old at a dead run so fast that it would take a good rider on a fast horse to keep in hearing of them. If they caught up with the fox perhaps it would be in Texas. Then I thought I had better not say anything more, for I am not the only man in Georgia that breeds and runs these "collie dogs." There are plenty of collies (?) here in Georgia as good as mine (and maybe better), colored just like Willis—a steel gray—or colored like a gray fox.

Then I thought perhaps Mr. Avent was prejudiced against the July hound, and would some day laugh at his own mistakes, and not be too hasty to condemn Willis' puppies and let Mr. Spears fool him out of them. Then I thought maybe Mr. Avent was a good clever old man and might be akin to me, and I would sometime go to see him or he would come to see me; and I have great respect for our brotherhood of fox-hunters, and would not jump on Mr. Avent's hounds if he was to sell my friend here, Storey, a hound, and would not outrun him and then kick him around and publish him to the world as a collie and no good when it was nobody's business but his and my friend Storey's. If Mr. Storey should be satisfied I surely would be.

Oh, no, I will return Mr. Avent's invitation to go to see him and his hounds with my thanks, and ask him to come to see me. I will guarantee him a good time and some fine sport. Let us be neighbors and friends in spite of our opinions.

W. H. LUTTRELL.

NOTES

UNDER the title "Sport, a National Benefactor," a correspondent of The Sportsman, an English cotemporary, gives some interesting figures concerning the amount of money invested in and spent annually on fox-hunting. The figures have been carefully worked out from authentic sources and are well worth pondering over. According to returns published at the commencement of the hunting season there are in the United Kingdom no fewer than 364 packs—stag, fox and harriers—supported at an annual esimated cost of £450,000, the value of the packs being quite £180,000, while the amount of capital invested in horse flesh by the supporters of the sport cannot fail to be short of the enormous sum of £11,000,000!

THE Louisville Courier-Journal gives credence to this dispatch, dated December 22, from Georgetown, Ky.: "The boys of Kincaid, this county, had a long and exciting fox chase last night. They started at 6 o'clock, with twenty-seven hounds. The route taken by the foxes was through parts of Scott, Grant and Owen counties. One fox was killed. The party was out eleven hours, and the run extended over 128 miles." Of course there is a trifling error. It should read "leagues," not "miles." By the way, the Courier-Journal omits the name of the man who stepped off (or over) the distance.

IT was from the kennel of the Eglinton, a Scottish pack, that the Messrs. Walker imported Strive, the sire of Big Strive, a powerful and fast puppy that was entered in the Derby at Olympian Springs in November; and as they thought a deal of old Strive, the imported hound, they no doubt will be sorry to hear that the Earl of Eglinton, who is the Master of the pack referred to, injured his back while fox-hunting on December 8 in Ayrshire; he had to be carried off the field, and the doctors declare the sprain to be of such a serious nature that his lordship may have to forego riding.

IT is said that some three or four hundred people with scores of mongrels, hounds and nondescripts assembled on Christmas Day in Allegheny County, Pa., for a general round up to rid the county of foxes; ten were slaughtered.

FOXHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by Mr. G. A. Hapgood, Athol, Mass.; Mr. F. Atherton, Serena, Ill.; Mr. A. Ladd, McLean, N. Y., and Mr. C. F. Kent, Monticello, N. Y.

THE Elk Ridge Hunt Club will hold its annual hunt ball on January 25.

Fish and Fishing

FLY FISHING ON THE NORTH SHORE OF LAKE SUPERIOR—NO. 7

BY ALEX STARBUCK

Another delicious morning dawned, with the crimson arrows tipping everything with golden glow, while the gentle wind, always a sweet and passionate wooer, was sportively moving the fragrant treetops and stirring the lake into wavelets of sparkling silver. It was to be another day of decoying, and so the entire camp was wide awake to take an immediate advantage of such delightful weather, for Lake Superior is such a capricious jade that no confidence whatever is to be placed in her; one hour she will be so gentle that a butterfly with safety may skim o'er her surface, and the next may be tossing in fierce seas that appall and destroy.

We were soon afloat that morning, and it was not long before we had boated one of the tribe beautiful—the tribe of ravishing hues, the tribe that flashes to the surface like a jewel bright. This capture came to my partner, but he was not to be sole victor long for as soon as we reached the beetling brows of a perpendicular cliff, where a watercourse had eaten its way, I surpassed his iridescent beauty by killing one a pound heavier.

This place had all the elements of being animated with the gameful trout. Not only was the bottom in confused layers of misshapen rocks and fanciful chasms of irregular lines, but the massive bulwalks which rose from the lake and were mellowed by the soft rays of a morning sun were fashioned into the most wonderful incongruities of elemental architecture. Stunted pines and firs, which had taken life in the narrow crevices, sprang forth at right angles and then curved parallel to the gray and aged rocks, and when the wind was fierce they beat their foliaged branches against the uprising walls as if in corrective flagellation. Shade and sunshine alternated on both cliff and lake, peak and spire, hill and vale. Evidently Nature was there in one of her wildest and grandest strongholds, and if an angler ever felt in[illegible] with the presence of the quarry we then [illegible] Good natured and earnest rivalry imm[illegible] between us when we had reached this p[illegible]

As I have stated, I there reaped the [illegible] my industrious partner was not long waiting for a victim, for when his fanciful flies fell on the shady side of a massive rock that had been thrown down by some Titan from the towering heights above, and that remained a foot or two above the water, he hung and killed a patriarch of the fleckered nobility that had doubtless never before risen to anything but palatable prey. He made such a fearful splash when he pounced upon the fluttering fly that I instantly turned to see if the boat was not minus a paleface or a half-breed.

What a glorious fight that impaled trout made; and never was one more cleverly defeated. Every desperate dash, every frenzied leap, every cunning coup was met with a matchless skill, and as the patient old sportsman, with his snowy locks shining like threads of silver, his rugged face in radiant glow and his gray eyes all a-sparkle, was having his paradise of delight, he presented the ideal picture of unalloyed happiness—really a living exponent of the beauties of the gentle art. His lovely prize came from the translucent water gleaming with all the colors that distil through the arched rainbow or that sink to sleep in the fretted fires of a dying sunset.

The capture of the painted beauty at this imposing piece of savage rockery, where Nature reveals with bewitching abandon her sculptured charms, and where the storms have echoed their thunders through ages untold, gave us great encouragement. With increased energy my flies sailed through the balmy air, striking the surface where I hoped to coax from his convenient covert some frescoed fontinalis that would prove the gallant fighter so characteristic of his gameful tribe. The hope went not amiss, for after a few casts some duped and dandy trout, radiant in brilliant dyes, sought the solution of the gay deceits, and to his astonishment was taken to another element to finish the problem. Still intent on the pleasurable excitement, I tried the same place again, and the instant I had delivered the tempting lures there came a panther-like leap, with a noisy and savage disturbance of the waving water all around my scarlet stretcher. On responding by sending the artful twitch with almost telephonic swiftness along the line, I was greatly surprised at the fruitless result.

"Oh! my! my! big fellow!" said Kenosh, who had his keen eyes riveted on my dancing flies.

"Too big and too quick for me; but I'll tempt him once more," I answered.

Again I sent my flies where the water had rippled, with just a bit of nervousness, for I was exceedingly anxious to boat this greedy grabber at the gay deceits, and no sooner had they dropped to the surface than he alertly sprang for them, with the same wicked and desperate dash, and once more was I completely foiled.

"You got 'im now!" joyfully sang out the half-breed, but it was a delusion just then that he did not realize. Have I lost the cunning of my hand, or has the accumulated years that have frosted my locks rendered me too inactive to skillfully hang a trout? I inwardly inquired of my disappointed self. Kenosh, on realizing his mistake, was fairly beside himself, doubtless feeling as much chagrined as myself at my lamentable failure; but not so that cynical partner of mine, for he always had a satirical arrow or two in his quiver to speed, and on this occasion having a target, as he thought, he let one of them fly for a center shot, bawling as my lures started on on their delivery.

"Look out or you will be called in on strikes!"

The base ball crank, for such he was, was doomed to deep disappointment; for undaunted and unsatisfied, "the jeweled prince of the mountain stream" again savagely sprang for his deceitful prey. This time it proved his death warrant, for the tempered steel sank well into his toughened jaw and there remained till the close of the battle, which was fought on a fair field and with a stubborn fierceness that gave the victorious angler a world of delicious enjoyment as well as a priceless prize in ravishing tints. Kenosh, the trusty half-breed, overjoyed at the successful result, quickly disengaged the hook, and being desirous of obtaining the avoirdupois of the victim hung him at once to the scales, which the murdered beauty pulled to three and a quarter pounds.

My partner's pleasantry not having budded with much promise, he retired to a serious silence to await another opportunity for sending a nimble-witted shaft. In the meantime he embarked on a mission for an angler's rapture, which invariably comes with a dash and a splash and a rhythm from the reel. His efforts were exceedingly industrious and painstaking, and at last the merited reward came in his killing a two-pounder which he had coaxed from behind a submerged bowlder. This pleasing capture wreathed his face in sunny [illegible] and also started his lute-like voice warbling:

The sweet breezes blow, the morning sun shines,
The white clouds drift slow down the sky;
'Tis a day that is perfect for sport with the lines,
For artistic cast of the fly.

Ah, haste to the shore, brother angler, to-day,
On the weedy gray rock take your place,
Where the surf at its base makes glorious race,
And, like rainbows, glitters the spray!

We started that morning on an all-round trip, pursuing the [illegible] wherever we thought it harbored. Little inlets, cozy retreats like fairy haunts, that were shadowed by bold and jagged cliffs, would tempt us one moment; while at another our vision, pleased with the ragged shores of some near-by islet that stood out in charming relief as the sunbeams lighted up its manifold piles of frost-broken rocks, would irresistibly induce us to also thrash its emerald waters. Again some bold headland or rugged barrier of the serrated shore would fascinate us with the belief that the spangled beauties were there to be had, and so we kept roving from one attractive point to another, reveling in scenic beauty here and taking trout there until we had an amplitude of the freckled victims, and then through fear of wanton waste desisted from the red-handed slaughter.

Thus the day delightfully wore along, with the smooth Summer ripples breaking on the bare rocks, the azure heavens a poem in drifting cloudlets of opaline radiance and the gentle winds serenely tantalizing the fragrant forests and filling the air with an intoxicating aroma as if from the amorous mouth of Aphrodite, the sea-born. As we sailed campward the misshapen shores appeared to soften under the prevailing glimmer and a quiet tender beauty of the scene gently stole upon us and steeped our senses in dreamy reverie. Camp at last was reached, and as we sank into inviting chairs memory reviewed the pleasures of the pursuit and we were more wedded to the gentle art than ever, for to the angler

All Nature hath a music gay,
A soft enchantment free from all alloy.

Night at last, with clipped wings, as it were, came upon the camp, and with a matchless wealth of jeweled splendor spread o'er the vast expanse of rippling water, deep dense woods and lofty mountains. The cool night winds crept down from the towering heights, the stars—the mariners' welcome visitors—kindled with diamond glitter, while the moon—a pale curl in the west—was fast disappearing and nothing but the beating of the gleaming seas or the note of a nocturnal bird disturbed the quietude of the beautiful, mysterious night.

The wearied angler, whose day of unalloyed enjoyment had been to him a glimpse of paradise, at last forsook the flickering campfire, bade adieu to the celestial beauty with which he was so deeply enthused, sought his couch of fragrant balsam and with the pleasant remembrance of the pastime, sank to slumber sound and dreams of bliss supreme, "while tossing princes wake in beds of down."

Another morn dawned with beauty of reflected sky and with every gentle wave resplendent in flashing sunbeams. It was to be another day spent in tempting the radiant redcoats, and therefore it bade the angler from his couch arise, "and taste the dewy landscape's soft perfumes."

When we told Kenosh, after breakfast had been served, to prepare the boat for our outing, he looked at us with wondering eyes and said:

"What you do with all the fish?"

"Eat 'em of course."

"You eat big heap then."

"That's what we are here for."

His eyes began to twinkle at this final reply, and then extending his two hands, joined together in front of his rotund diaphragm, he exclaimed:

"You git one big bay, then, like this!"

"You mean bay window?"

"Yes, that it."

The half-breed, feeling relieved after admonishing us of having too bountiful a larder in this one particular delicacy, hurried off to get the boat ready for our advent among the trout. We honored the swarthy boatman for his gentle hint but it was altogether unnecessary for never did we have any wanton waste; at times we had a somewhat superabundance for a day or two, yet there always came stormy days to bridge over the difficulty, and, sometimes, when the rage of the elements was long continued would ensue a decided scarcity of this edible fish.

We had mapped out no particular route for the morn's angle, but as the wind was favorable for a trip to the east bay where the big rocks and the big trout reposed we went to that promised land, which fortunately was near by. We caught nothing on the way, but when we surmounted the bare and blazing granite it was not long before we each had a goodly trout in play. I captured mine where a bulwark of craggy rocks ran into a ragged reef and where some sunken ledges afforded convenient cover for the embiazoned fontinalis. He was a fighter of tiger-like ferocity, displaying a matchless strength with a supreme speed in his savage dashes that constantly kept me on the [illegible] was encircled in the fatal net.

[illegible] trophy a hundred yards or so [illegible] the same gameful qualities, [illegible] eding till the angler was about [illegible] rnest endeavors to secure the [illegible] ntic efforts to escape. Both fishes were idyllic brook beauties, rare examples in rich mottling, marvelous tinting and unexampled symmetry, and well worthy the adoration of the angler who surmounts all difficulties and endures all hardships that he may delude his quarry with a bit of fur, tinsel and feather and thereby enjoy a battle and a victory to him akin to the joyous transports of a conquering warrior.

We wasted but little time in fervent admiration of the spoils, for the blood of the angler was mantling our cheeks and we fain would have other victims. Again, where great bowlders and crumbling walls covered the aqueous bottom, I industriously rained my flies, and to my great surprise where I had expected to arouse a ponderous trout a Tom Thumb of a representative sprang for my stretcher fly, a silver doctor, and was hung and landed without resort to the net, and then was disdainfully returned to the element whence he came. Trout were too abundant just then to think of retaining such infinitesimal specimens.

I advanced a short distance along the shore, for fear I might injure another of the spotted babes. and this time when I halted, my flies went whizzing and struck the water with unusual lightness. I was at once in raptures at receiving a terrific response from some goodly trout, who doubtless was in agony at the unexpected reception he met with at the feast to which he had so craftily been invited as a sacrifice to an angler's ambition. It was a cruel deception, but a pleasure to his foeman that words are too feeble to express. With the capture of this two-pounder I began to think seriously of Kenosh's interrogation that morning:

"What you do with all the fish?"

With this ringing in my ears, and the tinted trophies on the black rocks appealing to my humanity, I called an intermission and sat down on an overshadowed rock and took in the long lines of mountains that stretched away into an infinity of distance, and the jagged coast of torn and wave-worn granite that so richly displayed in the bright sun its varied colors of buff and gray, and its vernal fringe of forest in red and gold. I dismissed Kenosh for the nonce and advised him to take to the forest and luxuriate on the ripe huckleberries which were there so abundant, and of which he was so very fond. The prompting was taken advantage of with cheerful alacrity, and then I again took in the primeval outgrowing of Nature with which I was surrounded, and let my imagination soar in the majesty of cloud life and anon revel in the magnificence of the wooded spurs and shifting shadows on the weather-stained cliffs and the gentle ripples that so sweetly recited the peaceful life of the lake. Nature was evidently keeping a grand holiday on the shores of this great reservoir of cool and translucent waters—fit home for a Neptune or a Naiad.

Familiarity with the impressive landscape at last made me restless, and taking up my rod I sauntered along over the great jagged piles, not as Lucifer trod the burning marl in the nether world but with careful step and muscles of leg and arm tense and taut. I then had no desire for another trout, but after a long and tortuous walk over an untrodden path, wonderfully rugged and aberrant, I reached a lovely basin of clear and quiet water that was almost hemmed in from the lake by massive walls and that seemed as weird and mystical as if it were the haunt of some sweet siren. I was there tempted to break my resolution and to once more endeavor to seek a victim from the scarlet family of the fontinalis.

With this sanguinary mood upon me I made my first cast, and to my great astonishment both flies were snapped up with such avidity by two fierce trout that a taut line could not fail to impale them. As I always made it a rule to so keep my line, I felt the greedy and wolfish snappers racing around, with the rod bending and the reel singing, before the gentle twitch went out from my responsive wrist. As I had ample room and almost unruffled waters for the battle, I felt confident of soon conquering the twain. There was little ground and lofty tumbling indulged in, such as you have with a single trout, but in lieu a constant and heavy strain that fully tested the virtues of the little Chubb bamboo, and splendidly did it meet every requirement. When I had the trout well in hand it just dawned upon me that I stood sadly in need of my tawny netter, the intrepid Kenosh, and as I had sent him berry hunting I was satisfied I had either to land or lose them. But how was the landing to be accomplished? I mentally inquired, as I stood perplexed amidst this rocky anarchism of Nature, where everything was chaotically disorganized and I was at least ten feet above the rippling surface. Nowhere could I see a place in this secluded retreat where I could descend and drag or lift out the impaled trout, even though they should turn their ruby sides to the azure skies. All the time I was so earnestly striving to solve some method of reaching the base of the fractured walls, I continued worrying the struggling beauties until convinced there was hardly a spark of vitality left within them.

I shouted once or twice in hope the half-breed would respond, but nothing came back from the dark ravines and rugged cliffs save the resounding echoes. As I had not yet seen the coast line on the opposite side of this isolated inlet, if I may so call it, I concluded as a dernier ressort to work my way over the rugged rocks that frowningly rose from the lake, and see if anything offered that would insure the capture of the trout. It was a rough road to cross and as I advanced over it the toil of travel made the beads of perspiration fairly rain from my heated brow. At last, after having received a fall or two as well as a few bruises, during which rough-and-tumble travel I managed to keep the tip of my rod on a slight strain, I reached the desired place with the trout safely in tow. There my eyes were gladdened by the sight of a small gravelly beach, in segment shape, but to reach it I would have to clamber down to a sunken ledge, that was a foot or more under water, and wade across it—the distance being about ten feet—and then all would be plain sailing. Without a moment's consideration I let myself down fully six feet or more, to a huge granite block, and from that I reached the submerged ledge all the time holding a taut line on my finny captives. On reaching the beach I devoted a few minutes to making that pair of spangled beauties so exceedingly weary that when I began to carefully draw them in they came without a particle of resistance, and on their striking the beach scarcely a fin moved so completely were they worn. I had won the battle unaided and felt the prouder for it. As I was about to disengage the hooks Kenosh, who had arrived from his berry picnic and was intently observing my movements, cried out:

"What you do down there?"

For reply I held aloft the pair of royal beauties, which in the aggregate must have weighed five pounds or more.

"Well, well, fine pair that; but how you get there?"

"Waded, of course."

"You go drown, some day!"

"Not in shoal water, I hope."

"Rock smooth; you miss sometime; then, good-bye white man!"

I laughed at his solemn warning, as there was really no apparent danger, and stringing my trout on a crotched stick that I had cut from a bush well up the bank I retraced my way and was soon at his side. Being somewhat fagged I rested a while, taking in the incomparable splendor that was spread out before me in one unbroken and bewitching panorama of impressive beauty which the poetic pen of Longfellow or the exquisite pencil of Raphael could never have adequately delineated.

Having rested sufficiently I resumed my arduous tramp, with Kenosh bringing up the rear with my rod and fishes. It was over ragged rocks, that here and there glittered in the bright sunshine, and made my muscles ache and my limbs weary. At last I reached my venerable partner, who was wondering at my long absence and was about to commence a search for me along the savage and battlemented shore. During my absence he had caught two magnificent trout, and then satisfied that more would be wanton waste had discontinued the sport.

CHICAGO FLY CASTING CLUB MATTERS

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Chicago Fly Casting Club was held in the Masonic Temple for the purpose of reviewing the season's work by members of the club and assigning medals to the successful competitors. Those present were George W. Streil, president; F. B. Davidson, secretary; Mr. F. B. Orr and Mr. J. E. Strong. Mr. B. W. Goodsell being away on his honeymoon he was graciously excused.

The Secretary's report showed a balance in the treasury of nearly a hundred dollars, with no indebtedness. All the paraphernalia needed for casting competitions was paid for and in good condition, excepting the buoy line for long-distance casting. It was decided to order a new one, built on a different principle, annealed wire to be used to hold oval-shaped buoys. Designs for a portable casting pier were called for and will be submitted at the next meeting of the club.

Wonderful progress in the art of casting the fly and bait was shown by the tables summarizing the Summer's work of the members. There were twelve weekly competitions, and at each competition six to ten members participated. The events were four in number, viz., distance and accuracy, dry fly casting, 5½-ounce rods and under, at 35, 40 and 45 feet; distance and accuracy, fly casting, 8½-ounce rods and under, at 45, 50 and 55 feet; long-distance fly casting and bait casting for distance and accuracy, ½-ounce weight, in 30-foot court; the members holding the highest averages at the end of the season to be awarded medals suitably inscribed.

In the dry fly casting event F. B. Davidson made the remarkable score of 94 per cent. for the season, J. E. Isgrigg following with 90 per cent. and G. W. Streil with 89 per cent. In the distance and accuracy fly casting event Chas. Essig led with a score of 91 per cent., B. W. Goodsell and J. E. Isgrigg treading closely with 90 per cent. The medal for the long distance fly casting event was captured by B. W. Goodsell, he having an average of 84 feet for the twelve events, his longest cast being 96 feet; J. E Isgrigg was second with an average of 79 feet, his longest cast being 83 feet. The bait casting event was divided into Class A and Class B. F. B. Davidson.

was the only one in Class A, and therefore had no competition, but inasmuch as he annihilated the world's record by 27 feet, he scoring an average, in five casts, August 25, of 167 1-5 feet, his longest cast being 179 feet perfect, a medal will be struck accordingly for Mr. Davidson. This is the best record in the world to-day, either professional or amateur. His average for the season is 139 feet. Class B medal was won by R. Miller, his season's average being 103 feet, W. H. Babcock following with 100 feet. Below are given the scores of those who made an average, in the twelve contests, of over 80% in fly casting events, and 80 feet in bait casting.

The Winter banquet of the club will occur next month, at which time the presentations will take place and good cheer follow. Next season the club intends to branch out and invite competition with other organized clubs.

DRY FLY CASTING.—F. B. Davidson, 94%; J. E. Strong, 87%; G. W. Strell, 89%; J. E. Isgrigg, 90%; C. Essig, 88%; B. W. Goodsell, 91%. F. B. Davidson won the medal.

DISTANCE AND ACCURACY FLY CASTING.—B. W. Goodsell, 90%; J. E. Strong, 83%; G. W. Strell, 85%; F. B. Davidson, 89%; C. Essig, 91%; J. E. Isgrigg, 90%. C. Essig won the medal.

LONG DISTANCE FLY CASTING.—B. W. Goodsell, 84 feet; J. E. Isgrigg, 79 feet; F. B. Davidson, 67 feet; C. Essig, 63 feet. B. W. Goodsell won medal.

BAIT CASTING.—F. B. Davidson, 138 feet; J. E. Strong, 86 feet; R. Miller, 102 feet; W. H. Babcock, 100 feet. F. B. Davidson won Class A medal, and R. Miller Class B medal.

NOTES

PART V of the "Fishes of North America," by Wm. C. Harris, has been issued and is ready for distribution to subscribers. The colored plates, two in number, are the best that have been issued so far, and by the new arrangement entered into between the publisher and Armstrong & Co., lithographers, of Cambridge, Mass., all succeeding plates will be equal if not superior to the present number, and will be issued at the rate of one part a month. The entire series will consist of forty parts, with two colored plates in each part. The colored plates in Part V are the weakfish or squeteague (cynoscion regalis), locally known in the South as "sun trout" and "shad trout," and the Rocky Mountain or river whitefish (coregonus williamsoni), the original of the plate having been caught in the Gallatin River, Montana. To all who have fished Montana streams this plate will bring back to memory pleasant moments spent there with the fly and rod. These two plates are masterpieces of the lithographer's art. The other illustrations are side and under view of the duck bill catfish, common or sharp-nosed sturgeon and the bowfin or dogfish, exhaustive descriptions of each being given in the text, including the various methods of luring these fish. The promise that this work, when finished, will be worthy of first place among American ichthyological works is well borne out in this number.

ON December 20 at Toronto, Can., Judge MacDougall, sitting in the District Admiralty Court, rendered an important decision in the action brought by the Crown for the condemnation of the American fishing tug Grace, of Dunkirk, N. Y., upon the charge of violating the Canadian Fisheries Act. The tug was seized by the Dominion Government cruiser Dolphin, last April, while fishing in British waters in Lake Erie, about eight miles from Port Colborne, without Canadian license, and brought into Port Colborne and tied up. The owners of the vessel denied any violation of the fishery laws. The three-mile limit, which applies to ocean fisheries, was urged to apply to the lakes also. Judge MacDougall delivered an elaborate judgment, deciding that the law of nations recognizes the authority of a state to claim territorial rights in respect to so much of all inland lakes as lies within its conventional boundaries, and that the tug Grace was fishing wholly within the Canadian waters. He therefore gave judgment for the Crown, with all costs of the suit, declaring that the tug, her tackle, rigging, cargo, and fishing apparatus be forfeited to the Crown.

THE Knobel Fishing Club, of St. Louis, Mo., has purchased a site on the St Francis River, in Dunklin County, that state, upon which a large club house will be built for the use of the members. In Clay County, Ark., a site has been bought on the Black River, between Knobel and Corning, where another club house will be erected, and arrangements will be made with the railroad company to stop trains at the railroad bridge near by for the accommodation of the club. A naphtha launch will be purchased for use on the Black River. An assessment of ten dollars upon each member of the club has been made to meet the expense of the projected improvements; and in making the assessment the officials of the club state that no member need feel compelled to remain in the club if he does not wish to stand the call for funds, as many applicants desire to add their names to the list of membership. The club now has 322 members, and the officers are: President, Alex. H. Smith; vice-president C. McD. Robinson; secretary and treasurer, W. P. Kennett. These gentlemen also comprise the executive committee of the club.

COMPLAINTS having been made during last Fall that much illegal fishing was being done at Spirit Lake and Okoboji, Iowa Fish Commissioner G. E. Delevan has devoted much of his time to the task of capturing the men of that section who might be engaged in the violations of the fish law. On December 21 James Ackley, John Leighty and A. Everets were arrested, and within two or three days they were tried upon the charge of illegally spearing fish. The former was convicted and fined twenty-five dollars and costs, which be promptly paid. Leighty was convicted, and it being his second offense he was fined thirty-five dollars and costs; but as he failed to pay up, through inability or lack of desire to do so, he was sent to jail. Everets was discharged, as the evidence was insufficient to convict him. Ackley had a scheme by which his shanty appeared from the outside to be locked and vacant, but Commissioner Delevan forced the lock, after calling several time and receiving no response, and caught the fellow with spear in hand and 300 pounds of fine wall-eyed pike in the shanty.

ON December 28 a convention of the State Fishermen's Association was held at Green Bay, Wis., 100 members being present. Mr. F. Hurlburt, of Green Bay, was reëlected president, and a committee was appointed to look after the interests of fishermen and to watch legislation. A resolution was passed which demands that the enforcement of existing fish laws shall be placed in the hand of the State Fish Commission, instead of being left with the present state game and fish wardens and their deputies. The latter are appointed for political purposes, it is claimed, and in many quarters it is conceded that the present game warden system is most faulty. Mr. Nevins, of the State Fish Commission, was present, and he stated the contemplated removal of the state hatchery —from Madison to Green Bay—was not only feasible but the plan presented many advantages.

THE following remarkable fishing feat is accredited to the Arnprior (Ont.) Watchman: "While Mr. Wm. McCaw, of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, was fishing in the Chats Rapids on Saturday last, he performed a wonderful feat. He had hooked and was enjoying the play of a 'gamey' bass, when he noticed several others swimming after his fish. Taking his landing-net in the left hand he quietly drew his catch toward himself, and with a graceful scoop secured not only the fish on the end of his line, but one of the bass which was following. That is fishing with a vengeance. Auditor McPherson, of the Bell Telephone Company, was along also and secured a number of beautiful bass and pickerel."

THE latest reports from California are that the steelhead salmon run has commenced. On December 16 one angler landed an eight-pounder at Point Reyes, says the San Francisco Chronicle, and a number of smaller fishes were taken by other fishermen. But the finest catch of the run thus far was one of seventy grilse, all strong and in fine condition, captured by Mr. James Orndorff at the Throckmorton Lagoon in Marin County. Steelheads are also running well in Petaluma Creek. The State Fish Commissioners are determined to protect the game fishes in the Russian River, and are having the stream patrolled this season as they did last year; and Deputy Al. Wilson, who has the patrol in charge, recently caused the arrest of two men for fishing illegally in that stream.

ON December 21 two Minnesota state game and fish wardens made a descent upon a lot of fellows who were fishing illegally through the ice upon Lake Minnetonka. The wardens started from the north end of the lake on skates and made a tour of the lake, during which they captured over 300 tip-up rigs and a quantity of other fishing apparatus which they confiscated. They also identified a number of illegal fishermen, who will be arrested when found by the officers. It is said a large gang of market fishermen has been on the lake ever since the surface has been frozen, and that hundreds of pounds of fishes have been captured by illegal methods.

THE sportsmen of Kansas have become fully convinced that summary changes should be made in the fish and game laws of that state, and there is a strenuous effort to organize in that direction. Mr. T. B. Murdock, of El Dorado, has called a meeting of sportsmen, to convene at Topeka, January 25, 1895, to discuss the desirable changes and devise the legislation necessary to a proper protection of fishes and game. It is to be hoped all lovers of sport and public-spirited citizens will take an interest in this matter and make their influence felt in the cause of game protection.

THE Fox Lake Fish Protective Association held its midwinter meeting on December 29, at Chicago. The principal business before the association was the taking of measures to prevent illegal fishing through the Winter. To that end two custodians who [illegible] lake are to be employed, and for the purpose of raising funds to carry out the project the following [illegible] were appointed as a committee to solicit [illegible] from the owners of Summer residences in the vicinity of the lake: Messrs. L. M. Melander, John Wilkinson and C. J. Patterson. An effort will be made to have the State Game and Fish Warden stock the lake with desirable game fishes next Spring.

AT Madison, Wis., a few days since, Harry Saudoll, of that city, and O. A. Bobbs, of Freeport, Ill., were arraigned before the municipal court upon the charge of fishing with nets in Lake Mendota. Deputy Fish Warden George Lawrence had been on the trail of the illegal fishermen, and after several days and nights of watching captured these two men. They pleaded not guilty and stood trial. Result was both were convicted and fined twenty-five dollars and costs each, and their fishing cost them twenty-eight and one-half dollars apiece, which they paid.

IT is said that Game Warden Shepard, of North Dakota, reports there are many violations of the fish law at Spiritwood Lake, and that he offers a reward for "information leading to the arrest and conviction of any violators of the game laws." We have always supposed that it was the duty of a game and fish warden to obtain such information, either personally or through his deputies, and we are inclined to think the violations will not be lessened in the locality named unless more decisive action is taken by the official quoted.

NEAR Knoxville, Tenn., a Mr. Beaman has begun fish-culture at Lake Ottosee. He has also arranged to form an artificial pond, some three or four acres in extent and three feet deep, by pumping the excavation full of spring water, and there he will breed various kinds of fishes where they will be safe from attack by larger fishes, the latter being kept in Lake Ottosee. When of sufficient size the young fishes will be removed from the hatching pond and placed in the lake.

THE Maine Fish and Game Protective Association will make great efforts to have much needed amendments to the game and fish laws passed by the Legislature of that state this Winter. It will recommend that no angler be permitted to take over twenty-five pounds of trout or salmon, the present law allowing fifty pounds, and that shipments from the state of pickerel and bass for sale be absolutely prohibited.

A SHORT time ago a number of anglers of Buffalo, N. Y., held a meeting and organized The Standard Fishing Club, thirteen becoming charter members. The club intends to erect a boathouse during the Winter. The officers elected are: President, John J. Pleger; vice-president, Leonard Cole; secretary, Edward F. Zenner; treasurer, Paul Preuss.

THE Bean Lake Fishing Association of Kansas City, Mo., held its annual meeting December 13 and elected the following officers: President, Edward Turner; vice-president, C. W. Chase; secretary and treasurer, F. M. Ferguson. A meeting was called, to be held in the near future, for the purpose of discussing the fish and game laws; to which all persons interested were invited.

ON December 17 the United States Fish Commission liberated 300 seven-months-old rock bass in the Wissahickon Creek, in Pennsylvania, the fishes being a part of a number to be distributed throughout streams in the Eastern states. Several other batches of fishes of various kinds—perch, sunfish, white and calico bass—will also be placed in the same creek, as it is thought they will do well there.

A GAME and poultry dealer of West Washington Market, New York, Mr. George B. McKowen, is said to be an applicant for office as a State Fish Commissioner under the administration of Governor Morton. The gentleman has influential backing, and one claim in his behalf is that the trade has never had a commissioner appointed from its ranks.

THE new state fish hatchery at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., has been completed. If an appropriation can be obtained for the purpose, the work of hatching will be taken up early next Summer.

IN Kansas, State Fish Commissioner J. M. Wampler has distributed about 300 goldfishes free to applicants, but no person received more than four.

SPEAKING of the game in the Yellowstone National Park, a Montana gentleman recently said: "It is an everyday occurrence to get within pistol shot of the biggest kind of game. Not long ago I was a guest at one of the hotels in the Yellowstone, at which a she bear used to be a regular visitor. When she first came out of the woods she would make but a short stay and would not come inside the house, but would approach near enough to eat scraps of food thrown to her. Strict orders were given not to frighten her off and gradually she grew so tame as to take food from the hands of any of the hotel people. The next thing was her entry into the office, where she would stroll as contentedly as a cat or dog and allow anyone to fondle her. She would never stay over two days, however, and would then disappear in the woods, coming back again at regular intervals. All attempts to find her sylvan abode were in vain. Not long ago this hotel burned and since then nothing has been seen of Mme. Bruin, but as a new one will be built on the old site it is reasonable to expect her reappearance. There are a few buffaloes in the park, but a buffalo is ever a shy creature. Their heads and hides are very valuable now, so much so to warrant an occasional poacher slipping in and risking the penalties of the law. There isn't much poaching done, however, for the boys in blue are ever on the alert and the would-be raiders on the government preserves dread a bluecoat beyond everything else."

AT San Quintin, Lower California, a short time since, the engineer of a flour mill was forced to battle with a large lynx which entered the engine room of the mill and attacked the man, undoubtedly through hunger. One day, when at work, the engineer heard a strange purring sound behind him, and upon looking upward and toward the door saw the lynx staring at him. No weapon other than a brick was at hand, and before the man could seize that the animal growled and prepared to spring. Just as the lynx was jumping, however, the brick—thrown with the engineer's full strength—struck the animal squarely between its eyes, slightly dazing the brute though but momentarily checking its leap. But that single instant gave the man a chance to shift his ground, in doing which he upset a barrel of water and part of the contents splashed over the lynx. This sudden bath confused the animal and caused it to halt for a second or two, enabling the man to open his jackknife and meet with its sharp point the spring of the lynx. Luckily the knife entered at a vital point and the lynx fell dead, although the engineer stabbed it at least a dozen times more to make sure it was dead. As it was a large lynx, the result might have been different if it had been well fed and of full vigor instead of half starved.

"THE gray wolves are on the rampage in the northern paat of Gallatin County," says the Helena (Mont.) Herald. "Already they have killed hundreds of calves, and in some instances have been known to attack steers and cows that became separated from the herd. The gray wolf is the fiercest of his species, and many a man in the great woods of the East and North has been killed by them. A few days ago a farmer in the northern part of the county shut two large-sized colts in a corral while he took his team to a field. When he came back after the colts a few hours later he found both had been killed by wolves. Another stockman, while riding over the hills, came across two large steers that had been carrying on an unequal fight with wolves. The steers were surrounded by a number of the big gray creatures and several coyotes, which had been running the cattle about. The steers were badly bitten and they were nearly exhausted with the unequal struggle. At the appearance of the stockman the wolves and coyotes slunk away. When the Winter finally sets in and it becomes a difficult matter for them to get a calf or a sheep the stockmen fear that these wolves will become desperate. They will then go in bands and will undoubtedly attack almost anything that might furnish them a meal."

A SEAL was seen basking in the sunshine on Mill Rock, near the the Hallett's Point Lighthouse, New York, by Capt. Arthur Donnelly, the keeper of the lighthouse, and an unknown man who had been watching the animal for about two hours trying to get a sure shot at it when Capt. Donnelly scared it away. From his post at the light[illegible] keeper discovered the strange [illegible] of [illegible]r of marine glasses, and started [illegible] a rusty old harpoon—the only [illegible] in the boat. But the tide runs [illegible] progress was slow, and long [illegible] rowed across the river the seal had slipped into its native element where it remained invisible. Capt. Donnelly prepared to use the harpoon when he reached the rock, but was surprised to hear a voice proceed from a man whose presence he had not discovered, saying: "Well, old man, you have scared the thing away." The owner of the voice explained that he had taken several unsuccessful shots at the animal, which seemed to be able to dodge bullets with ease, and was awaiting a better chance. The two men watched about an hour and then gave up the quest.

DURING the present month the societies comprising the Scientific Alliance of New York will hold a series of meetings of unusual interest in that city, at which subjects of rare attraction to scientists will be discussed and illustrated, papers will be read and lectures delivered. On January 2 the Entomological Society had its annual meeting, and that of the Microscopical Society took place on January 4. On January 8 the Torrey Botanical Club will have its annual meeting. The same evening the first public lecture of a course given by the Linnæan Society will be delivered by Mr. Frank M. Chapman, subject, "A Trip Through the Lesser Antilles." On January 22 "The Mammals of Southern Arizona," by J. A. Allen, will interest the society. On January 28 Prof. Edmund B. Wilson will deliver a public lecture, entitled "The Newer Problems of Embryology," before the Academy of of Sciences. As usual, the members of each society are invited to attend the meetings of all the societies, and are requested to make welcome to any meeting persons interested in the subjects announced.

ONE of the most recent additions to the menagerie at the Central Park in New York is a baby Indian antelope which was born one day last week. When but a few hours old the little thing was upon its feet and roaming about the stall in quest of food.

ALONG THE PATH OF LEWIS AND CLARK TO THE UPPER YELLOWSTONE—NO 3

BY W. S. B.

The last days of the year 1804 were bitterly cold, the mercury dropping to 20° below zero. Some of Lewis and Clark's men became very skillful in mending axes, kettles and other metallic articles for the Indians, and they in return brought into Fort Mandan quantities of corn, beans and squashes.

New Year's Day, A. D. 1805, was welcomed by two shots from the swivel gun and a volley of small arms. During the day a large party of soldiers visited one of the Mandan villages, where with their music and dancing the white men delighted the whole tribe. One French Canadian had a trick of walking on his hands, and of turning somersaults, for which performances the Indians gave him several highly ornamented buffalo robes and quantities of corn.

About this time the Mandans had a buffalo dance which lasted three days. This dance was practised when the buffaloes became scarce, and an Indian herald ran through the village declaring that a feast was necessary to bring the game back. At the appointed time a number of old men arrive and seat themselves cross-legged on skins, around a fire in the middle of a large wigwam. A sort of doll or small image in female dress is set up near the fire. The young men bring with them a platter of provisions, a pipe of tobacco and their wives, whose dress on this occasion is only a loose robe or mantle thrown around the naked body. On their arrival each youth selects the old man whom he wishes to favor, by an offering of his own wife, and spreads before him the provisions; after which he presents the pipe and smokes with him.

The rest of the ceremonies are described in the journals of Lewis and Clark in the Latin language, and are of the most sensual character. By such performances the Mandans believed they could make the buffaloes return.

The experiences of the explorers and their followers among the Mandans that Winter, of 1804–5, are of surpassing interest; and after reading their journals and notebooks, as well as the entertaining little book written by Sergeant Patrick Gass (one of the party), the traveler of to-day, visiting the banks and bluffs of the Missouri around the site of old Fort Mandan, finds the interesting relics and remains of the Mandan villages colored by the romance of an historic past, and by the never-fading glory of the earliest and grandest of all American exploring expeditions.

On April 7, 1805, the expedition left Fort Mandan to ascend the Missouri. The party consisted of thirty-three persons, including the Indian woman Sacajawea and her infant child—then only two months old—and York, the negro servant of Capt. Clark.

The large barge, with a crew of ten men, was sent back to St. Louis with reports and dispatches for the government. The members of the larger party, ascending the river, were crowded with their baggage and supplies into six small canoes and two pirogues.

The truth and accuracy of the observations made by Lewis and Clark have been verified of late years in a thousand instances, but in their day doubts were expressed as to some things described by them. An example of this is their note about the nests of geese seen by them in the tops of lofty cottonwood trees, near where the Little Missouri empties into the main river. Capt. Lewis says:

"Here we saw a great number of swans and geese, and observe that the geese do not build their nests on the ground or in the sandbars, but in the tops of the lofty cottonwood trees."

This statement was discredited by naturalists for many years, but it was afterward proved to be literally true. The geese seen by the explorers were the common wild or Canada geese (Branta Canadensis), and they make their nests high up in the trees all along the upper Missouri and on the Columbia River west of the Rocky Mountains. In this way they hatch out their young free from disturbance by coyotes, foxes or other enemies.

As the explorers ascended the Missouri River and approached the mouth of the Yellowstone their hearts were rejoiced by the vast herds of big game seen along the shores on either hand. Immense droves of buffaloes were feeding on the rich grasses of the plains, drinking at the brink of the river or wallowing in the mud near the shore. Scattered around the edges of the herds were watchful wolves waiting for a victim. Near at hand, also, the canoes ran by large herds of elks and deer who trotted slowly away from the boats, tossing their antlers as they ran. Capt. Lewis says, in his journal:

"There are often large herds of deer, elks, buffaloes and antelopes in view of us; the buffaloes are not so shy as the rest, for they suffer us to approach within 100 yards before they run, and then stop and resume their pasture at a very short distance."

Quantities of beavers were also seen, and many were killed for food. Beaver's flesh was the favorite food of most of the soldiers and voyageurs, who preferred it to venison or buffalo meat.

The explorers tell us of the curious "broken hills" they saw along the river. These were undoubtedly the Bad Lands, as they are now known and called. It is remarkable that Lewis and Clark at once solved the mystery of their strange appearance where in places the strata of clay had been burned by slack fires to a vivid red or yellow. Some of our latter-day scientists flatter themselves that the causes of the gorgeous coloring of the Bad Lands are but recent discoveries. They should read the journals of Lewis and Clark. These pioneer explorers noted the stratum of coal next or near the stratum of clay, and they saw some of these weird and wild hills and buttes on fire. They say:

"There is reason to believe that the strata of coal in these hills cause the fire, and appearances which they exhibit of being burned."

The explorers also mention quantities of petrified wood seen, and Sergeant Gass tells of one huge petrified log "of which good whetstones or hones could be made." Occasionally along the river scaffolds were seen on which, wrapped in buffalo skins, were the bodies of Indians. Many deserted Indian camps were also passed on either shore.

On April 25, Capt. Lewis landed, and accompanied by four men ascended the bluffs and saw about eight miles away that most beautiful river of the West, the Yellowstone, where it empties into the muddy waters of the Missouri. The next day the entire party camped at the junction of the two rivers, where four buffaloes were killed. There the big game was so tame that only the deer fled; "but the elks, antelopes and buffaloes suffered him (Capt. Lewis) to approached them without alarm, and often followed him quietly for some distance." Capt. Lewis speaks in the following accurate and beautiful language of the Yellowstone, which he first called by its present English name:

"This river, which had been known to the French as the Roche Jaune, or as we have called it, the Yellowstone, rises according to Indian information in the Rocky Mountains; its sources are near those of the Missouri; it may be navigated in canoes almost to its head. It runs first through a mountainous country, in many parts fertile and well timbered; it then waters a rich and delightful land, broken into valleys and meadows, and well supplied with wood and water, until it reaches near the Missouri open meadows and low grounds sufficiently timbered on its borders. In the upper country its course is said to be very rapid; but during the two last and largest portions its current is much more gentle than that of the Missouri, which it resembles also in being turbid, though with less sediment."

A soldier was then sent up the river for about eight miles, in a canoe, to make observations. This man was Private Joseph Fields, who was, probably, the first white man who ever ascended the Yellowstone.

It is perfectly apparent that Lewis and Clark and their men could have slaughtered large game by the thousands, if they had been so disposed, but to their eternal credit and glory, be it said, they killed only what was needed for food. Let all true sportsmen read with interest and respect what the great explorers noted in their journal at this time:

"Although the game is in such plenty, we kill only what is necessary for our subsistence."

What a contrast to Sir George Gore (who killed 6,000 buffaloes) and other titled butchers who from the earliest times have invaded our American big game resorts and have wantonly slaughtered elks, deer and buffaloes until the rivers and creeks ran red with the blood of the poor beasts.

The camp of Lewis and Clark, near the mouth of the Yellowstone, was just about where old Fort Union once stood, and where now is the military post known as Fort Buford. Old Fort Union was built by the American Fur Company in 1830, on the left bank of the Missouri. It was for many years the common rendezvous of trappers, hunters and Indian traders, and the scene of many stirring events. The fort and buildings were surrounded by a heavy stockade built of hewn timber, and was about sixteen feet high with bastions at the corners.

The track of Lewis and Clark next led up the Missouri to the Great Falls of the river, and from there to the Three Forks of the Missouri, in the heart of the Rocky Mountains. It is not the purpose of this paper to trace the wonderful progress of the explorers through the mountains and across the great divide of the continent to the Columbia River, nor to tell of their many adventures as they floated down that mighty river to the Pacific Ocean. It is well known that they passed the Winter of 1805–6 at the mouth of the Columbia, and started on their long homeward journey in the Spring, retracing their course up the Columbia and Snake rivers until they were once more in the Rocky Mountains. Capt. Lewis there divided the expedition. With one party he descended the Missouri to the mouth of the Yellowstone, and Capt.

Clark, with fifteen men and fifty horses, recrossed the Continental Divide to the headwaters of the Jefferson River, down which he traveled to what is known as the Three Forks of the Missouri.

There is no more beautiful or romantic scene in the Rocky Mountains than the vicinity of the Three Forks of the Missouri. When Lewis and Clark first arrived at this point on their journey westward, Sacajawea, the wonderful Indian woman, recognized the place as being the one where she was captured by the Minnetarees five years before. She, with her countrymen, the Snake Indians, were encamped there when they were attacked by the hostile Rees, who killed a number of the Snakes and captured many women, of whom Sacajawea was one. The capture of Sacajawea was an almost providential event for the expedition of Lewis and Clark, for she was recognized by her relatives and friends among the Snakes, as she now returned to them, and it was through her that peaceful and friendly relations were established between this great tribe and Lewis and Clark, as the expedition passed westward across the Rocky Mountains to the Columbia River.

The two captains discovered the Three Forks of the Missouri in a most lovely and romantic valley or basin, with lofty, snow-capped mountains on all sides. There they saw three rivers flowing into and forming one stream, which latter they knew to be the Missouri because they had thus far voyaged up it. But which of the three streams was the Missouri proper? This they did not know, and they had no time to explore all three, for they must push westward on their long journey to the Pacific. So they named the three rivers respectively the Madison, the Jefferson and the Gallatin, and by those names they are known to-day, and the great Missouri River thus loses some 300 miles of length which properly belong to it. The Jefferson is the longer of the three streams, and might properly have retained the name of the main river if the two commanders had then known it was the longest.

Within a few hundred yards of the little town in Montana now known as Gallatin City there is a rocky elevation from which may be seen the meeting of the waters which form the Missouri River. There Lewis and Clark, accompanied by Sacajawea, stood on that Summer day of the year 1805, and the Indian woman pointed out the spot where the Snakes had their tents when they were attacked by the Rees; and where she was captured by the latter five years before. She also pointed to the southwest, and told the commanders of a pass which led to the Summer camp of her own countrymen, which she said was on a river beyond the snow-capped mountains, a river whose waters ran toward the setting sun.

It was by following the advice of Sacajawea that Lewis and Clark ascended the Jefferson, and easily crossed the Continental Divide to the waters of a stream which flowed westward to the Pacific, and there they found the tribe of friendly Shoshonees, who were the countrymen and kinsmen of their guide and interpreter Sacajawea, the "Bird Woman."

It being the purpose of Capt. Clark to explore the Upper Yellowstone and rejoin Capt. Lewis' party at the mouth of that river, it was but natural that this commander, on the return journey, should again consult Sacajawa as to the best way to cross the mountains and strike the banks of the Yellowstone at or near its sources in the mountains. It was not known then that the headwaters of the Yellowstone were so far to the south.

Capt. Clark again stood on the rocky plateau near the Three Forks of the Missouri and gazed once more on that scene of beauty and grandeur. Beneath him was the confluence of three sparkling rivers whose winding courses stretched through the grassy expanse of the Gallatin Valley. Along the shores of these streams many beavers could be seen basking in the sun and as yet unterrified by the presence of man. Flocks of ducks and young wild geese were swimming in sheltered nooks beneath the shadows of trees along the shores, or rising on swift wings to seek other secluded haunts on the three streams. Herds of deer and antelopes cropped the rich grasses a few hundred yards away, and farther up, on the steep sides of the mountain to the eastward, a group of bighorns, or mountain sheep, gazed down at the strange sight of white men invading their pastures. Snow-capped and glittering all along the southern sky could be seen the Gallatin Range of mountains; to the east the rough and rocky slopes of the Bridger Range; mountains and ranges of mountains on all sides, surrounding a vast basin of fertile soil carpeted then, as now with rich grasses waving in gentle billows as the breezes passed over. Plainly marked across the valley in different directions could be seen the broad trails made by the buffaloes. Sacajawea pointed to a gap in the mountains, to the east, where she said the buffaloes were accustomed to cross over to the waters of a river which Capt. Clark knew from her description must be the Yellowstone. For ages the people of her tribe had been in the habit of coming every year to this valley, from the distant Columbia, and following the buffalo trail had crossed eastward through the mountains to the Upper Yellowstone, then, and for some seventy-five years thereafter, the paradise of great herds of bison which found there their favorite feeding grounds.

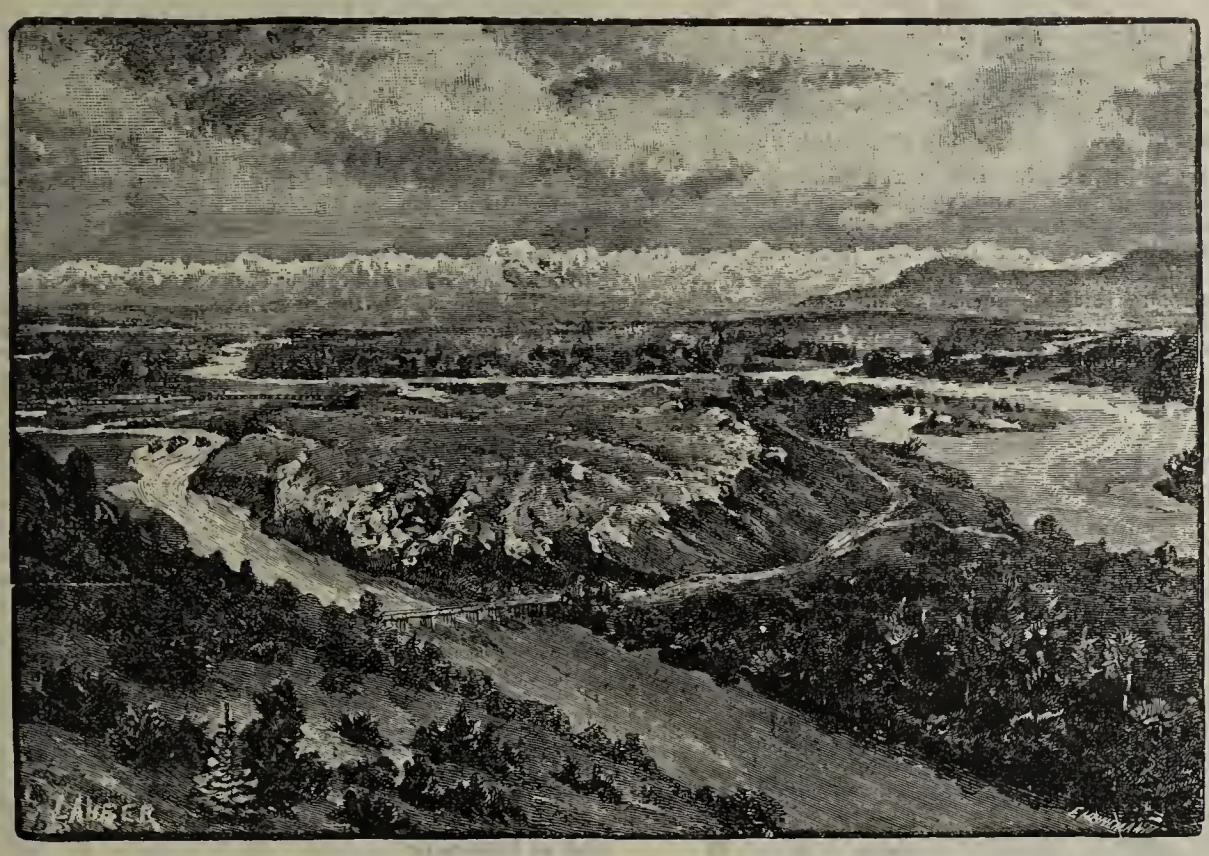
Under the guidance of the Indian woman, Capt. Clark and his men pressed eagerly on toward the gap in the mountains now known as Bozeman's Pass. As they approached the pass they fell into the buffalo road described by Sacajawea, which was a wide trail like a common road and led the party past the present site of the city of Bozeman and Fort Ellis. Capt. Clark speaks of the immense number of beavers he saw in all the streams here, and often his horses and men were mired as they floundered into a dam made by these industrious little animals.

On July 15, 1806, Capt. Clark and his party crossed the low dividing ridge which separates the waters of the Gallatin from those of the Yellowstone, and the commander was the first white man who ever trod the shores of that glorious river where it emerges from the Gate of the Mountains, or Lower Cañon, as it is now called.

"It now appeared," writes Capt. Clark, "that communication between the Gallatin and the Yellowstone was short and easy. From the head of the Missouri at its Three Forks to this place is a distance of forty-eight miles, the greatest part of which is through a level plain. The road is over a high, dry country, with hills of no difficulty in passing through."

When the Yellowstone was reached a scene of surpassing beauty was presented to the commander. About a mile away, to the south, he saw the lofty mountains divided by a deep chasm, and emerging from a region of unknown mystery there came leaping through it the waters of a swift-flowing river, glittering and blue like a stream of sapphires. The commander noted the beautiful color of the river in contrast with the transparent waters of the Gallatin and the Jefferson, but he little guessed that up beyond the cañons of the Yellowstone there were ten thousand thermal springs and hundreds of geysers pouring their mineral charged waters constantly into the current of the Yellowstone, and giving to the river a glitter and tinge like molten jewels. Above the river standing like a sentinel at the cañon was a rounded, cone-shaped mountain peak capped with snow. The river flowed through a level and fertile plain covered with wild roses and the honeysuckle, while along the stream cottonwood and aspen groves shaded its banks. Of a different type of beauty from that of the Gallatin Valley, the picturesque and striking character of the Upper Yellowstone made a deep impression on the mind of Capt. Clark, who felt its peculiar charm the more, perhaps, as he was the first white man who had ever gazed on the romantic scene.

Off toward the east he saw that irregular and splendid group of snowy peaks now called the Crazy [illegible] and near his first camp on the Yellowstone [illegible] into that river was a stream coming fro[illegible] which in honor of Private John Shields, [illegible] commander gave the name of Shields' [illegible]



ALONG THE PATH OF LEWIS AND CLARK TO THE UPPER YELLOWSTONE—THREE FORKS OF THE MISSOURI

It seems a pity that Capt. Clark did [illegible] Yellowstone and add to his renown by [illegible] covery of the wonders of the Yellowstone National Park. Yellowstone Lake, the great geysers, the mighty falls, the Grand Cañon, and the Mammoth Hot Springs should have been discovered first by Clark, and probably would have been if he had not feared that he would miss meeting the party of Capt. Lewis, below, at the mouth of the Yellowstone, if he attempted to explore the river to its sources.

It was reserved to Private John Colter of the expedition to be the first white man who should gaze on the wonders of this wonderland. Colter was discharged, at his own request, in August, 1806, when the united parties of Lewis and Clark on the return trip reached the Mandan villages where they had first wintered. He then returned to the life of a trapper, and had many perilous adventures among the Indians. In 1807 Colter traveled up the Yellowstone and discovered the geysers and Yellowstone Lake. On returning to St. Louis his descriptions of the wonderful sights seen by him in what is now known as the Yellowstone National Park were not believed at all. On many old maps the locality is marked "Colter's Hell," and the descriptions given by the ex-soldier and trapper of what he really saw were looked upon as downright lies, or the imaginings of a diseased brain. One man, however, believed Colter, and that man was his old commander, Capt. Clark.

On the map drawn by Capt. Clark in 1811 to show the route of the expedition, he has traced Colter's route in 1807, and has pretty accurately laid down the source and course of the upper Yellowstone, which Clark himself had failed to explore. Clark without doubt got his information from John Colter. On his map Clark has noted a large lake which he names Lake Eustis, after Hon. William Eustis, then Secretary of War. This lake is now known as Yellowstone Lake and is (as is well known) in the Yellowstone Park and forms the headwaters of the Yellowstone River.

Colter told of his journey, accompanied by the Sheep Eater Indians, amid great spouting fountains of hot water, until he reached the shores of a beautiful lake out of which flowed the Yellowstone River. He told of petrified trees, of cliffs of glass, mountains of white chalk and rivers of hot water, but his tales remained campfire jests for fifty years, until his accounts of the wonders of "Wonderland" were verified in 1868, '69 and '70 by various expeditions.

It is probable that white trappers visited the region of the Yellowstone Park after Colter, for the explorers of 1868 found on a huge pine tree near the Upper Falls these letters, cut into the bark: "J. O. R., Aug. 29, 1819." Col. P. W. Norris, the first superintendent of the park, tells of the ruins of an earth-roofed blockhouse, built by unknown white men, which once stood near Baronet's Bridge, near the confluence of the East Fork and the Yellowstone River, below the Grand Cañon, probably built by trappers as early as 1830. An ancient cache of beaver and other traps was also found, in 1870, near Obsidian Cliff and Beaver Lake. Capt. Clark was no doubt the first man to place Yellowstone Lake on the map. He named it Lake Eustis, as already mentioned, but on his map the lake is outlined merely from the general description given by John Colter.

The first map which gives to the lake anything like its true and peculiar form was one made by a hunter and trapper named Jedediah S. Smith, who hunted through that region somewhere between 1821 and 1830. It is supposed that Smith visited the lake because his map is in the main accurate. This map was purchased by the United States War Department, but the original has been lost, and only a copy is in existence. On Capt. Bonneville's map of 1837 the lake is not indicated at all.

"THE TEAR-RIER DOG"

Portsmouth, Va.

Editor American Field:—In these days of hammerless, choke-bored, hinge-muzzled, and other modern shotguns, it is natural to forget the flintlock of our fathers (no danger, though, of forgetting the "dollar of our daddies"), and, fearing old friends will ere long be entirely given up for the new, I have thought it would not be amiss to "jog the memory" by giving some lines from Bret Harte, wherein the old flintlock holds quite a prominent position; as I quote from memory I fear the original lines will suffer. I think they were entitled "The Wrong Tom Cat," and to lend force to the same I have made some original illustrations, and send same herewith.

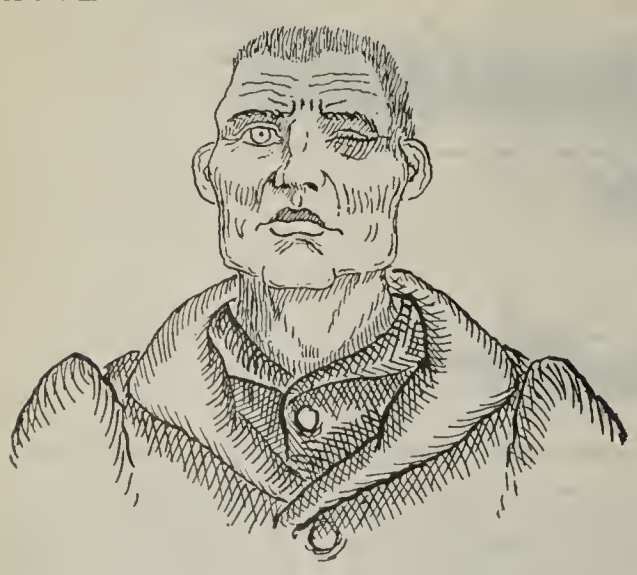
James F. Carr.

THE WRONG TOM CAT

A man he owned a tear-rier dog

A BOB TAIL UGLY CUSS

And this same dog got this same man in many a bloody muss;
For the man he was



ON HIS MUSCLE

and the dog he was on the bite,
And to kick that doggone animule was sure to raise a fight.
A woman she owned a Thomas cat, that fit at fifteen pound!
And the other cats would

[illegible] AND GIT

[illegible]me along one day, where the [illegible]dwell,
And the purp he growled ferociously, and went for the cat like —— well,
He tried to chaw the neck of that cat, but the cat he wouldn't be chawed,
And

HE LIT ON THE BACK OF THE TEAR-RIER DOG

and he bit, and he claw'd, and he gnaw'd.
The dog he growl'd, and snap'd, and howl'd, as the claws dug into his hide;
And great chunks of meat from his neck was torn, then the dog rolled over and died.
The man he cuss'd, and ripp'd, and swore, as he gathered a big brick-bat,
That he would be fired eternally, if he didn't kill that cat.
But the woman allowed she'd be bless'd if he did, as

SHE REACHED FOR THE FLINT-LOCK GUN

And pull'd and patterned his diaphragm with bird shot No. 1.

THEY CARRIED HIM HOME ON A WINDOW BLIND and the doctors fixed him up;

But he ne'er was known to fight again, or own another pup.
You may

I don't care a darn for that;
All I want to show is, that fighting dogs may tackle the wrong tom cat.

AMONG THE KENNELS—NO. 1

BY E. BARDOE ELLIOTT

Although, perhaps, not widely known to the fancy, Mr. Frank Anderson of Chicago has been an exhibitor at most Western shows for the past eight or nine years, and is a universal favorite with all who have the pleasure of his acquaintance. It is not, however, alone for his genial and kindly presence that he is to be appreciated, but still more so because he is one of the few that are in the fancy for the fancy's sake, and not for filthy lucre. He is always willing to give up his money and time in the interest of dogs, and is not a specialist but a lover of dogs—good ones—of any and all breeds.

He has owned first-class specimens of several varieties, but of recent years he has become prominent as the owner of the greyhounds Champions Master Rich and Miss Rare, the winner and runner-up respectively of the American Derby in 1885, and of prizes on the bench at the best shows too numerous to detail, of the sensational prize winning collie Toronto Wonder, and last, but not least, of the celebrated St. Bernard the late Champion Aristocrat.

As a breeder, too, he has been very successful considering the very few he has bred, the principal winners that he has the credit of breeding being the well-known Great Dane bitches Charmion, Minerva and others. Besides those already mentioned he has owned the Borzoi Philos IX that he sold for a high figure, after winning first with him at the Nashville show two years ago, the Great Dane bitch Cordova, the St. Bernards Casper and Knight, the latter the first dog he ever exhibited, and many other lesser lights of various breeds.

Strange to say Mr. Anderson has no kennels proper, but prefers to board all his dogs, with the exception of one or two favorites that he keeps at home, at prominent kennels near Chicago, but does not put all his eggs into one basket.

He owns the following dogs at the present time. The Great Danes Sandor, Flora A and Nora, the collie Toronto Wonder and two bitches, and a thoroughly broken Gordon setter dog to shoot over. I will now give a description of the most prominent of these:

Sandor. Breeders, Elsele and Stettler. Date of birth, June, 1892. By Sport (Schultz's Cæsar—Schultz's Daisy), out of Theckla (Hock's Cæsar—Flora II).

This is a nice brindled dog, a little on the small side, but a wonderfully well built one and a capital mover. His chief defects are that he is inclined to carry his tail badly, and he is a bit thick and short in head. He has won the following prizes last year: Second at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show last March; 1st at Denver and 1st at Pittsburg.

Flora A. Breeder, A. Schultz. Date of birth, January, 1889. By Imp. Cæsar (Cæsar—Judith), out of Daisy (Theras—Theina).

Flora is a good-bodied, blue bitch, with plenty of size and substance and good type and action, her greatest detriment being her white markings on legs and breast. She has the distinction of being the first bitch bred to Melac and in this litter she produced the winners Charmion and Minerva, a dog puppy that Mr. Anderson sold when eight weeks old for two hundred dollars, and several others of more or less note. She has the following wins to her credit: 1st at Rockford, 1889; 1st at Freeport 1892, and 2nd at Chicago, 1st at Denver and 1st at Des Moines, all last year, and only requires one more first to make her eligible for the challenge class.

Nora. This bitch Mr. Anderson has only recently imported from Stuttgart and I have not got the particulars of her breeding, etc, She is a fine upstanding bitch, a light golden brindle of correct type, clean cut head, good expression and nice quality. Being heavy in whelp to Melac and within a week of her time, it was impossible for me to criticise her too closely, but she is undoubtedly a bitch far above the average and is certain to produce something good to Melac as she is just the bitch to suit him, and it is to be hoped that Mr. Anderson will have good luck with the litter, for then I think he can with safety look forward to owning some more winners of his own breeding. The bitch's chief defects are that she has too much loose skin about her neck, she is wide in front, and her muzzle might, with advantage, be a trifle longer and blunter at the end. Mr. Anderson intends to show her as soon as she is in condition to do so.

This finishes the Danes, and now I come to the collie Toronto Wonder, an excellent portait of whom illustrates this article:

Toronto Wonder. Breeder, Jos. Laycock. Date of birth, September, 1890. By Metchley Wonder (Sefton—Minnie) out of Lady Fan (Caractacus—Lady Clewyd). This is the most sensational collie of the day. He was imported in utero and was exhibited once or twice at Toronto without catching the judge's eye, eventually being bought for a mere song by Mr. Henry Jarrett, of the Chestnut Hill Kennels, Philadelphia. Mr Jarrett first showed him at Brooklyn, under such an old collie man as Mr. Martin Dennis, and there won everything with him, beating such dogs as Champions The Squire, Metchley Surprise, Woodmansterne Trefoil, Conrad II, Ormskirk Susie and three others that Mr. Mortimer had recently imported; he was next shown at Chicago, where he again defeated all comers, and then at Baltimore under that acknowledged authority, Mr. James Watson, where he was again placed over Conrad II, but Woodmansterne Trefoil managed this time to turn the tables on him; he was then shown at Chicago, where he again won, and was then bought by the Chesterford Park Kennels, Maywood, Ill, who never showed him but sold him shortly after to his present owner, Mr. Anderson, for whom he has won several prizes including the special for the best collie dog or bitch owned in Chicago, at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show last March. He has had very limited opportunities at stud, but has nevertheless sired several winners, among them the winner in the open dog class and of all the specials at Boston last year.. He is a large, very handsome and showily marked, sable and white dog, with an enormous coat, mane and frill, and would undoubtedly be picked out by most people as the handsomest collie on the show benches to-day. Mr. Anderson has bred both his bitches —Whiff (31574) and Jeannie Dean (31572)—to him, and as they are both well-bred brood bitches, it is possible or rather probable that Mr. Anderson will soon be showing some collies of his own breeding, and I am sure all fanciers will join me in the hope that it will be with even greater success than he has had in the past.

BREEDING ENGLISH SETTERS

MASON, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—There seems to be a growing sentiment among English setter beeeders in favor of a change. They say that the time has come in the history of English setter breeding when it is necessary to introduce new blood; not an outcross, but pure English setter blood other than the half-and-half Lavarack and Duke—Rhœbe. It is claimed that those bred now are giddy, and a great many of them idiots. The cause of this is said to be too close inbreeding, and that it is impossible to breed on fashionable lines without this inbreeding. An examination of any of the late pedigrees will verify this latter proposition. Take for an instance the advice given by P. H. Bryson to breed daughters of Roderigo to sons of Gladstone's Boy; in the first place Roderigo and Gladstone's Boy are very near akin themselves; and then the best daughters of Roderigo are out of Gladstone bitches and the best sons of Gladstone's Boy are out of Count Noble bitches. You will readily see that this kind of breeding will still more intensify this inbreeding. I give this simply as an illustration; not that I disapprove of or approve of it, but it is unavoidable if we continue to breed in the most fashionable blood lines. And if the proposition is true that there are a great many idiots produced by the present system of breeding and that inbreeding is the cause of this, then manifestly it is time to call a halt.

But are these objections to the present system of breeding true? About ten years ago I was advised not to breed Gem, a daughter of Gladstone, to Gath, a grandson of the same dog. It was said that it was too close in breeding. My reply was that it was inbreeding to the best individual we had, viz., Gladstone. I have regretted since that I did not breed Gem to Gladstone after the death of Gath. I believe I would have struck it right. Gladstone was the result of a vigorous outcross and breeding him to his daughter would not have been such intense inbreeding as is frequently practised now. The consensus of opinion is against too close inbreeding; the public opinion is against it. Mr. Darwin, than whom there is no greater individual authority, declared against it. But I have noticed one thing in this connection, and that is that those who know the least about breeding are the first and easiest to become alarmed at inbreeding.

That a certain amount of inbreeding to fix the type of a breed is not only admissible but necessary, I believe few will deny; but where to stop at who can tell? It is claimed that a popular or general belief is the best evidence that the thing believed in is true—some go so far as to say that it is absolute proof—but this won't hold good. It was a general belief at one time that the earth we now live on was a flat surface, and it was once generally believed that the earth was stationary and the sun moved around it, but how many believe these now? It was once generally believed that the blood that circulates in our arteries and veins was stationary, but this did not make it any the less untrue. It was generally believed (and that not many years back) that the pulse of a person under the influence of chloroform was the best index as to the person's condition, but now they claim that the respiration is the only true index. I could go on and cite other instances to show that general or popular belief does not necessarily prove the truthfulness of a belief, but I trust the above is sufficient.

There is a school of biologists who claim that inbreeding has no deleterious effects, and can have none; they claim that the female is only the receptacle of the young—merely its home for the time of conception—and that the offspring is only a continuation of the sire, modified to some extent by its environment while in utero but of the same blood as its sire; but it seems to me that we have so many instances to disprove this that it is not tenable.

I believe that, whether we are inbreeding too much or not, the popular sentiment is that way and breeders are going to make a change. The danger is that the pendulum will swing too far the other way. We certainly have produced the greatest field trial dogs in the world, and "when you've got a good thing save it" is a good plan; but how to save it seems to be the question. I confess that I have never seen such bad effects from too close inbreeding, but I would not care to go on record against public belief, and especially against such authority as Mr. Darwin, though his opinion was given in a general way. Yet I can see no good reason why the English setter should be exempt from the laws of heredity more than other animals. My plan is to hold on with one hand to the best we have, and reach out with the other after the fresh infusion; then to try them in the same crucible and judge for myself which is the better.

I have seen it stated somewhere that a pigeon fancier in breeding to produce certain markings and characteristics bred his pigeons in and in until their eggs ceased to be fertile. Some of these pigeons were sent to a far-off country and there were surrounded by different environment, climatic influences, etc. After a good long time some of these exported pigeons were mated with some of the pigeons from the home loft, and their eggs proved to be as fertile as it was natural for them to be and the fancier attained his object, producing the markings and characteristics that he had failed to produce before the separation. This led me to believe that likely dogs would be affected the same way. I noticed when I kept Gath's Mark that bitches sent to him from Northern states had much heavier coats and their hair was more profuse than those from Southern states, doubtless caused by the different climatic influences; and if the coat is affected it is not unreasonable to suppose that the whole dog is changed more or less. Now if this is the right conclusion, should dogs which had been reared in our most southern climate be mated with those reared in our most northern climate of the same blood lines it is highly probable their progeny would be free from those weaknesses claimed to be produced by inbreeding when dogs are surrounded by the same influences.

I would like to touch up developed and undeveloped sires and dams, and also say something about the educational features of our field trial dogs, but I must desist.

THAT DOG DRUM

BY ELKIE

Have you ever heard of Drum? He was the most wonderful dog that ever wagged a tail (at least his owner wagged a pretty strong tale). Fortunately he did not belong to me, or his wonderful feats would have been chronicled ere this. But if you will have the patience or curiosity to follow me in this narrative, I will try, as nearly as possible, to give the owner's version of the wonderful performances of Drum.

"When I first got that dog he was a pup just gittin' his eyes open. He was a hound on his daddy's side, but his mother was a kind of a cross. His grand-daddy was a pure southeastern bloodhound; that's where he got his nose. I'll tell you he was good on the trail and never missed anything he got started on. He always knew the game you wanted by speakin' to him; so if we wanted coon, all I had to do was to go up to Drum and say, 'Drum, we want coon to-day.' That settled it, and if there was a coon within forty miles of us old Drum would find him sure.

"Well, I'll tell you what he did one day, so's you kin see what kind of a dog Drum was. There was a feller came to our house one Sunday and commenced singing me a song about losing his pocketbook. Well, he made me sick; and says I to him:

" 'You make me tired wid your bellyaching around here about that pocketbook. I'll get that pocketbook for you, if you'll only shut up.'

"Well, then I called Drum and made him smell the feller's pocket and told him, 'go fetch the pocketbook, Drum,' and he started down the road on a howl, and I says to the feller:

" 'Come in, and we'll play a game of seveu-up. By the time we'll play a couple o' games Drum'll be back wid that pocket-book.'

"So in we went and played seven-up, and I beat him every game 'cause he was a-thinking about whether the dog would find the pocketbook or not. All at once I heard a scratching at the door. I knowed right away what was the matter, so I jumped up and opened the door and in comes Drum and drops the pocketbook of his'n on the floor; it was chuck full of deeds, notes and paper money, and the dam cuss never said as much as 'here's a quarter,' let alone pat the dog on the head for what he done.

"That ain't the best he ever done neither. I'll tell you of the time Heine ——, that lives across Ramsey's Lake, lost his calf. Let's see, that was on Friday; and he kept thinking it would come back every day, so he never came for me and Drum till Tuesday. Well, I didn't think Drum could do much on a trail so old as that, but I thought I'd make him feel good, so I went along. Drum at first thought we was a-going on a fox-hunt, cause we took our ponies along. When we got over to Heine's he showed me where the calf had been tied. I I made Drum smell the rope and told him to find the calf, starting him from where the calf broke loose. Pretty soon after Drum gets his nose to the ground, he gives a howl, and I yelled to Heine to jump his pony, as he'd got the trail all right. I'll tell you, I was just tickled to see Drum take up that calf's trail, being it was so old. Well, we rode all day till just about dark, and all at once Drum stopped in a thicket 'way off the road, and I says:

" 'Heine in there he's got your calf.'

"Well, we took the calf to a farmer's about a mile from there. He didn't want us at first (he thought we was cowboys, we looked so tough), but when he found us out he said we could stay over night. Well, we rode home next day, and then we found out first how far away we was. Just think, forty miles from home! and Drum trailed every foot as fast as we could ride; and that, too, on a trail five days old. He's dead now, poor fellow."

A grander eulogy man never breathed o'er the grave of man or beast than the last tribute he paid Drum. When he said, "Drum was the best dog that walked" you could almost see tears in his eyes. He has told the stories so often, adding to each every time he told them, until he, too, poor fellow, believes them. Eli Perkins has at last been outdone.

If such is possible I would advise the owners of Cook, Goodman and July strains to breed to [illegible] Drum, although the pedigree of his dam [illegible] under a cloud.

DROPSY IN DOGS

The parasite filaria immitis is one of the most frequent if not the only, cause of dropsy in our southern climate Although my experience in canine practice is very limited, yet the eight cases of dropsy that have fallen into my hands have invariably evinced the same general symptoms and on post-mortem have revealed the same pathological changes.

Furthermore, the history of the disease, as gleaned from our local huntsmen, bears out the theory of its etiology advanced by Neumann, viz.: That it occurs most frequently in marshy countries, and that its intermediate host is concealed in the drinking water. For, of all dogs the hunter is the most common victim of this filaria, and the hunter is most exposed, by virtue of his habits, to the above conditions.

The following is a resume of eight cases:

SYMPTOMS.—These are most unsatisfactory unless ascites be present. There is usually a husky cough, accompanied by some distress of respiration. Appetite may remain good until nearly the end, no fever, pulse as unreliable as it generally is in dogs, and bowels reveal nothing. If there is any one symptom more pathognomonic than another, before dropsy manifests itself, it is the shortness of breath, with asthmatic paroxysms. There is usually a livid color of the tongue and visible mucous membranes after extreme exertion and occasionally a convulsion or asphyxiation.

PATHOLOGICAL ANATOMY.—The heart and larger blood vessels are the principal seat of disturbances. I have noticed these worms in both ventricles, both auricles, the aorta, the pulmonary artery and the lungs. The liver and spleen also show morbid changes. In one instance, both heart and lungs were pierced by these worms. In another case there was a cavity in the left lung about the size of a pecan nut containing a nest of filariæ. The spleen was studded around its entire edge with blackish lumps interspersed with one or two white ones. These nodules were about the size of a pea, homogeneous in structure, and contained what seemed to be embryos of the filariæ. The lungs have a peculiar ashen color; the liver is very dark and cirrhosed. There is more or less amber colored serum in both the thoracic and abdominal cavities.

How long it takes these worms to develop fatal symptoms depends on their number and location. Two cases lived more than a year after the dropsy appeared. One of these, a pug bitch, whelped in this condition, giving birth to two puny puppies, which lived but a few days. After decided symptoms develop, as dropsy and labored respiration, death generally ensues in about two weeks. Treatment is of course nil. Nitro-glycerine in 1-400 grain dose will relieve the paroxysms. — Arthur S. Wheeler, A B., V. M. D , Meat and Cattle Inspector for the New Orleans Board of Health, in the Veterinary Magazine.

HUNTING TO THE GUN

LOUISVILLE, KY.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—When a man like Mr. P. H. Bryson takes up a subject, it is good evidence that there is something in it, and his article in the last issue of the AMERICAN FIELD is of importance to all who are interested in field trial dogs.

There is no doubt but that in past years too much importance has been attached to useless range and speed and it has had the effect of producing a lot of dogs possessing more of the greyhound qualities than those which are useful in a bird dog.

The dog that uses his speed and range to the [illegible] vantage in finding game is the best dog, and a dog that starts off in a straight line and keeps going, regardless of the ground he is running over, and leaving field after field unhunted, is not a first-class bird dog, although he may possess the speed and range of a deerhound.

As Mr. Bryson truly states, our newspapers are largely to blame for the admiration excited by the dog which [illegible] and goes to the extreme limit of the county, [illegible] as he goes along. The best dog is the [illegible] the ground as he goes along, and [illegible] of cover, leaving no birds behind [illegible] he may have, as Mr. Bryson says, [illegible] of the eagle," but without the sense and pluck to hunt out the ground as he comes to it extreme range and reckless speed are worthless.

I say let the bird finder in future be placed in front where he belongs. WILKINS.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In reading the AMERICAN FIELD of December 29 I was very much pleased with what Mr. P. H. Bryson had to say in regard to hunting to the gun, and I for one am heartily in favor of it, and trust our field trial clubs will so alter their rules that unless a dog has speed, range, endurance, nose and is obedient (and hunts to the gun) he will have but little, if any, chance to win in any club's field trial. I am quite sure all true sportsmen and owners of high-class dogs will indorse Mr. Bryson to the echo.

Let us hear from other readers of your very valuable paper in regard to this most important matter.

AL. G. EBERHART,
Cincinnati. Superintendent.

THE Baltimore Gun Club seems to have been having some amateur field trials, which is not in itself anything marvelous; but it is extraordinary to learn that the trials were run "within the city limits," when for the last few years the public has been gradually taught to believe that a medium sized county is hardly big enough for the high-class field trial winner. The Baltimore News has this to say about the trials: "A special permit was granted the members of the Baltimore Gun Club by Mayor Latrobe to hold their first field trials yesterday at the country-place of Mr. John S. Gittings, on the Liberty Road, which is within the city limits. The trials were not particularly successful, as the dogs showed up in comparatively poor form. Three dozen partridges were used in the trials, and most of them were finally shot. The results follow: All-Age Class—G. Coe's setter, Joe C, first; J. P. Malone's setter, Bell, second; E. Peters' setter, Dash, third; G. Coe's setter, Lit, fourth; H. T. Beck's pointer, Bess, fifth; J. W. Linthicum's setter, Floss, sixth; L. R. Tugwell's setter, Joe T, seventh. Puppy Class—J. McGuire's setter, Roger, first; W. Blogg's pointer, Mars, second; W. Blogg's setter, Lady Marlow, third; W. W. Linthicum's setter, Rock, fourth; J. McGuire's setter, Lady, fifth. Messrs. E. C. Hail and James F. Busey were the judges in the contests. The trials were managed by Mr. J. B. Malone." What is meant by "three dozen partridges were used," etc.? Can it be possible that the members of the Baltimore Gun Club went out to the suburbs, turned down three dozen partridges, and proceeded to run field trials on vacant lots and among the signboards of real estate dealers?

I WAS very much interested in Mr. J. Bascom's letter, "Training Intractable Puppies," which appeared in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 22, and particularly so in his reference to the manner in which Mr. Robbins cares for the dogs which are sent to him to receive their education. I had the pleasure of inspecting Mr. Robbins' kennels only a few months ago, and that, too, in the absence of the proprietor. I found the kennels and their inmates in first-class condition. The dogs looked healthy and as if they were conditioned by work and not by drugs; the kennels and their surroundings appeared to be as neat as, and I think neater than, some dwellings, so-called. I have no interest whatever in Mr. Robbins or his welfare other than to indorse a good testimony which he receives, and which I am satisfied he justly deserves. The pointer Jack, which Mr. Bascom makes reference to as "well put up and showed speed and endurance" and of which he did not make note of the breeding, is a puppy which I sold to Mr. Chas. Purinton of this city; he is by my King of Lynn (Tempest—Nadjy of Naso) out of Dorrity Ann (Duke of Beaufort—Mamzelle), and judging from what I can learn of him he is a good dog in the field. Mr. Purinton is perfectly satisfied with Mr. Robbins as a trainer and very much pleased with Jack and the very favorable manner in which he has shown up. A word about Oxford. It contains more sportsmen and hunters to the square mile than any other township I ever visited of its size, and I have stayed overnight in not a few in New England.

Lynn, Mass. ROBERT LESLIE.

I WAS unexpectedly called home from Indiana, but I hope to be able to return to Mississippi in time to attend the coming field trials. Through the kindness of Mr. Titus we have secured a location at Vinton, Clay County, Miss., that is perfect for training purposes, and G. W. Richards is now there with some of our dogs in training. On my way home I had the pleasure of a short call at the Brookfield Kennels, where I left Lady Peg II (placed in the pointer stakes at the late Bicknell trials) in care of her raiser and trainer, Thomas Richards, who now has charge of the Brookfield Kennels, which are owned by the well-known good shot Richard Merrill. The kennels are located on the Merrill farm, half a mile from the village of Brookfield; the location is a perfect one, and the kennel buildings and yards are all that could be wanted for a perfect home for the many fine dogs he now has on hand. The box stall formerly occupied by our peerless Paul Bo is now occupied by his sire Paul Gladstone, who seemed to be in excellent form. Mr. Merrill has recently added to his pointers Daisy (Rip Rap—Lady Peg), a litter sister to Lady Peg II, and a dog puppy by Strideaway—Hops II; both are very promising. In both setters and pointers he has the best blood that can be obtained in America, and with an experienced manager and trainer his undertaking of developing winners will no doubt prove successful.

Stewart, Minn. FRANK RICHARDS.

LOVERS of art will have an opportunity, once in a lifetime, of buying at a public sale the works of the late Jno. M. Tracy, and as his fame in animal and other portraiture is so well known to our readers it is superfluous to make special mention of it. As much of his work was intended for his own use there was nothing left undone to perfect it. Between one hundred and fifty and two hundred pictures will be offered for sale without reserve, full particulars of which will appear soon. Over three thousand dollars will be expended in framing the pictures. The list, which will be ready about February 1, will show that it comprises a large number of dogs famous on the bench and in the field, among them such dogs as Gladstone, Peep o' Day, Gloster, Roger, Prince Lucifer, Rockingham, Dashing Novice, Count Noble, dogs of the Blue Ridge Kennels, and others as well known. Other breeds, as well as setters and pointers, are represented in this large collection. The large picture (4x6), "Barnum retrieving a Goose," as well as his famous "horse picture," one of his last productions, entitled "Candidates for the Horse Show" (4x11), will be offered. Parties who cannot be present can, no doubt, be represented by friends living in New York, and in this way procure what is wanted from the most valuable collection ever offered of this kind.

MR. ARTHUR FROEMBLING of Chicago, who has occasionably exhibited a dachshund or two at western shows, has recently imported from the kennels of Mr. R. Benda of Biesenthal, near Berlin, a good young dog named Reinecke's Pick, by Tiger Reinecke (382 Teckel Club's Stud Book) out of Mucke Reinecke. Tiger Reinecke is a well-known sire in Germany, and Mucke Reinecke is by Hundesport Seppel—Hundesport Hannl. Reinecke's Pick was shown at Erfoot, Germany, last Summer, when eighteen months old, and won a first, a second, and a third prize in different classes. Mr. Froembling calls him "a black and tan of tiger blood." Mr. R. Benda, Pick's breeder, is president of the Teckel Club and one of Germany's foremost dachshund breeders. Last Summer Mr. Froembling visited Germany and he brought back with him two bitches from Mr. Benda's kennel. One of these is Kutschka II Reinecke (985 Teckel Club's Stud Book), by Cœur Koenig von Waldmannsruh (580) out of Kutschka Reinecke; and the other is Demuth Reinecke (1203), by Hundesport Waldman Vater (37) out of Altremplin Reinecke (98). Mr. Froembling's three importations will be exhibited at the Mascoutah Club's show two months hence, when he expects them to give a good account of themselves.

THE Duquesne Kennel Club is showing signs of activity, judging from a marked copy of the Pittsburg Dispatch, which a correspondent in that city sends us. It is dated December 19 (and so might well have reached us in time for last week's issue) and contains the following account of an interview with an officer of the club: "President Boggs, of the Duquesne Kennel Club, stated yesterday that a first-class dog show will be held in this city early next Spring if the Grand Central Rink can be secured. This ends all conjecture on the matter as far as the club is concerned. A meeting was held by the club a few days ago to discuss the matter, and it was the unanimous opinion of the members that a show should be held as early next year as possible. A definite answer regarding the rink will be had in a few days, and if the answer is favorable the work of making arrangements for the show will be commenced. President Boggs said: 'We want to hold a show, but we want to hold a good one, and we think the rink is the most suitable place for a successful show. The number of dog fanciers in and about Pittsburg is increasing every year, and the next show we hold will be the best that has ever been held in Pittsburg.'"

RECENTLY, in New York, a dog's faithfulness and mute eloquence took care of his master and finally got him released. A policeman found a man lying in the gutter attended by a faithful brute, which would not let him come near his master. Finally the man was awakened with a pole and the dog offered no resistance. At the station the dog would not be separated and occupied the cell with his master. When arraigned before a justice the man said he was a backsilder, but had a good dog which he said he was training. The judge replied: "Yes, making the dog earn your living by his tricks, I suppose." The man replied: "Why, he understands everything now, judge, and knows I am in trouble; just look at him." The dog raised himself on his hindfeet, seemingly without his master's command, and was begging and whining in a pitiful way. The judge laughed and said: "I guess a heart of stone could not resist that pleading and I will discharge you on his account. He is is a standing lesson to you," added the justice, "for he stays sober." The dog yelped for joy and the two went out.

MR. H. HULMAN JR., whose acquisition of Colonel O'Bannon's interest in the Blue Ridge Kennel we mentioned two weeks ago, this week offers a long list of bargains in English setters; among them is the famous brood bitch Ruby's Girl II, the dam of such celebrities as Count Gladstone IV, Eugene T and Ollie T (all by Count Noble), Aliene (by Gath's Mark), Lady Mildred (by Antonio), etc. Ruby's Girl is only seven years old and in good condition. Such well-known names as Bessie Shoupe, Nellie Fox, Genevieve, Tom Beggs, Blue Ridge Gath, etc., may be found in the list of field trial dogs advertised in this sale; and attention is directed to the stipulation that dogs and bitches entered in the approaching trials must be run by Mr. Huiman, that he may fulfill his contract with his trainer, D. E. Rose. Antonio and Gath's Mark, the famous stud dogs, are not priced in the list, but are for sale. Mr. Huiman informs us that he has already sold Tony's Boy to Mr. Norvin T. Harris, Aliene to Mr. J. I. Case, Lady Mildred to Mr. Hobart Ames, of North Easton, Mass., and Blue Ridge Mark to Colonel O'Bannon. Fanny M he has sold also, but purchaser's name is not given,

THOS. H. WEBB of Peoria, Ill., is having hard luck in making people believe that his bulldogs are worthy of as much care as his family. Last week we mentioned how he was burned out of house and home. Through force of circumstances he took his family to a hotel, not forgetting his two highly prized bulldogs, Rowdy Ruffian and Webb's Monarch. As Mr. Webb thinks as much of these two dogs as he does of himself he had no end of trouble in finding a hotel that would allow them in his rooms, and as it was a case or "all in" or "all out" Mr. Webb remained out. But being a man of quick decision he ordered his barn renovated, furnished and heated, and the next day ensconced his family, his dogs and himself therein, and there he will remain until his $10,000 residence is rebuilt on the old plan and on the old site

Much is and has been said of a dog's devotion to his master; could more be said of a master's devotion to his dogs?

THE Steamship Grace, from London, a few weeks ago brought over the English setter bitch, Phœbe Windem, consigned by Mr. Llewellyn to Mr. L. H. Smith of Strathroy, Ont. Phœbe Windem was second in the puppy stake at the Shrewsbury field trials last Spring and first at Bala, Wales, on grouse in August. She is a black and blue belton in color and of fine form and will make a winner on the bench. Mr. Smith had her bred on December 23 and 25 to Mr. R. Bangham's Dash Antonio, fourth in the Manitoba Derby and first in the International Derby last Fall. Dash Antonio is by Antonio (Roderigo—Bopeep) out of Lady Lucifer (Prince Lucifer—Annie Gladstone II), so if breeding and quality amount to anything Mr. Smith may expect something good, should he have luck in raising a litter. Mr. Smith was one of the first to import from Mr. Llewellin's kennel.

Chatham, Ont. J. J. S.

REFERRING to the paragraph in your issue of December 22 relative to intending Gordon setter exhibitors at the Chicago show, I fear you forgot to mention the well-known names of Mr. Louis Meister of the Jackson Kennels, Jackson, Mich., and Mr. A. J. C. Smith of the Mohawk Gordon Setter Kennels at Tiffin, O. Both these gentlemen assure the writer that they intend bringing along some "cracks" and insinuate that they intend to carry some of the honors home with them. From present indications there will be no lack of competition in the Gordon setter classes. One of our modern writers, in his treatise upon setters, says, "the Gordon is a fading landmark in the march of time." Do you believe it? Will Gordon setter fanciers not, by the quality and numbers of their entries at this coming show, repudiate such an assertion?

Chicago Lawn, Ill. W. H. WORTH.

MR. W. H. WORTH, owner of the Lawn Kennel of Gordon setters, had a bit of bad luck just before Christmas, his stud dog, Reginald H, dying from acute rheumatism on December 21. Reginald H was bred by Mr. James Smith of Greenville, R. I., eight years ago, and was by Leatherstockings out of Rhoda, by Shot (Grouse—Gipsy) out of Judy (Reed's Flash—Chloe); Leatherstockings, by Tom (Stockton's Dash—White's Fly) out of Cremorne (Grouse—Gray's Pansy). He was purchased by Mr. C. C. Hendee of Milwaukee, Wis., and was by him exhibited in the West, with the following results: In 1890, 2nd at Cincinnati; in 1891, 2nd at Chicago; in 1892, second at Chicago. He was then purchased by Mr. Worth, who has bred several litters sired by him.

IN another column we publish the names of the judges who will officiate at the nineteenth annual dog show of the Westminster Kennel Club, which will be held in Madison Square Garden, New York, February 19, 20, 21 and 22. The club is fortunate in having the acceptances of so good and such popular judges—a better list would be hard to select—a fact which exhibitors will not be slow to appreciate. Mr. James Taylor, of Manchester, Eng., is a journalist, being connected with the Stockkeeper, whose presence among us will be a pleasant surprise, as his views will be entirely new and his decisions watched with interest, as were those of Mr. Geo. Raper. All the other judges are Americans and without doubt will give general satisfaction.

ONE evening during the Birmingham show four of Great Britain's most prominent fanciers were gathered together in the dining room of the Grand Hotel enjoying a pleasant chat and a good meal; they were Mr. Panmure Gordon, president of the Scottish Kennel Club, Mr. F. Redmond, a famous fox terrier breeder and exhibitor, Mr. James Taylor, and Mr. George R. Krehl, editor of The Stock-Keeper. They talked of vintages, foreign travel, art and dogs. "And after the Venus of Milo, what is your ideal of beauty?" asked the president of the Scottish Kennel Club. "A good foxhound!" exclaimed Mr. Redmond. "Never!" cried Messrs. Taylor and Krehl; "it's a greyhound!" We will "shake" on that.

A PLUMP envelope from Attica, Ind., when opened disclosed what looked like a package of Christmas cards joined together by red silk ribbons. Upon unfolding it the first card was found to bear the inscription: "Our breeding stock for 1895, King Don Pointer Kennel;" the four next proved to be photographs of the pointers Leache's Belle II, Pride of King Don, Naso's Fancy and Naso of Axtel; and the sixth and last one revealed a likeness of Mr. W. A. Thompson himself, looking just as when we last saw him at the American Field Trial Club's trials at Columbus, Ind., where the first two of his pointers just named won respectively the Pointer Puppy Stakes and the Pointer Derby.

THE SPORTSMAN, an English cotemporary, recently contained an interesting contribution bearing on statistics as to the share dogs take in contributing to the circulation of an enormous amount of money in sport. After referring to the millions spent one way or another over foxhunting, shooting is dealt with and it is shown that the taxation on dogs used for work on the moors must produce about $1,200,000 per annum, while their feeding, which is figured at eighteen cents a week each, must cost over six millions of dollars every year. These amounts, which have been carefully worked out from authentic sources, at a first glance seem almost fabulous.

THE Canadian Pointer Kennels, of Forest, Ont., have sold the pointer bitch Marguerite Kent, by King of Kent—Marguerite II, by Mainspring—Marguerite, by Robert Le Diable—Belle Faust, to Mr. Geo. J. Gould of New York; she ran into the second series of the International Cup at Mitchell's Bay, in November, and but for lack of work on game before the trials might have gone further. Ed. Warner, Mr. Gould's kennel manager, was pleased with the bitch, made a bid for her, and succeeded in getting what he considers a valuable addition to his already fine string of pointers.

BOSTON is an important terrier stronghold, as the specialty show held there in November might indicate, and it is said that owners have suddenly found a new sphere of usefulness for their pets. The country around Boston contains quantities of muskrats, and great sport is to be had with them. The muskrat is as much, or more, at home in water as on land, and should it be discovered that hunting the animal affords good sport we suppose we shall hear some day that an enterprising breeder has introduced a sort of pocket edition of the otter hound.

THROUGH an advertisement in the AMERICAN FIELD I purchased from Mr. Henry Jarrett, of the Chestnut Hill Kennels, a collie dog on October 13 last. On October 30 the dog died. I informed Mr. Jarrett, who soon afterward shipped me a better dog than the one I had bought. I have never yet seen Mr. Jarrett, and it occurs to me that such exceedingly fair treatment should not go without comment; and I would add that if all your advertisers act as fairly by their customers as Mr. Jarrett has to me you are to be congratulated upon your clientele.

Washington, D. C. G. W. BENNETT.

ALLOW me to thank you, sir, for your kindness; also those noble sportsmen that so gallantly responded to my note in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 22 regarding Harry Held's death. I take this course to inform those gentlemen who expect letters from me in regards the Irish setter Biddy, which I spoke of. Doctor Cotton has sold her for fifty dollars to Mr. Kelly of our city. It was very kind of the Doctor to keep Biddy in his office until sold. Again thanking the AMERICAN FIELD.

St. Louis, Mo. J. WHITAKER, M. D.

FROM our English cotemporary, the Stock-Keeper, we learn of a sensational deal in wirehaired fox terrier circles over on the other side. Mr. J. Rhodes, of Manchester, has sold a puppy named Limefield Roper (a winner at Glossop and Radcliffe) to Mr. J. H. Kelly, of Wathou-Dearne, near Rotherham, and the sum given for this son of Roper's Nutcrack is said to be $600, which is by all odds the biggest price yet paid for an eight-months-old wirehaired puppy.

AT the next monthly meeting of the Montreal Kennel Association, which is to be held on Thursday of this week, the program will include a volunteer exhibition of puppies; also specimens of fox terriers and St. Bernards, which breeds are to be the subjects of the papers read by Mr. James Lindsay and Mr. J. A. Pitt, will be put forward for criticism. The advisability of holding a local dog show will also be considered.

OUR English exchanges tell of the death of Jenny Jones, a wonderfully successful show greyhound, she having won over a hundred first prizes, specials and cups on the bench of late years. Earlier in her career, however, she was engaged in a nobler work and on several occasions performed very creditably on the coursing field, her greatest achievement being to win her way into the last four in the Waterloo Cup of 1887.

MR. J. HOPE of Philadelphia writes: "I have removed to larger quarters. I have a store seventy-five feet deep, with a kennel 65 feet deep; and I have the largest bird and pet and fur-bearing animal store in the city of Philadelphia." Mr. Hope is a steady advertiser in our business columns; his new address is 29 North Ninth Street.

FRIDAY night of last week the St. Louis Kennel Club met and decided to incorporate under the laws of Missouri with a capital stock of $3,000, divided into shares of $10 each. We hope to hear soon that all the shares have been subscribed for and that a first-class dog show will be held between now and Summer.

IT is a curious coincidence that the attendance at the recent Birmingham (England) show was exactly the same this year as last. Upon each occasion the visitors numbered 6058, which, at five shillings a head, would turn about $7,500 into the coffers of the show.

MR. G. W. PRICE, who is offering for sale a draft of fox terriers from an English kennel, writes us that he has already sold the stud dog Belmont Democrat (Despoiler—Belmont Softly), Mr. Chas. F. Frenzer of Omaha being the purchaser.

THE Pacific Coast Fox Terrier Club met December 15, when the attendance of members was good. The Secretary, Mr. Joseph McLatchie, resigned, and Mr. J. B. Martin was elected to serve until the annual election of officers.

DIXIE COURSING CLUB'S INAUGURAL MEETING

(Special Report.)

The first meeting of the Dixie Coursing Club, which was to have taken place last Thanksgiving Day but was postponed on account of a heavy rainstorm overtaking the party, took place at Brookshire, Texas, December 23.

The day opened bright, but a trifle too warm, the grounds were in excellent condition, and everything promised a good day's sport.

Owing to accidents to some dogs, and some leashmen missing connection with trains, there were only five greyhounds on the grounds.

The preliminaries over, and the grounds reached, the first brace was placed in the slips to battle for the purse and silver trophy donated by the club.

BLACK JOE—QUEEN.—A long slip, Joe leading to the hare and making the turn, allowing Queen to show her mettle. Joe racing past, making wrench, and maintaining lead to a turn. Queen getting in was piling up the points, when in wrenching she hurt her foreleg; this gave Joe an opportunity, and he shortly added to his score. The hare escaping to covert ended the course with Joe the winner. The pace was a killing one from start to finish, showing the strength of the hare and breeding of the dogs.

MORNINGTON—VAN'S O'RELL.—The first hare getting up proved to be weak and soon ran to earth, with honors even and the judge deciding "no-course." Given time allowance, the dogs were again placed in slips; a hare being sighted which proved to be a corker. Van's O'Rell gave Mornington a go-by on the outer circle, turning to Mornington, who showed he combined close work and speed. Van's O'Rell, in fine condition, made it very interesting for Mornington. For a short distance it was give and take, slightly favoring Mornington, who, at this point, forged ahead and maintained a lead, making points upon points for some distance before giving Van an innings; the hare escaping through a fence, with Mornington a few lengths in the lead. The score up to this point favored Mornington. When the hounds were recovered, Mornington had possession of the hare, but the kill, being out of sight of the judge, was not allowed.

DUKE, a bye (with Queen).—A hare being sighted, both got away in good style. This being the first hare Duke ever saw, and having received no training whatever, he left the work mostly to Queen.

SECOND SERIES

BLACK JOE, a bye (with Nancy).—A hare soon started, Nancy leading and making the turn and holding the lead, showing the winner of the Goodland Stakes in 1893 still possessed the same great dash and cleverness that have distinguished her on many fields.

MORNINGTON—DUKE.—Mornington becoming unsighted ran very wide, Duke following closely was doing brilliant work, showing he will be a good one if properly handled. Mornington recovering came racing past, never giving Duke another opening, and at last killing with great dash and gaining the decision.

FINAL COURSE

BLACK JOE—MORNINGTON.—The final was watched with great interest. As the two brothers, combining the best blood of England and having the spirit of their several ancestors, came straining in the slips they were the subject of unbounded admiration, and the one expressed opinion was that there would be a struggle for supremacy never witnessed before in Texas coursing circles. Unfortunately, however, a hare started in a manner compelling a difficult cross slip, leaving Mornington slightly behind. The hare favoring Mornington, he turned, allowing Joe in, who had things his own way for a short time, making a turn to Mornington, who rushed in and killed with great skill, losing the race by half a point.

SUMMARY

W. J. Erwin's bk d Black Joe, by imp. Lord Neversettle—imp. White Lips,	beat	Mr. Clayton's r b Queen, by Van's O'Rell.
M. McDonald's bk w d Mornington, by Lord Neversettle—White Lips,	beat	Geo. B Cooper's r w d Van's O'Rell, by imp. Norwegian—imp. Carmine.

II

Black Joe, a bye.	Mornington beat Duke.

FINAL COURSE

Black Joe beat Mornington, and won.

Mr. C. L. Witherspoon of Corsicana was in the saddle, and his decisions were just and prompt and gave satisfaction to everyone. Mr. Harold Elderkin acted as slipper and attended to the duties in an admirable manner. The club is to be congratulated on securing two such gentlemen, ardent admirers of the sport and who will always preserve coursing in its natural purity.

Mr. W. J. Erwin of Honey Grove, who carried off the trophy, is a gentleman leashman of the right sort, and the club rejoices to know that it could not be in better hands or have been won by one who would appreciate its emblematic value greater.

COMBINATIONS FOR GUARDING.

DENVER, COLO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—During the past season at various "combinations," or me think that the different Patrick Kennel, the Eastern Coursing Kennel, the Columbus Kennel, the Sun Flower Kennel and Van Hummell & Le Moyne's kennel, were established for the sole purpose of "guarding" dogs. So that no such motive in the future can be attributed to the proprietors of the St. Patrick Kennel, we have dissolved our partnership and each of us will run our dogs next year as individuals. In our dissolution we made the following disposition of the St. Patrick Kennel's dogs:

To Chas. Barrow—Beau Brummell, Irish Lass, Bonfire (a Boomerang—Pearl of Peking sapling), Betsy Blue, one Boomerang—Irish Lass sapling and one Babazoun—Princess Marie sapling.

To T. W. Bartels—Boomerang, Pearl of Pekin and litter, five Pearl of Pekin saplings, by Boomerang, three Boomerang—Irish Lass saplings, and two Bomerang—Buenretiro saplings.

To L. F. Bartels—Border Ruffian, Blister, Billy for Short, Olicana, Boss o' the Shanty, Brother Jonathan, Monk Bishop, and two Boomerang—Venus saplings.

I have sold Brother Jonathan to Dr. J. H. Gower, of Denver; and have sold Monk Bishop to Chas. Robinson of St. Louis, for some cash and Willy Nilly (imp. Burnaby—imp. Drytime).

STUD BOOK FUNDS

LEXINGTON, KY.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I note your remarks in regard to raising funds for the American Coursing Board. As to the stud book, I have prepared a circular letter that will shortly be mailed to coursing men at large, setting forth the urgent necessity of issuing the first volume at once and asking their coöperation by subscriptions, advertisements and registrations. I feel sure they will respond liberally, and you can safely announce that it will be issued in the near future.

Messrs. Bartels, with their usual liberality, have notified me that they will share the responsibility with me, and if necessary assume it altogether. The latter, of course, cannot be allowed.

ROGER D. WILLIAMS,
Keeper Stud Book A. C. B.

NOTES

WHILE congratulating the Dixie Coursing Club on its beginning—the fact that it was a very small one cuts no figure—we are bound to call the members' attention to the erroneous arrangement of the running in the second series, whereby the bottom dog on the card was deprived of his natural bye; thus duplicating the error made at Merced in November. Some sentences in the rules of coursing are perhaps not as explicit as they might be, but "a natural bye shall be given to the lowest available dog in each round; no dog shall run a second such bye in any stake, unless it is unavoidable," is such very plain English that it is astonishing how slip stewards and others can go astray. The funniest part of the Dixie Club's error is that the top dog on the card was given the bye which Duke, the bottom dog, was entitled to, and which would, of course, have taken Duke into the final course. Also we hope we may suggest, without being considered hypercritical, that when greyhounds are in slips for the final course of a stake and a hare starts "in a manner compelling a difficult cross slip" the best thing for the slipper (especially if he has not had long experience) to do is to let that hare go and wait for one that he can get well behind.

WITH the closing sentence of Mr. Williams' letter we fully agree, and desire to add a rider to the effect that the Coursing Board must not even allow the stud book to be, in the language of the race track, "staked" by the Messrs. Bartels and Mr. Williams jointly, though everyone will appreciate their readiness to do so. We believe it would redound more to the board's credit to raise, in some such manner as we suggested last week, a sum sufficient to cover all the expense of issuing the first volume; all moneys received by registrations, advertisements and sale of the edition could then be carried forward by the board as a fund, to be known as the stud book fund, wherewith to defray expenses of publishing the second volume. By so doing the board would always have money on hand for the publication of its stud book. We believe it would be far easier for the board to raise a fund at the outset than if it should wait until it finds itself in debt and then cry for financial aid; when a club, board or committee gets into debt its popularity is apt to wane and its standing is injured.

MR. WALTER J. G. MASSEY, a brother of Arthur Massey, who used to slip at the American Coursing Club's meetings, dropped in last Saturday to make some inquiries about the conditions of the American Waterloo Cup; he has a couple of May saplings by imp. Glenkirk out of Lady Dell Glendyne (imp. Trales—imp. Lady Graham Glendyne) that he thinks a lot of, and he contemplates filling a nomination with one of them. Their dam has been bred to imp. Jim o' the Hill, and Mr. Massey says she is due to whelp on Thursday of this week, January 3. Pretty close shave, that.

WE have been promised something unusually interesting for our readers next week, in the shape of an announcement from the executive committee of the Altcar Coursing Club of the conditions, etc., of the club's produce stake to be run next October. Time has not been spared to frame conditions that will catch the eye and suit the pocket, and we firmly believe that this innovation will prove extremely popular.

MR. H. SCOTT-DURBIN, of Hawarden, Ia., dropped in for a pleasant chat on Thursday of last week, and we were somewhat surprised to learn that he was on his way to England. Only for a visit though; we were glad to hear that, for coursing can't afford to have its supporters emigrating. Mr. Scott-Durbin expects to spend a couple of months in England, and to attend the important coursing meetings, including, of course, the Waterloo Cup.

RIFLES FOR BIG GAME

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I am tempted by reading an article headed "Rifles for Big Game," by W. A. Irwin, in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 8, to give some of my own experience with the .45-90-300 Winchester. For accuracy, penetration and carrying qualities, I find it hard to beat; but for big game shooting there is one feature that is more important than all the others combined. For want of a better name I shall call it "shocking power." Especially is this necessary in hunting an animal so savage and tenacious of life as the grizzly bear. Few old hunters are able to put a shot through the heart or brain of a charging bear with enough certainty to make an accident policy a useless investment. Much less so is the novice who, no matter how good a target shot, is liable to become flurried and forget for the time being that the bear's heart is not located on the tip of its tail.

I have owned my .45-90 only a little more than a year, but into that time has been crowded a great deal of actual experience. This is, to my notion, the best test of a sporting rifle. On my first trip with it I shot a doe that was standing in a little quaking asp grove about eighty yards away. She was facing me, and by reason of the unevenness of the ground her shoulders were considerably lower than her rump. I aimed to break her neck, but the ball only grazed the bones and entered the back just behind the shoulder blades, passing out through one of the hams. An instantly fatal shot I should have thought, but the time I had finding her set me to thinking that had she been either a lion or bear, and had come toward instead of going from me, I might have had a chance to display my sprinting abilities.

Another time I shot a deer through one shoulder and the brisket. Should have knocked her down at least, but instead she scrambled off on three legs, with the fourth dangling by her side. On the same trip I put a ball through the under part of the neck of a fine doe. I trailed her about a mile and then gave her up; but returned in the afternoon and found her, she having bled to death through the hole that was entirely too neat and round. The next day I killed a magnificent buck. Put two shots into him from behind as he ran directly from me. He then turned and ran toward me. In turning I put a bullet clear through his side. He stopped and swayed to and fro, as if he might fall; but to make sure I shot him in the side of the head. The post mortem examination disclosed four shots, any one of which should have been fatal.

THE 500-GRAIN BULLET

This Fall, while on a business trip to our cattle ranch, the foreman told me where he thought I would find a bunch of mountain sheep. The first half-day I failed to find anything better than fresh signs; but the next morning, in less than a hour from leaving the ranch, I ran onto them and opened fire on the only buck in the bunch at about one hundred yards. I emptied my gun at him and finally, in desperation, risked a shot at his neck which brought him down in a hurry. The majority of these shots passed through his body, the least effective one cutting off a front foot. My idol, slightly cracked before, was now shattered. A few days later I jumped a silver tip bear and got in one shot as he disappeared over a ridge. At the time I was disappointed to think I had missed him, but since thinking it over I believe it is just as well that I did.

Now to sum up. My opinion, derived from experience, is that in the .45-90 gun there is too little lead for the powder. Others may reach different conclusions and are certainly entitled to their own deductions. The Winchester people make a special cartridge for this gun, viz.: .45-82-405, which I think far superior when dangerous game is to be hunted.

I have had made a special mold that will cast a five hundred grain bullet, which is slightly greater in diameter than the factory ammunition. Of course all added to the bullet decreases the space for powder, but there is still space enough left for a good proportion of the latter. I inclose one of these bullets in the hope that the AMERICAN FIELD can reproduce it on paper, thus showing the great number of grooves which give it additional bearing on the rifles, thus insuring accuracy.

NOTES

No rifle cartridge ever worked into the good graces of the small bore cranks as rapidly as the .25-caliber. It has been popular from the very first, and its popularity is steadily on the increase. The original cartridge is the .25-20-86, same as now made by the factories. The 86-grain bullet was thought to be too heavy on account of keyholing, so the Ideal Manufacturing Co. worked out a series of bullets varying in weights from 46 to 96 grains. The 77 grain became very popular immediately. The cranks, however, desired to use the heavier bullets. This led to barrels being cut with a quicker twist, running down from one turn in eighteen inches to one turn in eight inches, as per Mr. Pope of Hartford, Conn., and Mr. Lowe of Fitchburg, Mass., who are making special barrels. This, of course, required more powder and greater velocity, so these gentlemen have reduced the well-known .32 40 Marlin shells at the muzzle so as to be correct for the .25-caliber bullets. Great work is being done with these arms, as may be noticed from time to time in the leading sporting journals. The Ideal Co. is kept busy administering to the wants of these shooters. E. A. Leopold of Morristown, Pa., sketched what he desired for a bullet and sent it to Mr. Barlow of the Ideal Manufacturing Co., who worked up the well-known cylindrical mold which enables the user to get any weight he desires. The wonderful work done with this bullet is well known. The Ideal Co. also inform me that they are now ready to meet the demands for heavier, .25-caliber grooved bullets. Single molds may be had to cast any of the specified weights. This company is also prepared to furnish the "Perfection adjustable," that will cast the whole series of weights. It is said that the extreme point is exactly the same shape as the .25-20 caliber, but it is longer to the crimp shoulder, so that the .32-40 Marlin shell reduced down to the .25-20 caliber, with this ball inserted, will be exactly the same length as the standard .32-40 Marlin cartridge, making ammunition that is properly proportioned for repeating rifles. The rifle will be called the .25-35 Marlin, model '93. Of course for lightweight or short range bullets the series of .25-20 will be better balanced, but where the longer ball is desired the .25-35 series will be best

New Haven, Conn. SMALL BORE.

IT is said that Mr. Unge, a Swedish engineer, has devised a substitute for the rifling of cannon. He also expects to be able to put an end to the deterioration of the bore due to the combustion of gases which the new powders develop. He fits the projectile with gas checks, which prevent the passage of any gases, and gives to it the axial rotary movement which is now obtained by rifling the barrel, by a mechanical device which gives the twist to the gun itself at the moment of firing. The motion conveyed may be kept constant or increased. He claims that the effect is the same as that obtained by the twist in the rifle; that the accuracy of fire obtained by his system is equal or superior; that by it heavy guns can be produced at half the present cost and will last twice as long as they do now.

THE Denver (Colo.) Rifle Club will hold its annual shoot on New Year's Day, when a fine target rifle, complete in every detail, will be hung up for first price. It is expected that marksmen from nearly all parts of the state will enter this contest.

CINCINNATI, O.—The Cincinnati Rifle Association held its regular practice shoot at its range on December 30 and made the scores appended. Conditions: 200 yards, off hand, at the Staudard target. Wellinger distinguished himself by making a clean score (his first one) counting 90. To say he was tickled is drawing it mild and congratulations were unanimous. It was quite a fitting score to wind the old year with. The scores:

SUGGESTIONS TO TRAP SHOOTERS

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—As the season is now upon us when there is comparatively little shooting at the trap, except on holl days, or when two pretty evenly matched enthusiasts meet in a club room and, after wasting more time than it takes to demonstrate that neither one of them is much of a shot, arrange an individual match, most trap shooters, like myself, have time to look over the work of the past season; and in doing so they find many things connected with the sport that need remedying; but just how to accomplish all that is desirable and have our work approved by all, or even a majority, of the trap shooters of the land is not so easy.

Among some of the errors that gun clubs make I might mention the following which occur or are permitted, either at the regular practices of club members or in tournaments held by the club:

First, and one of the most detrimental to a club's interest, I think, is the rapid fire, known trap, known angle style of shooting which so many clubs adopt. Second, the 16-yard rise, know traps, unknown angle, walk-around system. Third, the apparent desire of many to see how many shots they can fire in an afternoon, regardless, it sometimes seems, of whether a good or bad score is made. Fourth, allowing both 12-gauge and 10-gauge guns to shoot from the same rise, and fifth, though by no means least or last of all the bad features permitted, more particularly at tournaments, is allowing the pooling of issues and dropping for place by a number of the best shots in attendance in order that they may "sweep in" for the "gang" the greater part of the purses that are shot for.

That some of these errors can be corrected there is no question; that some of them will be corrected the coming season by many, there is no doubt; and that all should be corrected if the popular sport of trap shooting is not to be given a black eye, no one who has given the subject much thought will dispute.

The known trap, known angle, rapid fire, use of one barrel system will be the first to go, for it teaches a man nothing that is of any benefit to him when he goes into the field after game, and it uses up a respectable amount of ammunition so quickly that half the men who participate in it are compelled for want of ammunition, to stop shooting before an afternoon is half spent, or before they are half satisfied.

The known trap, unknown angle, rapid fire, use of one barrel system is only a little better than the former, and with the exception that a man does not know which direction the target is going when it leaves the trap is no improvement over the first named. It possesses really all the bad features of the former, and it must go too if men expect to derive any benefit in shooting at the trap for field work, or desire to have an afternoon's sport prolonged. The only benefit either of these systems of trap shooting is to a man is, that to a few who do not shoot with the butt of the gun glued to their shoulder it teaches them to handle a gun with more freedom and greater ease.

If the first and second of these fatal errors to a gun club are corrected, then by force, as it were, will be the third, for when the nonsensical rapid-fire system is abandoned the man who now goes to the club grounds with a grain sack full of loaded shells will see that half as many will be all he can expect to shoot away in an afternoon.

To make the rise the same for both 12-gauge and 10-gauge guns, and that rise not over 18 yards at the most, with the use of one barrel only, anyone who does not shoot a 10-gauge gun will admit is unfair to the men who shoot 12-gauge guns. It would be just as reasonable to enter a three-quarter horse in a mile dash in a running race as to ask the man who shoots a 12-gauge gun to shoot at the same rise as those who shoot 10-gauges, or to allow the 10-gauge men to shoot from the 12-gauge rise. Many, I know, contend that if a 12-gauge gun is allowed to use 1¼ ounces of shot—same as the 10-gauges—the 10-gauge should not be handicapped, and that the man who shoots a 10-gauge gun, especially at live birds, is handicapped enough by so doing. There is not good logic in such a statement, however, for many men are of such build and strength that they can handle a 10-gauge, ten-pound gun with more ease than another can handle a 7½ pound 12-gauge; and besides, the man who shoots the larger bore gun can use enough more powder to make the outside pellets of his load effective enough to break a bird's wing or crack a composition saucer; and all will admit that the pattern of the 10-gauge is some few inches larger than that of the 12 gauge. Let any man ask Brewer, Elliott, Fulford and others who use excessive loads at the trap why they do so, and if they answer correctly they will not say because they are necessary to kill the birds with the center of the charge, but that the outside pellets of the charge may be effective if they happen to strike the bird's wing or a vital place on the body. This then, error number four, should be corrected, and I believe will be if trap shooting continues a popular sport.

I now come to the most fatal errors of those enumerated at the beginning of this article, that of pooling issues and dropping for place at tournaments, both of which are permitted at almost every tournament held and indulged in openly by many. You call the attention of the management to it and the reply will be that "it's a shame, but can't be helped." That it is a shame, a burning shame, I will admit, but that it cannot be helped I do not believe. In fact I am satisfied it can be prevented to a certain degree and will be, but just what is the best method to adopt I am not now going to say, for I have not given this part of my subject as much thought as it requires and I do not favor "jumping at conclusions" when one is not crowded for time.

Then there is the handicapping question which is a perplexing one, and a very important one also, which needs attention, and which must be so arranged that professionals, experts, semi-experts and amateurs will be placed on a nearer equality than they are now or the amateurs will not attend tournaments where professionals and experts are permitted to shoot. And who can blame them if they do not? Their money comes hard and in small allowances and they might as well go and bump their heads against a brick wall, thinking it would not hurt, as to expect to "break even" at a tournament where men who make trap shooting a business are allowed to shoot on an equality with them.

As I have pointed out a number of defects in the manner of shooting at clubs and tournaments, many will probably desire to know what I would suggest as an improvement on the present style, therefore, without going into too lengthy a dissertation I would say: Instead of known traps, known or unknown angles, rapid fire, all shooting from the same rise, use of one barrel, handicap the men according to their shooting ability and the gauge of gun used from 14 to 21 yards, and require them to shoot from unknown traps (either three or five traps), unknown angles, use of both barrels. The scores will not be so large to begin with, neither will so many shells be consumed in an afternoon or [illegible] participants will have just as much sport, and who [illegible] that they can score from 85 to 90 per cent. of their [illegible] style of shooting they can shoot anywhere, in [illegible] the field, on the duck pass or at a tournament. shooters instead of automatic machines

A great deal can be said upon the points I shall be glad to read the opinions of others on

YEARS of success in business have taught the Cleveland Target Co. that if one would succeed he must be "on deck" early, and with this thought evidently in mind the company has already issued its program for its second annual Blue Rock tournament which is to be held at Cleveland, O., June 19, 20 and 21. We have not the time to give the program as extended a notice as we would like, but we can say briefly that it is arranged so as to please the many; so that no one who can "shoot a little bit"—and those who cannot will probably stay at home—will be disappointed in not getting all the shooting they may desire. We quote from the rules and regulations to govern the tournament as follows: "Latest revised American Shooting Association rules (rapid fire) to govern, except that 10-gauge guns will shoot from reverse traps; that is, contestant standing at No. 1 score will have No. 5 trap sprung; at No. 2 score, No. 4 trap; at No. 3 score, No. 3 trap; at No. 4 score, No. 2 trap, and at No. 5 score, No. 1 trap. No dropping for place will be tolerated, and we mean it. A $50 diamond watch charm will be given for best average in all events. No one barred. Fifteen cash prizes of $10 each ($150) will be given to the next fifteen high averages in all events. Manufacturers' agents will be barred from winning any of these prizes. Write for instructions in regard to special railroad rates. Traps will be open for practice, Tuesday, June 18, American House, headquarters, rates $2 to $3 per day."

AMONG the many handsome calendars for 1895 received by the AMERICAN FIELD none are more attractive to the sportsman's eye than the one issued by the Winchester Repeating Arms Co. and the one by the Union Metallic Cartridge Co. Both are gems in their line and each appeals to the sporting instinct in every genuine sportsman's makeup. What sportsman can look at the one, where a couple of hunters, crouched behind some rocks, are just ready to place a bullet in a vital place in a noble buck that has gone out on a point of land extending into the stream, for a drink, or upon the other which represents a couple of children at the foot of a large tree in the woods, fast asleep, while a beautiful young fawn stands in the distance looking at them in astonishment and wonder, without having his sportsman's blood awakened and he wish for the day and hour to arrive when he can leave business for others to look after while he again enjoys a vacation and may oe gets a shot at game that does not wear feathers. These calendars are both beautiful specimens of the artist's work, and either can be had for the asking. Each is truly a sportsman's calendar and one or the other should find a resting place in the office, counting-room or library of every true sportsman.

A FRIENDLY team shoot at live birds was held on the grounds of the Business Men's Gun Club of this city, on Monday, December 12, McIlhany of the Business Men's club and B. C. Best of the Columbus (Kan.) club shooting against Calhoun and Blackett of the Business Men's club for the price of the birds. The day was not favorable to high scores and the birds were an exceptionally strong lot. Messrs. McIlhany and Best were victorious by a score of 42 to 40, the winners each killing 21 and the losers each 20. The match was shot under American Shooting Association rules.

Weir City, Kan. HOOK.

PRESIDENT E. A. JEANNERET of the Boiling Springs Gun Club of Rutherford, N. J., which club holds the trophy representing the amateur gun club championship of New Jersey, recently, in speaking of the probability of his club and the Maplewood Gun Club coming together before January 1 to shoot for the trophy, said that the two clubs would not meet before that time, but that early in 1895 he expected the clubs would meet and contest for the state championship.

ON Saturday, January 5, there will be a team trap shoot by the sportsmen of Kansas City, Mo., for a supper. The two low teams in the race will entertain the higher teams, the team making the lowest score paying 60 per cent. of the expense and the other team 40 per cent. It is expected that as many as fifty or sixty men will participate in the match.

THE members of the Kirtland Shooting Club are arranging for a shoot to be held on their new grounds on January 18, at which time a Smith ejector gun will be hung up as the main prize. This shoot, it is said, is only a preliminary to a big tournament to be held by the club on February 22.

Cleveland, O. TRIGGER.

THE Business Men's Rifle and Gun Club of Weir City, Kan., at a meeting held on December 24, 1894, decided to make the added money for the "Owl Shoot" to be held under its auspices on May 8, 9 and 10, $300 instead of $200 as previously advertised, thus making $100 added money for each day of the tournament.

A MATCH at 100 live birds per man, 35 yards rise, for $100 a side, American Shooting Association rules to govern, has been arranged between Thomas Morfey of New Jersey and J. Rothaker of Philadelphia. The match will be decided at Holmesburg Junction, Pa., on the afternoon of January 3.

A GUN club with seventeen charter members was recently organized at Orion, Mich. Mr. George Swayze was elected president and Mr. Charles M. Stanabeck secretary. The members have already begun practising at the traps and next season will have regular club shoots.

IN answer to my advertisement in the AMERICAN FIELD I received sixteen propositions to trade guns. I have accepted one and wish to say that I am too busy to answer all of the letters, so kindly do so for me through your paper.

Janesville, Wis. G. H. BATES.

THE second bi-monthly tournament of the Elizabeth (N. J.) Gun Club will be held on February 27 and 28. The first day the shooting will be at targets and the second day at live birds. No one barred.

MR. W. T. IRWIN, of Peoria, and Mr. Deterline, of Keithsburg, Ill., will shoot a match at inanimate targets, on January 11, at Kewanee, Ill. Conditions: 100 targets per man, for a purse of $100.

THE Atchison (Kan.) Gun Club will hold its twelfth annual tournament on April 16, 17 and 18.

THERE will be an all-day shoot at live birds, open to all, at Frenchtown, N. J., on January 9.

CARVER—MARSHALL

OSKALOOSA, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The great pigeon shooting match which took place at the Fair Grounds in this city on December 28, between Dr. W. F. Carver of Kansas City, Mo., and Thomas Marshall of Keithsburg, Ill., resulted in a victory for the former after a close and interesting race.

Although Dr. Carver was the favorite from the start, very few cared to place any money that he would win, for Mr. Marshall had been doing such excellent work during the tournament that most of the Doctor's admirers feared that his opponent might show them some great shooting and surprise them by beating him in the race. The match was arranged for December [illegible] the severe cold weather on that day was carried over until [illegible] lowing.

The Doctor led off, getting a bird from trap No. [illegible] barrels to kill. Mr. Marshall followed suit, getting [illegible] same trap, a fast driving taller, which he also scored [illegible] ond barrel. The Doctor continued to score dead up [illegible] round, when a left-quartering fast bird passed the boundary [illegible] Marshall stepped to the score, following in his regular [illegible]

No. 5 [illegible] sprung, and an easy right-quartering bird started leisurely. It was knocked down with the first barrel, and for safety the second barrel was fired while the bird was on the ground. This put new life into the bird and it crossed the boundary with perfect ease. At this point the doctor got a fast right-quartering bird from trap No. 3 and it went out of bounds. Marshall continued to score with a fast driver out of trap No. 4, a fast right-quartering bird. The next bird was in good shape. Marshall's four-teenth bird, out of trap, a fast right-quartering, copper-colored bird, went out of bounds. When the contestants had faced the traps 25 times, Carver had missed only two, and Marshall had lost another right-quartering driver dead out of bounds. The Doctor continued to bring down his birds in good shape until his thirty-fifth, a right-quartering incomer, that succeeded in crossing the dead line. This seemed to encourage the target smasher from the "Sucker" state, and he got down to steady work and continued to drop bird after bird until he added twenty-nine dead to his score, which was the best run during the match. Carver lost his thirty-ninth, a left-quartering driver. On the forty-seventh bird the Doctor gave another exhibition of his skill, a dead out of bounds just over the boundary line At the fiftieth round the Doctor had lost five birds and Marshall led by one bird. Carver gave another exhibition of his skill on the fifty-second bird, a right-quartering driver, a regular stem-winder. Up to this time the Doctor had been using Schultze powder and he changed to American Wood. Marshall's fifty-fifth bird, out of No. 3 trap, a very fast tailer, ran the gantlet. The Doctor's fifty-eighth bird, out of trap No. 5, cut a very peculiar caper, one very seldom witnessed. At the word pull trap 5 was sprung. The bird took rather a high course, quartering to the right, and did not seem to be hit very hard with the first barrel. The Doctor in using his second barrel evidently led the bird too much. The bird kept flying, covering at least 60 yards, and then fell dead within bounds within twenty yards from where it started. Marshall's sixtieth bird, a very fast copper-colored bird, left trap No. 3 in a right quarterly direction and made good his escape, making the match a tie at this point.

The Doctor continued to score until he called pull on the eightieth round, when he met with a little surprise out of trap No. 2, a fast, slightly quartering driver to the left, which he lost dead out of bounds. Marshall lost his sixty-third bird dead out of bounds, a right-quartering driver. He then killed nine more without a miss, but failed to score his seventy-third bird, which he must have overshot. The bird lit on the ground and on receiving the contents of the second barrel went out of bounds. This demonstrated very clearly that Mr. Marshall cannot be classed a pot-shot. The Doctor killed seventeen in succession and then failed to score his ninety-eighth bird, a right-quartering high incomer. The crowd greeted this miss with considerable applause, as it was now a very close race the Doctor leading the Keithsburg man only one bird. Carver killed his last two birds out of trap No. 2, and Marshall missed his last out of No. 5 trap, a very fast right-quartering bird. This left the score 92 to 90 in favor of Dr. Carver.

Mr. Marshall shot a splendid race. He shot his Monogram Smith Hammerless gun and Dr. Carver shot his Wm. Cashmore gun, the gun he generally uses when he shoots for blood. This is the same gun that he won the championship of Australia with, and with which he also defeated Clark and Slocum. The match began at 1:30 p. m. and ended at 4:05 p. m.

Among those present from abroad whom the writer recognized, were S. A. Tricker, Davenport, representing the Parker gun; Chas. Grimm, Clear Lake, Ia.; A. J. Cook, Oakville, Ia.; A. Singleton, Richland, Ia.; E. S. Erdice, Keota, Ia. The Keithsburg delegation were O. H. Lloyd, E. E. Deterline, Elmer Tobie and Thos. Marshall.

Mr. A. B. Little of Oskaloosa officiated as referee, while Mr. J. F. Breitenstein, of Burlington, Ia., was official scorer. The

CHRISTMAS SHOOT AT MAPLEWOOD

It is the custom for members of the Maplewood Gun Club to meet on their grounds each Christmas Day and indulge in sweepstake shooting. Sometime during the day the annual supper is contested for. Sides are chosen, the members being divided as nearly equal as possible. The conditions are: Winning side pays for the targets and losers pay for the supper, which is spread New Year's Eve, at which time the annual meeting of the club is held

This year proved no exception to the rule, and at 9:30 o'clock a. m. the first event was called. The Maplewood club members shoot targets second to no club in the state and as some of the members desired to try their skill at live birds, the first event was at live birds, the good old-fashioned kind with their overcoats on. Scarcely one left the trap without being dusted, I mean hit hard. Something was wrong, and after the first sweep was finished Mr. J. Von Lengerke paced off the distance and announced that the birds had 31 yards the start, which probably accounts for the fact that no straight scores were made. This was reversed in the next event and better work was done, much to the regret of the talent waiting outside the boundary.

The live birds being disposed of targets had the call, and then the sport commenced in earnest. The South Orange Field Club was well represented in the morning and proved conclusively that its members are in the sport to stay.

The contest for the supper was very interesting as only two breaks separated the teams at the finish. Below will be found the scores in full.

THE ROCHESTER GUN CLUB'S BADGE CONTESTS

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Since the close of the Central State League contests, a synopsis of which appeared last week in the best all-around sporting paper in the world, the AMERICAN FIELD, the boys here have been pounding away at targets to determine who should become the proud possessor of the E. C. Myers badge presented to us by the above named, liberal-hearted member of our club. We have had a variety of weather during these contests, and that to a great extent accounts for the variation in the scores.

The rules governing these contests are similar to those used in playing "pedro." I do not suppose any brother sportsman knows the game, so I will describe it. To make amusement for the boys about every variety of contest that can be thought of from straight long cut to the villainous cigarette has been brought into play. These rules, as nearly as my memory serves me, are practically as follows:

American Shooting Association rules, rapid firing, known traps, unknown angles. The rating of the members for three months previous was figured and the per cent. arrived at, and then each was allowed to shoot. Say A was rated an 80 per cent. man, shot at 25 birds and killed 22, he would gain 8 points which were scored to his credit. If B was an 85 per cent. man and killed 20 out of 25 birds, he not killing up to his previous record, or per cent., went in the hole 5 points, which he must make up before anything could be credited to him.

The contests have created no end of fun for the boys, and have been going on since November 7. The scores for the last two shoots previous to the wind up, I give below. Wednesdays and Saturdays are our shooting days and in this case they are considered one shoot.

December 8 and 15 the contest was to close, but the committee decided to hold it open one more week to enable a number of members who were behind to shoot up. Here are the scores for December 8:

	First String	Second String	Third String	Total
Jones	18	19	19	56
Borst	19	20	21	60
Hadley	20	..	.	20
Burton	18	18	.	36
Lowdon	19	.	..	19
Kay	19	20	..	39
Lane	19	..	..	19
Kent	19	13	..	33
Worth	23	23	21	67
Clark	12	14	..	26
Houck	8	..	.	8
Slocum	20	25	23	68
Rugg	19	..	..	19
Quirk	21	11	..	32
Rickman	20	..	..	20
Bauer	16	..	..	16

December 15 was a most unpleasant day, but with true sportsman's grit our members faced the music and here are the scores:

	First string	Second string	Third string	Total
Orange	20	18	..	38
Rugg	19	18	16	53
Wright	16	18	19	53
Rickman	21	18	18	57
Rogers	18	22	23	63
Jones	20	24	..	44
Lewis	16	15	..	31
Kent	20	17	..	37
Clark	17	..	..	17
Worth	19	22	..	41

The concluding shoot took place on Saturday, December 22, and although the weather was all that could be desired, only three men presented themselves. I suppose the near approach of the holidays had much to do with it. Scores: Rogers 20, Bauer 15, Kent 17.

On figuring up the result of the contests it was found that our dear old friend and comrade, Robert Gardner (Orange), had captured the beautiful trophy, while our equally genial and ever-faithful sportsman, George Borst, chased "Brother Gardner" so hard that you could play pedro on his coattails, and only lost the match by one point, or really one-fourth of one bird, Mr. Gardner scoring 104 points to the good Mr. Borst's 103, Mr. Harry Burton being third with 99 points.

Mr. Gardner entered the race with an average of 55 per cent. and closed at 70 per cent, showing a steady improvement, the classification being revised after each shoot. Mr. Borst entered at 67 per cent. and ended with 50 per cent., while Burton began at 41 per cent. and closed at 60 per cent.

Thus the reader will see that we are enjoying ourselves here every moment of the time.

THE EUREKA GUN CLUB'S CHRISTMAS DAY SHOOT

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The Eureka Gun Club's Christmas Day shoot started promptly at 9 o'clock in the morning, a large attendance of the strictly amateur kind being present. Many there were who were not there to shoot but merely to look on and report. However, the writer failed to notice any who could withstand the temptation to "just try ten or twenty birds," but unfortunately the result of their efforts will never be known to the world, as someone purloined the score sheets on which the scores of several events were kept, and in consequence my report is not in full. Some twelve events were shot, only nine of which I can give.

Mr. Morgan was shooting his fine Francotte as was also Ferguson, and the good natured badinage between them and DeWolf, as to why they did "not buy good guns and then they could shoot," was laughable in the extreme, especially as DeWolf was using a thirty-five dollar Hollenbeck gun and shooting the best he ever did. Goodrich was on hand shooting in poor form, but anxious for a race, with a metaphorical chip on his shoulder. Glover had part of his gun stock blown off by an escape of gas. The weather was fine, a light northwest wind blowing and the sun shone bright and clear. The scores:

THE ROCKAWAY POINT ROD AND GUN CLUB'S SHOOT

The members of this club had an enjoyable time at their December shoot at live pigeons and Empire targets. Events No. 3, 4, 5 and 9 were at 15 single Empires, rapid fire. Event No. 6 was at 10 pairs of Empires. Events No. 7 and 8 were walking matches, gun below the elbow. The scores follow:

MANHATTA.

HOEY—"NATHANIEL"

It seems that the result of the last match between these two men was not entirely satisfactory to Mr. "Nathaniel" as far as results were concerned, and while he is a novice at the traps, compared with Mr. Fred Hoey, he was satisfied to give him another race in which the member of the Country club seemed justified, for the result was a victory for "Nathaniel" by a total of 89 to 87. The result of the first match, won by Mr. Hoey, on the Westminster club's grounds, did not cause the Westchester contingent to lose faith in their young member. It was an exciting contest in which each alternated in leading at various stages in the race. Under the circumstances, with fast birds, a fresh wind and poor light, the scores were good.

"Nathaniel" was first at the traps and led off with a miss, which was followed by another at his third bird. This was not an auspicious opening, and when at the end of the first string of 25 he had missed six birds, it looked bad for him, but it proved to be his worst quarter of the race. Mr. Hoey first slipped up on his seventh bird, losing his ninth, twelfth and twenty-fourth, scoring 21 in his first 25. Both men had now settled down to better work, Mr. Nathaniel scoring 25 in the next quarter, Mr. Hoey 23, which tied them on 44 in the first half hundred. Mr. Nathaniel scored 24 in the third quarter, missing his twenty-fifth bird, which gave him a run of 55 straight, the largest run made by either during the race. Mr. Hoey scored 23 in the third quarter which left him one bird behind. In the last twenty-five Mr. "Nathaniel" scored 21, to Mr. Hoey's 20, winning the race, as stated, by two birds.

Mr. "Nathaniel's" shooting was admired by all and in the last half of the race it seemed to make no difference with him whether the bird was a fast quarterer, incomer or driver, for it was cut down in fine style, he scoring every bird from his nineteenth to the seventy-fifth, a lightning right-quartering driver. In spite of this faultless shooting Mr. Hoey was only one behind at this stage of the race.

As each has now won a race a third seems a certainty. Mr. Hoey's experience at the trap should serve him well if the third race is shot. The scores.

NEWBURG GUN CLUB SHOOT

The Newburg (N. Y.) Gun Club had its usual jolly Christmas shoot, and the "lay out" of Bro. Gedney was enough to satisfy anyone, even if the good things to eat did almost squelch the shooting of some of the members. As the reader knows some shoot better after eating, others worse. The day was equal to any of the pleasant experiences of the club. Targets and live birds were shot at, as the following scores show:

THE LARCHMONT CLUB AT THE TRAPS

At the recent weekly shoot of the Larchmont club the birds were a lively lot, and, assisted by a brisk wind across the traps, made the shooting quite difficult.

The first event to be decided was an individual match at 25 birds per man, between Mr. J. K. Palmer and Mr. J. F. Taylor, the result being as follows:

Palmer.....1222220222 1221022222 22222—23
Taylor.....2011111221 2120220212 12221—22

Sweepstake shooting followed the match, in which scores as follows were made:

SHOOT No. 1.—Handicap sweepstake, 5 birds, $5 entrance: Fred Hoey, 31 yards, 0: J. K. Palmer, 30 yards, 5; Capt. Money, 30 yards, 3; J. T. Taylor, 30 yards, 3; L. T. Davenport, 30 yards, 5.

SHOOT No. 2.—Same thing over again: Hoey 3, Palmer 0, Money 4, Taylor 2, Davenport 4.

SHOOT No. 3.—Miss and out, $5 entrance: Hoey 4, Palmer 5, Money 5, Davenport 0.

SHOOT No. 4.—Another same as above: Hoey 2, Palmer 1, Money 2, Davenport 1.

SHOOT No. 5.—10 birds, $10 entrance: Hoey 5, Palmer 9, Money 3, Davenport 9.

SHOOT No. 6.—Same as preceding: Hoey 9, Palmer 9, Davenport 3, Moore 8, Taylor 7.

SHOOT No. 7.—Handicap optional sweep, 10 birds, $10 entrance: Hoey 10, Palmer 9, Davenport 10, Moore 7, Taylor 8.

THE BERGEN GUN CLUB'S SHOOT

The second trap-shooting competition of this newly organized club, on the club's grounds at Flatlands, L. I., was fairly well attended. The principal event was at 7 live birds per man, handicap rise, for the prize cup, which resulted in a tie between Messrs. Ryerson and Reynolds, with 6 each. The scores in the match were: W. H. Ryerson, 28 yards, 6; E. J. Reynolds, 29 yards, 6; P. J. Bronson, 26 yards, 5; Jas. W. Morris, 25 yards, 5; Henry K Schmidt, 25 yards, 5; H. W. Murphy, 24 yards, 4; Chas. D. Long, 24 yards, 4; Johu J. Morgan, 24 yards, 4; H. K. Jones, 24 yards, 4; C. J. Russell, 24 yards, 3; E. J. Knowlton, 24 yards, 4. In the shoot off between Messrs. Reynolds and Ryerson, miss and out, Ryerson killed four and won, Reynolds missing his fourth.

After this a clay bird sweep, miss and out, $2 entrance, resulted as follows: Ryerson 6, Reynolds 5, Bronson 4, Morris 3, Murphy 4, Long 3, Morgan 3, Jones 2, Knowlton 1, Messrs. Smith and Russell missing their first bird. The second event, with same conditions, resulted as follows: Morris 4, Morgan 4, Ryerson, Schmidt, Murphy and Jones 3 each, Bronson, Long, Russell and Knowlton 2 each. Mr. Reynolds went out on his first bird.

DAVENPORT VS. KITTREDGE

Some members of the Westminster Kennel Club had an enjoyable Christmas Day at the club's grounds at Babylon, L. I. Impromptu matches, until a dinner was served, were enjoyed by all.

The principal event of the day was a 25-bird race between L. T. "Davenport," who stood at 30 yards rise, and Benj. Kittredge, who stood at 28 yards. The latter was also allowed two misses as no birds. This made a close race, but Mr. "Davenport" was equal to the emergency of killing 25 straight, good and fast birds; a remarkable performance under the circumstances.

While Mr. Kittredge was shooting an unusual incident occurred. His third bird fell on No. 3 trap and set a bird free. The summary:

"Davenport".....2112122222 2222222222 22222—25
Kittredge.....1122222222 2221122221 10222—24

A pleasaut incident of the day was the presentation of a handsome silver-mounted orangewood cane to James G. K. Duer, president of the club, by Mr. George de Forest Grant, in appreciation of President Duer's long and faithful service to the club.

BORMAN—REHM

BLUE ISLAND, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The long talked of pigeon shooting match between Geo. Borman and Jacob Rehm, both of this place, for the championship of the "Smoke House Club," took place on December 22, on the grounds of the Blue Island Gun Club. The contest was at 25 live birds from five unknown King traps, and resulted in a very easy victory for Borman, who was shooting a race for his life, or, as the boys say, "he had his shooting pants on." Rehm made a very poor showing. Borman was shooting his new crown Greener ejector gun. The weather was cold and the birds as good a lot of flyers as ever were trapped. The scores:

Borman.....0210210002 1010121211 02202—16
Rehm.....0120000002 0200000001 02020— 7

HOPPER VS. TERRY

Matches seem to be the rage around New York; not only between the cracks but also between those who do not attain to this distinction. The above-named gentlemen, Scott Terry, of Plainfield, N. J., and G. A. Hopper, of Paterson, had a "go" on December 27, at Paterson, N. J., at 25 birds each for $50 a side, Mr. Terry winning by the score of 17 to 15 About fifty spectators witnessed the match. The birds were a good lot and each man lost four dead out of bounds. A cold wind was blowing which assisted the birds. Mr. Hopper is not satisfied with the result and another match between the two is arranged for January 22 at Marion, N. J., each to shoot at 100 birds for $100 a side. The scores in the match shot were:

Scott Terry.....2222*21*01 11*2021*20 12012—17
G. A. Hopper.....2222011?*2 2222222*0* 02202—15

AYLING VS. MOSHER

In a live bird match shot on the grounds of the West Shore Gun Club of Syracuse, N. Y., on the afternoon of December 26, between Mr. Charles F. Ayling and Mr. George Mosher, 25 birds per man, Mr. Ayling proved the victor, beating his opponent two birds. The scores:

Ayling.....1212002212 2222022001 00222—18
Mosher.....1021210222 2202200022 20020—16

PORT BYRON, ILL.—Inclosed please find scores made at the Lime Kiln Gun Club's grounds at the club's annual shoot on Christmas Day in the afternoon. The shooting was at both live pigeons and Blue Rock targets. The live birds were a lot of old, blue fellows, and when the word "pull!" was given they got away in a manner that taxed the skill of the old veterans as well as the young shooters to stop them. The live birds were shot from three ground traps, 28 and 30 yards rise, under American Shooting Association rules. The Blue Rocks were shot from two known traps, same rules. Except it being quite chilly the day was fine for trap shooting; just enough wind to make the pigeons fly well, but not enough to affect the Blue Rocks.

Among the visiting sportsmen who took part, your correspondent noticed Adam Hoffstetter, the old veteran of 10-gauge fame, who seems to have lost his shooting eye, and John Zeigler of Rapids City; Chas. Shafer and Ben Woodburn of Zumma; Jack Shall of Evergreen Hill; Mr. Clayton Case, the crack shot of the Cordova Gun Club; Joe Biehlmer, Lee Filbert, Jim Sample, Wm. Grow, Ed Adrian and Geo. Beal from the country.

Mr P. A. Wells, with his hustling boys, handled the targets and live birds to the satisfaction of all. Mr. L. H. Trent was trap puller, Ben Lamb worked the flush ropes, Charlie Pearsall officiated as scorer and Mr. Judson Coxey as referee. Scores as below:

The fifth event was shot in the dark and it was impossible to locate birds shot at. The scores look very ragged, but the birds were a hard lot and required a lot of hard hitting to stop them, those killed being killed cleanly. Nine men used Du Pont's Smokeless power, three E. C. and one black. Of the guns used Lawrie used a Burgess repeater; Cruickshank, C. McQueen and H. Williams, Wilkesbarre Hammerless; Ross, H. McQueen and Barrett, Smith; Fick, Scofield, Ansley and E. Skey, Ithaca hammerless.

SECRETARY PHOENIX GUN CLUB.

PITTSTON, PA.—I inclose herewith the scores made in two team races at live birds shot on December 24 and 25. In each instance the birds were good, above the average used for trap shooting. Add to this fact a strong wind and bad weather and good scores were impossible to make. Everything went off smoothly with the exception of the breaking of Mr. Miles Williams' gun which resulted seriously to Mr Williams, though luckily gun was an $80 grade Wilkesbarre and his [illegible] E. Answers to Correspondents

We are willing always to answer any question that we can answer, and prescribe for dogs or other animals in these columns, but we cannot answer questions or prescribe by mail. In all instances where it is necessary that a sick animal should be prescribed for by mail, we refer the owner to Professor R. J. Withers, No. 627 South Main Street, Los Angeles, Cal., to whom one dollar must be inclosed to pay for his services.

KENNEL

SEP TEMBER, St. Louis, Mo.—Please prescribe for my fourteen-months-old pointer dog, who has been ailing for the past two weeks. He has a very bad cough, which troubles him very much: his eyes are inflamed and very sore, a matter coming from them at all times; he has sores at each side of his mouth, which seem to discharge a kind of a pus; his private parts are sore and swollen; he is very languid and lazy, although he eats as much as he ever did, he does not care to romp and play as before; there is a musty smell comes from him, yet he is washed and gets a clean bed of straw once a week; his ears are very tender and he scratches at them a great deal, although there are no signs of sores on them; he seems to be cold at all times, and shakes as though he had a chill. I have seen no sign of worms, but he has lost eight or ten hounds in weight; his coat is very dry and inflexible; he is cross and does not want anyone near him; he drinks a great deal of water. I have never seen him vomit and his bowels seem to be in good condition. He has first-class quarters and I take the best of care of him. Ans.—We believe it arises from intestinal par[illegible] After a fast of eighteen hours give one and one-half gra[illegible] areca nut to the pound weight of the dog, follow[illegible] with two ounces of castor-oil.

HUNTER, Dallas, Tex.—Ans.—(1) The color should be a r[illegible] chestnut, with no trace whatever of black; white on [illegible] or toes, or a small star on the forehead, or a narrow strea[illegible] on the nose or face, not to disqualify. (2) We never he[illegible] "snow-white Irish setter being registered." But the fact [illegible]

Irish setter is red and white is no proof that his breeding is not pure, and only last year a class or a special prize, we forget which, was given at a show in Ireland for red and white Irish setters. In the early days of dog shows on the other side of the Atlantic few of the best dogs were wholly red, but they must be so to suit the [illegible] present day. Sportsmen are not so particular, as [illegible] does his work well; and, as a matter of fact, the red and white is more useful, as he is easier to discern should [illegible] ranging widely. (3) The modern Gordon [illegible] and [illegible] black should be intense and brilliant, [illegible] the tan should be a rich dark mahogany, and should be [illegible] inside of legs, under the stern, on the feet and muzzle, and in spots over the eyes.

M. H. L., Belmond, Ia.—My six-months-old greyhound dog puppy is badly broken out with sores on the under part of the body and the inside of his legs, which are gradually working up his sides. About the time the first pus-discharging blisters or sores appeared he refused food for two or three days. his eyes became filled with matter and he went entirely blind inside of forty-eight hours; after a week he has regained his eyesight and eats fairly well, but is very thin. I wash him in carbolized water, using a dog soap, and after drying apply vaseline. Kindly name disease and remedy. Should he be kept in a warm place? Ans.—Eczema. Take two drams sugar of lead and eight ounces of distilled water; mix and appiy once daily; use a muzzle to prevent bis licking.

F. A. M., Cordova, Ill.—(1) My Gordon setter puppy seven months old has a fleshy growth arising from the outer angle of the iuner surface of the eyelid, attached to the eyeball and spreading out over tbe eyeball and attaching to the cornea; from the outer edge of this growth coarse hair grows and spreads over the entire cornea; the hairs resemble much the human eyelash. What is it and what can I do to remove it? (2) Is it true that the first litter of puppies from a bitch are no good? (3) My puppy was whelped May 28, 1894; when will she be in heat, and would you breed her or carry her over the first time? Ans.—(1) See advice given A. V. W., Easton, Pa., in this issue. (2) No. (3) From nine months old upward.

E. B. R., Rochester, N. Y.—My St. Bernard, two years old, had a bad case of eczema. I treated him as follows: Externally with fishoil, oil of tar and sulphurous acid. I also gave him Fowler's Solution from one to twenty five drops and then back to one. He appeared to be all healed up, but since I stopped treating him now and then a spot breaks out along his back and tail. Ans.—Take four drams of the sugar of lead and one pint of distilled water; mix and apply to the spots twice daily. Use a muzzle to prevent licking.

W. A. F., Kensington, Ill.—I have a fox terrier bitch puppy, three months old. For about three weeks after she was six weeks old she was very closely confined, without much exercise: her diet has been milk and Spratts food; lately her forelegs appear to be very much bowed, caused I think by weakness in the joints; the bones are strong and straight; she is perfectly healthy and growing fast. Will her legs come out straight or should I do something for her, and if so what? Ans.—Rickets. Give three times daily a dessertspoonful of precipitated phosphate of lime.

W. M. E., Topeka, Kan.—I have a Great Dane bitch that has been bred to King William, and since she came home she has acted weak in the hindlegs; and on December 10 she was so lame she could hardly walk, and that evening I found the insides of her hocks badly swollen. Is this rheumatism? If so, please prescribe. I am using Dr. Merrill's Liniment and arnica, but I do not know what internal treatment to give. Ans.—Give three grains of salol three times daily.

J. E. McC., Philadelphia, Pa.—What can I do for my beagle puppy bitch? I think she is weak in the bladder; every time anyone fondles her or makes a fuss over her or picks her up, she leaks and stains carpets, dresses or anything that happens to be under her. Please prescribe. Ans.—Tincture of belladonna is indicated but you have not stated the age, consequently we cannot prescribe the dose.

W. C. M., Topeka, Kan.—My English setter dog had a slight attack of internal canker, but always scratches at butt of ear; he has bad hearing and that is what I want to cure; when he sleeps I can walk up to his kenuel and he will not hear until I tap on his kennel; I can call to him but he will not hear. Ans.—Cleanse out the ears with tepid water daily, and then apply tincture of iodine.

L., Chicago.—My collie, fourteen months old, cannot hold his urine under the slightest excitement. He was a good stud dog at eight months old. Can you recommend a remedy? Ans.—Give one drop of the fluid extract of belladonna and three grains of the citrate of lithium three times daily.

J. H. B., New York.—If one knows the sire and dam, grandsire and grandam of a dog, is such dog eligible for registration, or is it necessary to know the great-grandparents of a dog in order to have it registered? Ans.—An authentic pedigree of three generations is required.

J. S. P., Scotland Neck, N. C.—Ans.—(1) Keno (6352), bred by Mr. Isaac Yearsley, is by Roybell III (5691) out of Fraud (5733). (2) Phœbe (15152), bred by same, is by Rock Jr (5686) out of Maud II (5765).

MISCELLANEOUS

J. H. V., Rock Rapids.—(1) Please tell me how the velocity and pressure of loads fired from guns is obtained? (2) What is the name of the breeder at Harlan, Ia., who advertised puppies in the AMERICAN FIELD the past season? Ans.—(1) In testing for velocity there is used what is known as a chronograph, an arrangement of falling weights which are attached to levers that are pivoted at one end, and which in falling describe an arc of a circle. This arc is graduated across its length. The lever carries a copper wire, the end of which drags on a strip of sensitive paper that is fastened on the arc of the circle. These levers are held in a horizontal position by an electric stop, and the whole machine is connected, electrically, with two targets located at known distances from each other. The projectile in passing through the first target releases the lever, or levers, and it starts on its downward course. On the projectile reaching the second target connection is made with a circuit that embraces both the wire on the arm, or lever, and the seat of the sensitive paper. The current passing through the paper chemically discolors it, showing the exact point the falling weight and lever had arrived at when the projectile completed the circuit at the second target. The velocity of this falling weight and lever being known, the time of the projectile's flight between the first and second targets is read from the graduations on the arc of the circle. Testing for gas pressure is done by use of crusher gauges placed in the bottom of the bore, or in plugs screwed in the breech, or in the side of the gun, communicating with the chamber. The gauges are made of a disk which terminates in a chisel-like edge, which edge rests on a second disk of known hardness, both disks being inclosed in a band that keeps the pressure from their edges. The pressure is measured by the depth of the cut in the second disk. Other gauges are used that screw into the chamber, the gases acting on a piston held down by a spring—the case being graduated—and the stem of the piston carrying a pencil which records the compression of the spring on a piece of paper attached to the case. It is a most impossible to describe the chronograph without illustrations of it, but we hope that we have made it clear enough in this short dissertation so that it will be understood. (2) What breed of dogs did he advertise?

F. W. H., Aberdeen, S. D.—There are three prizes given at a bowling match; two men get 94 and two men get 90. Do the two men who get 94 take first and second prize, or when rolled off does the loser drop out and get nothing at all? What about the two that get 90 each? Ans.—The two who score 94 bowl off for first and second prize, and the two who score 90 bowl off for third prize.

R. A. P., Henderson, Ky.—How many buckshot should a 12-gauge gun that shoots buckshot well put in a 30-inch circle at 40 yards, using 12 shot for a load? Ans.—If the gun is a cylinder bore, about half the number of pellets used: if modified choke, from one to three pellets more than the cylinder bore; provided that in the latter the shell is loaded as it should be to get best results.

TRAP

SUBSCRIBER, Peekskill, N. Y.—(1) Kindly explain the terms "class shooting," "straight shooting," and "high guns to win," as used in connection with trap shooting. (2) In a prize merchandise shoot, four prizes, where two men tie for first, and in the absence of any rule to govern, how should the tie be decided? and how settled under each of above quotations? Ans.—(1) In class shooting if two or more men tie for first money they are required to divide or shoot off the tie for first money and have no interest in second or third moneys, second money going to the next highest score or scores and third to the next highest. "Straight shooting" and "high guns to win" are the same, and is the style of shooting mostly adopted at the gun clubs in England. If three prizes are offered and two men tie on the highest score, they shoot off for first and second prize, the winner of the tie taking first money and the loser second money, third money going to the man making the next highest score. Under class shooting in the above example the men who tied on the highest score would shoot off for or divide prize. If straight shooting or high guns to win, and the rule governing such was strictly adhered to, the men would have to shoot off the tie to determine the winner.

DANIEL BOONE, Sandusky, O.—At a merchandise prize tournament a shooter arrives late (long after second event had been shot off) and enters in events 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 and asks the captain if he can shoot for an average. The captain tells him he thinks not, but that he would leave it to the program committee. The committee decides that he cannot shoot for an average prize, because giving average prizes was to get as many shooters as possible to enter in all the events but the first, and in order to give the late comers a show the first event was not considered in figuring the average, and the second event was held open until the last gun was fired in that event. The shooter then drew out his money and said he would not shoot, but shortly changed his mind, and entered singly in events 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, and then claimed an average prize. Was he entitled to an average prize? Ans.—The inference to be drawn from the reading of your program (although it does not positively say so) is that a man must shoot in all events except the first to entitle him to an average prize. This the shooter mentioned did not do, consequently he could not claim an average prize on the events he did shoot in any more than he could if he had shot in only one event.

RIFLE

T C A., Grand Forks, N. D.—(1) How many inches of pine will the following cartridges penetrate: The .45-90, .45-70, .40 82, .40-90, .38-55, .38 90? (2) Which has the longest range? (3) Is the .40 90 a good load for large game? Ans.—(1) The .45 90, 10½ inches; .45-70, 14 inches; .40-82, 9½ inches; .40 90, 10½ inches. We have no data for the .38-55 and .38 90. The higher the velocity the less the penetration, due to violence of impact distorting ball. (2) .45-70, if using 405 or 500 grain ball. (3) Yes.

GAME AND SHOOTING

C. P. C., Greensburg, Ind.—Will you please quote me the latest game law of Indiana? Ans.—The open seasons are as follows: Deer, October 1 to January 1. Quails, pheasants and wild turkeys, November 10 to January 1. Prairie chickens, September 1 to February 1. Woodcocks, July 1 to January 1. Wild ducks, September 1 to April 15. Squirrels, June 1 to December 20. Exportation of game from the state prohibited.

FISH

E. W. S., Clinton, Ia.—Will you kindly give me the address of the Fish Commissioner of Iowa and also of Illinois? Ans.—Geo. E. Delevan, Esthervilie, Ia., and Col. Geo. W. Langford, Secretary, Manito, Ill.

Information Wanted

IN answer to the inquiry of Mr. B. E. King, of Saginaw, Mich. about Southern and Western quails being bred here, I will say that a year ago while living in Tacoma, Wash., I bought six California quails of the valley variety. These I shipped to my grandfather, who kept them in a little covered inclosure until Spring. He then turned them loose, and last Fall two large bevies were located in the vicinity. I think there is no probability of their migrating, as the Tennessee quails are said to no. They are beautifull birds and cost me fifty cents apiece and three dollars expressage, or a total cost of one dollar each. They are still in Erie County, only two having been shot by trespassers.

Columbus, O. CHAS H. BARTOW.

WILL some brother rifleman who has had the experience, please tell me through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD how to put up a rifle range for .22-caliber rifles on our gun club grounds which have ample room? Also what distance to place target, how to make targets and backstop? Also where I can obtain by-laws, rules and regulations governing a rifle club, and what kind of targets are used for .22-caliber rifle shooting?

Sandusky, O. DANIEL BOONE.

IF R. J. A., of Tacoma, Wash., who in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 15 wishes to know of a grease that will keep guns from rusting, will write me giving his full address I will furnish him the information he desires. I have used the preparation for over thirty years, and although I have shot all day in rain and snow I never have a spot of rust on my gun barrels.

Cherokee, Ia. JOHN H. SHIPPEY, Box 1051.

WILL some brother sportsman who has had experience please advise me through the AMERICAN FIELD if it is practicable to breed quails in confinement? Suppose I confine, say a dozen birds now, in a good sized run, sufficient house protection, etc., would they lay and hatch youngsters next Spring?

New York. J. H. B.

WILL some reader of the AMERICAN FIELD please tell me through these columns where I can find forests of elm east of the Mississippi River?

New Bethlehem, Pa. E. E. T.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under "Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman. Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. TITUS, Waverly, Clay Co., Miss. 42-18-tf

WE are located in one of the finest training grounds in the United States and have first-class kennels. We are now prepared to take four more dogs to train for next Fall shooting; keep our own saddle horses and hunting wagon; our patrons are always welcome. Can also board some more dogs and work on game. Write for pamphlet and full information. C. W. TWAY, Michigan City, Miss. 3

Excelsior Dog Cakes

As their name implies, are the highest grade in the world, and five gold and silver medals corroborate the fact. They are economical and nutritious and are used by the leading kennels in the United States and Europe.

The Swiss Mountain Kennels have the following to say about them:

SWISS MOUNTAIN KENNELS, GERMANTOWN, PA.

Gentlemen:—I have used Excelsior biscuits now for about five years and find them perfectly satisfactory in all respects. The dogs are not only fond of them, but even when used exclusively have always agreed splendidly with them, keeping them generally in a good healthy trim.

I have several times recommended them to other parties and have never failed to find them otherwise than pleased with them. I would here thank you for your prompt attention to all orders. I am perfectly willing you should publish anything I have said formerly or at the present time in regard to the cakes. Yours truly,

Dear Sirs:—In my expedition to the arctic regions we used large quantities of your biscuits, dog cakes and "armebis." These goods were all you had claimed them to be and even more.

"Armetis" is the best combination food—bread and meat—I ever saw. It is simply ideal. Our men liked it exceedingly, and never tired of it. If necessary we could have sustained life and maintained strength upon it alone, and a surprisingly small quantity at that.

Our draught dogs thrived amazingly upon your dog cakes.

For our next expedition you may be sure your goods will be ordered in still larger quantities.

Sincerely yours, WALTER WELLMAN.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST

We shall commence January 26 a most graphically written series of articles, fully illustrated, descriptive of Alaska and the Pacific Coast, by Hon. A. K. Delaney, who has frequently traversed the entire route. Mr. Delaney is an attorney of national reputation, practising before federal and state courts. His pleadings are noted for their fluency, and he has injected into his articles the same grace and style which have won the closest attention of the courts, and will win that of his readers.

Starting from Chicago he takes the reader with him on his transcontinental ride to the Puget Sound country, thence to Victoria, B. C., and the famous Inland Passage, considered one of the wildest, most broken and rugged regions of North America. A sketch of Vitus Bering, and his discoveries, directed by Peter the Great of Russia, with a resume of the Russian occupation, is here given. Then the reader is taken to Sitka, the site of Fort St. Michael, founded in 1799, to the mining camps of British Columbia, the gold discoveries of Alaska, the Treadwell mine and mill, and to the seal islands; then follow descriptions of Alaska Indians, the Alaskan glaciers, the civil government and the people of Alaska, the coast line steamers, and a hundred and one highly interesting features in connection with Uncle Sam's far north possessions. The illustrations will be direct from photographs, by the halftone process, and the whole will form a most valuable and instructive series for sportsmen and tourists alike.

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE

BY HERBERT A. WEEKS

Daaquam Hunting and Fishing Association

"Ye who love the haunts of Nature, love the sunshine of the meadow,
Love the shadow of the forest, love the wind among the branches,
And the rain shower, and the snowstorm, and the rushing of great rivers,
Through their palisades of pine trees, and the thunder in the mountains,
Whose innumerable echoes flap like eagles in their eyries,
Ye whose hearts are fresh and simple, who have faith in God and Nature, listen to this simple story."

The land of the moose, caribou, and red deer, bear, wolf, beaver, otter, marten, where Nature in her unspeakable grandeur rules supreme; the forest primeval scarce trodden by the foot of man, vast lakes and rivers teeming with their finny denizens, as God created them, unsullied by the sordid greed of men.

Not the tourist-haunted, hotel-infested near-by mountain range is to be our goal, but the heart of the untrodden Canadian wilderness, far from human habitations.

Who will follow us? Who can and will for a brief interval lay aside their everlasting money-getting, their ambitious struggle for wealth, power and renown, and in the cool recesses of the dark forest, under the restless, fragrant, moaning pines, on the placid bosom of the lonely mountain lakes, by the ever rolling, rushing streams, seek what they are sure to find, what is worth more than all the wealth the world affords, what is simply priceless to those who know how to value God's gifts—health and happiness.

There is a heartfelt, kindly feeling of sympathy for those whose backs are almost broken under the never ceasing, insatiable demands of modern business. Can their toil be lightened? Can their minds really know repose and freedom from care and worry? Briefly, can their lives be made happier?

If only a very few are convinced and won over by these feeble pen pictures of the reality, the effort will not have been in vain.

It is those who have seldom or never handled rod or gun, who, accustomed all their lives to brick walls and pavements, cabs and elevated roads, consider our invitation for a trip to the bush about as appropriate for their own needs as a balloon ascension.

EARLY FALL IN THE BUSH

We are bound north, and however incongruous our rifles and rods may seem to the hot, tired throng through which we push our way at the Grand Central Depot, we know what bliss awaits us, and with happy anticipation check our grips through to Quebec and take our places in the Montreal sleeper, with oh! such a sense of relief to get away from the crowded, noisy city, the never ending struggle for existence.

Travel is light and the car cool. We seek our berths early, sleep soundly and roll into Montreal next morning just in time for a quick breakfast, and transfer to the parlor car on the Canadian Pacific. We can hardly believe that there could be such a difference in the atmosphere; at least twenty degrees cooler than that in New York.

After leaving Quebec, a run of several hours brings us to a small station where we are welcomed by a big, brawny Frenchman who is awaiting us. Horses are here in readiness, and after a comfortable night at the small tavern, we start at break of day. What a drive! Good roads and fast horses; up hill and down dale; habitations less and less frequent; a halt for dinner and away again.

At four p. m. we reach the place where a change of horses awaits us, then on again, up a steep hill, from whose crest at last we can see the "Bush," stretching like a trackless ocean, as far as the eye can reach. At eight p. m. we reach the club house, an unpretending log cabin, roomy and comfortable, delightfully situated on the bank of a broad stream, shaded by lofty pines. How delightfully fragrant is the air, laden with the perfume of the balsam? Our Indian or half breed guides are awaiting us and their cheery faces, magnificent physique and blissful contentment make us almost envy them their calling. What kindly memories their faces evoke; how hearty is their welcome, and what a supper they have for us!

As we light our pipes and discuss old times, we examine with interest our birch bark canoes in which we have traveled many a mile; tent, pots, pans and provisions are made ready for our still more distant journeyings. We have shot the red deer many times within range of the club house, and trout are to be had without limit, but our present goal is an unknown lake discovered by chance in one of our Winter hunts, and as recent rains have raised the water in the stream, an immediate start will save many a weary drag over the shallows.

Long before the sun has climbed the trees, the canoes are loaded with our camp equipage and we are gliding along in the swollen current, under the powerful strokes of the Indians. It is fifty miles, as the crow flies, to the forks, and we propose to make it in one day if the water is high enough to shoot the rapids. So wild is the region that it is as yet unvisited by the lumberman, hence the grand old trees close to the margin of the stream are still spared and their lofty sun-tinted foliage renders the scene indescribably beautiful. The roar of the rapids ahead warns us to reconnoiter before plunging into the unknown, for many a life has been lost by recklessly attempting to shoot rapids where no canoe could possibly live. Strange as it may seem, neither of the Indians can swim a stroke, and our daily bath is a weird mystery to them, and is doubtless regarded as a religious rite. We now haul our canoes close to shore and await the return of our chief, who has gone ahead along the bank to see if the course is practicable. He reports "big water," which in his broken English means a dangerous rapid. He inspires confidence, however, with his remark, "I go through."

A lazy, shiftless, dissipated Indian he may be in civilization, but now he commands respect. On his knees, bracing himself against the sides of the canoe, hatless, his straight, black hair streaming in the wind, his breast exposed, his sinewy, brown arms bared to the shoulder, he grasps his paddle, conscious that one false stroke may send us both to eternity. With a strong sweep the canoe shoots out into midstream, and before we realize it we are in the midst of the rushing water. How it boils and moans and surges! Our frail bark rocks from side to side and, as if possessed with life, skims through the whirlpool, dodges the rocks on either hand, and fairly leaps o'er the sunken reefs. Half blinded with the flying spray our eyes dimly discern the grim, dark crags whose ragged edges, like the jaws of some horrid monster, seem yawning to engulf us. Now we are heading in a direct line for a huge bowlder larger than a freight car. If we strike it there will not be left a piece of bark large enough to tell the story of disaster. Strong is the temptation to turn one's head and see if the Indian realizes our peril. He knows his business and never flinches or falters. If he heads for the rock the deflection of the water will pass us along in safety; if he heads away from it, the chances are one hundred to one that we will be swept down broadside and wrecked. In less time than it takes to tell it, we have left the bowlder many hundred yards behind and, with the velocity of an express train, down, down we go through the seething foam. Now the river narrows and we pass under the shadow of gigantic hemlocks whose long arm-like boughs, stretching far over the troubled waters, seem to warn us back from a danger still to be encountered, for just then we hear the distant boom of falling waters, like the roar of breakers on a rock-bound coast. We know too well its meaning—a perpendicular fall of not less than ten feet at low water! Can our chief have miscalculated the height of the stream? To leap that fall is a feat never before attempted, but no choice is given us now. The speed at which we are rushing along will suffice for us to leap the fall but the danger is in diving and being sucked back into the maelstrom. No time for words. To lighten her bow I grasp the sides of the canoe and throw my head and body back till my face is turned upward to the sky. The very instant the prow of the canoe reaches the edge of the fall the chief bends his body back, face upward, far out of the canoe, and with a wild yell that in the pounding and hiss of the water seems like a whisper, we leap the fall as prettily as a salmon, land in the water almost horizontally, and with a few strong sweeps of the paddle we reach smooth water where we breathe a sigh of relief and start baling out the three or four buckets of water shipped coming down. The first moose killed, the first salmon taken, are epochs in the life of a sportsman, but the shooting of the first real rapid and fall is a revelation that must be experienced to be appreciated.

As we are now pretty hungry, we land on a shady, sandy beach, and remain long enough to "bile the kettle" and lunch on fried pork, with a cup of tea hot enough to melt lead. We cannot linger long if we wish to take advantage of the high water, so we embark once more. The rapids now become more frequent but the channel is smooth and we make rapid headway. The sun is just about kissing the tops of the trees with a warm good night as we reach the forks; and as we round the bend in the river the long stretch of dead water is flecked with its golden beams.

A herd of red deer, cooling themselves in the lily pads just out of rifle range, get our wind and make off. The trout are jumping everywhere, and having chosen a site for our camp I get out my rod and, choosing the first two large flies that come to hand, I make a cast in a deep pool at the mouth of a little stream that empties into the main river. Hardly have the feathery, fluttering decoys touched the smooth, dark surface of the pool, when with a voracious rush and a flash of yellow light, the jaws of a trout close on the nearest fly, and as I strike the dainty silk line twangs like a fiddle string. What a beauty he is! Stanch, and full of grit, he fights for his life, his white-edged, red fins appearing ever and anon above the surface of the water as I play him back and forth. The trusty rod bears the strain well; and it is a strain; but the pool is deep, with few obstructions, and I soon have him with gills distended gasping in the shoal water. With the end of his broad tail on the toe of my boot his snout reaches to my knee. As night is coming on rapidly I do not try for more, as he will furnish a moderate supper for four hungry men.

[illegible] on our fragrant bed of "sappan" and [illegible] at dawn, as we have some work to do [illegible]

[illegible] with provisions for at least six weeks, we decide to make a "cache" here at the forks. About one hundred and fifty pounds of flour, pork, sugar, beans, etc., are packed in a wooden box and rubber canoe bag, and by means of a strong rope over a crosspiece lashed to two trees, are hoisted high in the air. Bears are expert climbers, so we have to choose a small, green sapling for a crosspiece, on which Bruin could not balance himself. This lightening of our load will help us in getting over the shoals, and one man can return at any time for what we have left behind.

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE—READY FOR THE HUNT

Our rapid progress is at an end now, for we have started up the other branch of the river, and, except in the dead water, we have to contend with quite a current. 'Tis always the unexpected that happens, and in a game country the proper place for your rifle is in your hands at all times. The stream shallows to such an extent that the Indians have to drag the canoes. We wade along with our rifles for a while, but find scrambling over the slippery rocks difficult work, so presently lay our rifles in the canoe and push ahead, perhaps a hundred yards, when out from the bank spring four good sized caribou—two bulls and two cows—which linger about forty seconds in midstream to have a look at the intruders, and then with a whisk of their tails disappear in the bush on the opposite side. We take the hint.

One mile an hour, dragging heavily laden canoes, is about all that can be accomplished, and by noon the water is pouring through the cracks, and we have to stop for repairs. The canoes are emptied, taken out of the water and turned bottom side up. They ought to be allowed to dry, but if you are in a hurry, a firebrand held close to the bark will dry the surface sufficiently. Out comes the frying pan in which resin is melted and mixed with fishoil, then by means of a cotton rag wrapped around the end of a stick, the surface of the bark around the crack in the canoe is smeared with this mixture; a piece of cotton cloth is laid over the crack and the smearing process repeated. Fifteen minutes' exposure to the air will make it waterproof, and, strange to say, I have always found that the driest canoe is one bandaged from end to end.

We could see the dead water ahead of us when we launched the canoes, and it was a welcome sight, for it is tiresome work in the shoals. We have proceeded but a little way when the chief suddenly grasps something in the water and, hol[illegible] it up, remarks with characteristic [illegible]se [illegible]airs." His words sent a thrill of [illegible]ry nerve, for we have had many [illegible] this very incident has been the [illegible]oose. 'Tis a single moose hair about two inches long which he holds between thumb and forefinger. The fact of finding it floating in the middle of the stream proves that it has been shed recently. The old fellow is undoubtedly cooling his heels and his legs in the cold water not many miles away, perhaps within a few hundred yards. We are determined not to be taken off our guard this time, so, with rifle at full cock, we paddle along as silently as the "dead steered by the dumb." No words of mine can do justice to the scene. This is the longest stretch of dead water we have thus far entered. The river in places is considerably more than one hundred yards wide, dotted now and then with little islands, any one of which may conceal the huge body of a moose. I cannot help thinking of dear old "Natty Bumpo" and his marvelous escapes from the Indians. We are as much on the alert as if we expected a deadly ambush.

Rounding an abrupt bend our hearts are set beating by the familiar word "Reynal!" in a scarcely audible hiss from one of the Indians. Sure enough, full three hundred yards away, knee deep in the cool stream, stands a bull moose. Lazily he flaps his ears, looks at the canoes, and very leisurely proceeds toward the bush on the side where he entered. The wind favors us, and, crouching low in the canoe and paddling close to the bend, we quickly disembark. The water is above our armpits, but we have no notion of risking a shot from the canoe at such a range. Carefully we creep to where we can catch a glimpse of him. He has left the water and entered the bush, but evidently has not got our scent, for in another moment he comes out of the bush again on a sharp walk to cross the stream. Hopeless it seems at that distance, but we know it is our only chance. We raise our sights and fire twice in quick succession. One bullet strikes him in the shoulder, the other goes over him. The bull has now reached deep water and is swimming. Three more shots are fired, and two of them take effect as he crawls out on the opposite bank, and lay him at rest.

A "feast or a famine;" that is the hunter's life! We have nearly a thousand pounds of fresh meat, and yet in twenty-four hours we will probably have to fall back on salt pork. Meanwhile our menu consists of roast rib, boiled tongue, muffler, and best of all, the delicious marrow bones.

Skinning so large an animal as a moose is quite an undertaking, and the Indians tan and dress the skins, for moccasins, as soft as chamois, white, brown or yellow, whichever color they prefer. I have assisted at the process many times. The only material used is soap, a small supply of which is carried with us. The beautiful soft finish is due solely to the skillful and patient handling of the operator. The best results require for one skin six or seven hours' hard work, and repeated on the following day.

STANDS UP FOR THE SMALL BORE GUN

San Antonio, Tex.

Editor American Field:—If ever an example was needed to illustrate the old saying that "one must go away from home to hear the news," such example is most brilliantly furnished by 10-Bore of San Antonio, who, in the American Field of October 20, goes to considerable trouble to ridicule Calumet's article on quail shooting in California with a 16-gauge Purdey ejector gun. I wish to remark right here (and here is where the aforesaid adage gets in its work) that if 10-Bore will stop wasting stationery, to say nothing of space in the American Field, and localize his observations, he can find right here on West Commerce Street in San Antonio, more men using 16-gauge (or smaller) guns, who will shoot him to a standstill, than he ever dreamed of. If 10-Bore is a stranger in San Antonio (and certainly no sportsman acquainted here would write as he did) he may get considerable interesting information regarding small bores if he will take the trouble to make a few inquiries among San Antonio sportsmen as to what guns our most successful field and trap shots have used for the past four or five years in this part of Texas. He will also find one gun store at least where no loaded shells for 10-gauge guns can be had, there being practically no demand for such ammunition, and all orders for shells of that size have to be loaded by hand; while at the very same store 16-gauge shells loaded with about every variety of nitro powder, can be bought by the thousand.

Should such an investigation be unsatisfactory to 10-

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE—"WITH THE END OF HIS TAIL ON THE TOE OF MY BOOT, HIS SNOUT REACHES TO MY KNEE"

Bore, I suggest that he look over the trap shooting columns of the American Field of August 24, 1893, where he will see the following note from Jno. Watson, Burnside, Ill.: "Mr. A. B. Critzer won first money on straight score (10 live birds) standing at the 12-gauge mark and using a 24-gauge gun." This is nothing very remarkable, especially to those of us who have seen him do the same thing over and over again in Texas; but I merely wanted to quote Mr. Watson, as he is reliable authority for what appears over his name. Nobody will doubt a statement of that kind when it comes from John Watson. The same shooter, last Summer, broke 40 Blue Rocks straight—30 singles and 10 pairs—using a 20-gauge gun, and has made several 25 straights—15 singles and 5 pairs. He also scored 40 straight at El Paso standing at the 10-gauge rise, and 40 straight at Eagle Pass. He also killed 15 live pigeons straight at the last state shoot at Hempstead; which also reminds me that the target medal, open to teams of two shooters, was won by a San Antonio team consisting of Messrs. Vernor and George on a score of 48 out of 50, both men using 20-gauge guns. How well do I remember that race. Vernor had missed two birds and wound up with 23, while George had broken all up to his last bird. There was the Cuero Dutchman, Holzoppel (who belongs in Jack Brewer's class), stretched out at full length in the sun, and as the Colonel stepped up to the score, Dutchy said in passable English: "Lead him well, Joe." Then crack went the gun and the target was smashed into powder (as in fact were all that he shot at). They all seemed to get the center of the charge. The Colonel then came back to San Antonio and proceeded to convince doubtful people here that 25 straight was nothing, for the very next Sunday he broke 100 straight, al with this same 20-gauge gun. Some of our mathematical gun cranks (we have them here as elsewhere) have ever since then been trying to figure out how many more he would have broken had he used a 10-gauge or 12-gauge.

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE—"WE DECIDE TO MAKE A 'CACHE' AT THE 'FORKS' "

Really this ridicule of small bore guns get tiresome. If there's any two men in San Antonio, or I'll not bar any two men in Texas—and it's a big state—who can kill any more ducks, quails, jacksnipes or doves with 10-bore guns than Gus Critzer and Oscar Guessaz will with 20-gauge guns, I would like to know where they live. I don't mean seining the air with 1¼ ounces of shot trying to net a whole flock of birds. The 10-bores would have the advantage there. I am only curious to know of any two men who will make a larger percentage of good, clean kills with a 10-bore gun than these two men can with their 20-bores. I have hunted in company with these small bores continually for the last six years, and have seen some of the best game shots in the United States, but I never yet have seen guns which would kill any farther or kill any oftener than these small bores in the hands of several people living here. I used a 16-gauge last week at Mitchell's Lake, and I killed one pair of mallards just as dead as if I had used an 8-bore; at least they fell just as fast. My companion used a 24-gauge. We killed eleven ducks (all we shot at), fourteen jacksnipes and some sixty-five quails and doves. On our trip this week we got one redhead, four jacksnipes, twenty-two quails and seventy doves, and this is about our average. The number of doves which a man kills here is regulated entirely by his requirements. We could have killed two hundred and fifty to three hundred just as well. Last Winter three 24-gauge guns in Mexico killed one hundred and sixty-two ducks, five sandhill cranes, two geese and some fifty jacksnipes and curlew.

It is because of some five or six years' constant experience in company with 20-gauge and 24-gauge guns—the above named exploits of which are not by any means exceptions—that I object to 10-Bore's ridiculous statements. Why; let's see. Wasn't it two 20-bores, or the men who used them rather, which so aroused the envy of the inner circle of our leading gun club here, that one of its members wrote them up in the AMERICAN FIELD last Spring as game-hogs, declaring that these two men had killed eight hundred ducks in two days? One man used a 20-gauge and the other a 24-gauge gun. The people are really too hard to please. 10-Bore says a 16-gauge is no good, especially a 16-gauge built by Purdey of London. (That particular make of gun seems to worry him, but all the same I wish I had one.) A 16-gauge, he says, only cripples qualls, while on the other hand considerable hullaballoo is raised by a gun club man who says 20-bores are exterminating the ducks. Now we haven't many 10-bores in this city. I know of two for certain. We have one man here, and he may or may not use a 10-bore who is continually talking about shooting. In fact he is often mistaken by strangers for Aimo, and if he shoots his gun as much as he does his mouth, it should make a good open pattern for qualls.

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE—"WE HAVE STARTED UP THE OTHER BRANCH"

The killing of twelve quails in thirteen shots, by 10-Bore, in the absence of further particulars looks suspicious. I have seen that many killed at one shot; in fact almost any negro boy can duplicate the above performance in this country, especially where cover is poor and rail fences are common. Another thing I would like to mention, and that is, however much 10-Bore may have had to divide his quails with a 16-gauge shooter in California, he need ever fear that he will have to do so in company with a half dozen of shooters here who use 16-gauge, 20-gauge and even 24-gauge guns: and if he will manage to kill enough for his own individual use, so that the 16-gauge men will not have to divide with him, I'll guarantee that he will be welcome to all he gets. Nor will anyone begrudge him the enormous advantage (?) accruing to the use of his 10-bore Lefever. As to his being able to lug around a ten-pound gun and the increased weight of ammunition for such, and also his ability to pay for the same, I have nothing to say. He may carry a 4-bore and one hundred and seventy-five pounds of shells loaded with a hatful of powder and shot if he so desires, but wherein does he derive any advantage? 10-bore guns in this section are few and far between. They are scarcer than Democratic roosters since the last election. I believe that it is entirely safe to assert that we can match every 10-bore in town with a 24-gauge, while 20-bores outnumber 10-bores three to one, and 16-bores fifty to one.

An article similar to that of 10-Bore, over the nom de plume of A Minor, appeared in a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD, and as implying a lack of experience in gun matters the signature appears superfluous. After a graphic description of the death of a mallard by "father's 10-bore Lefever," we are informed that the duck in question would have escaped from two 16-gauges. In A Minor's hands such would probably have been the case, yet I could pick out men here using 16-gauge guns who would have held a post-mortem examination over the corpse of that mallard, had they been there, before the parental 10-bore Lefever ever thought of going off. A Minor, and a great many others, have yet to learn that any gun, no matter what gauge, if properly loaded and pointed right, will kill game, no matter whether it is one ounce of shot from a 16-gauge, or three ounces from a 4-bore; only those pellets which actually hit the bird, are the ones that do the execution, and if four No. 6 shot from a 16-gauge or 20-gauge gun, loaded as it should be, strike a duck, that duck will just as surely be killed as though the same shot came from the 4-bore. The other two or three ounces which perforate the atmosphere on all sides as though a fish net had been drawn through it, cut no figure whatever. But it seems to be the prevailing idea that a gun which will scatter shot over an area as large as large as the Palmer House must necessarily be a killer. Perhaps it would where the sun was obscured by a few million ducks, but that is a different matter. I merely make my stand upon the lines laid down by 10-Bore and A Minor.

The small bore guns used here are all abnormally heavy, the 20-bores averaging seven pounds, and these guns are full choked and, using the maximum charge of nitro powder, simply cannot be outshot in penetration, as many of our 12-gauge men who formerly thought otherwise are now cheerfully admitting. It has been very well established that a 16-gauge or 20-gauge gun will kill ducks just as neatly and completely as a larger one, and moreover, they stay dead just as long. For an indifferent shot, or person possessing pot-hunting proclivities, the big scattergun has manifest advantages I must admit, but as neither 10-Bore or A Minor gave this as their reason when stating their preference for big guns, it is assumed that they would rather be burdened with a 10-bore gun and its ammunition to kill game which any seven pound 16-gauge gun would kill—that is if they could shoot it.

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE—"AND LAY HIM AT REST"

THREE WEEKS IN THE TEXAS PAN HANDLE

FORT WORTH, TEX.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I have lately spent three pleasant weeks in the Texas Pan Handle, "one of the biggest countries of its size" in the West, where I found ample room for hunting, but, outside the towns, no big game worthy of mention. I struck a game at Amarillo of sufficient size to satisfy my yearnings; but, as my friend R. Kipling would say, that is altogether another story. At Amarillo, however, in looking over the eastern dailies, I came across an item furnished by the Associated Press, so absurd in one respect that I think it deserves notice in the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD. It was an interesting though succinct report of the forest fires then prevailing in Eastern Arkansas, and the versatile space-filler who had been entrusted with that particular subject brought his thrilling little yarn to a close by saying that "grave fears are entertained for the safety of several hunting parties known to be in the bottoms, since no intelligence can be obtained from them." Our penny-a-liner might have been more explicit in regard to the nature of the "grave fears" excited within his breast; but the natural inference is that he fancied an Arkansas forest fire was more destructive in its nature than the deadly simoom of the desert, or even a misunderstanding between ward politicians, and we can imagine him shedding great tears of sympathy as he pictured to himself a disreputable looking heap of half-cooked hunter with a heat-b[illegible] in the foreground, while clouds of smoke [illegible] pall above the gloomy scene. What an [illegible] picture man who decorates the back "k[illegible] periodical! Or could he properly limn [illegible] surroundings as suggested without growing as lachrymosely sympathetic as our friend the reporter?

Now, as some of your readers know, I have frequently risked incineration by making hunting trips to the interior of darkest Arkansas, and I am surprised that I never before had a just appreciation of my own temerity. To express matters briefly: "I've bin thar a heap," and if I am half-cooked at the present time none of my acquaintances have discovered, or at least commented on, the fact. In 1887 I was in the White River bottoms during the prevalence of the most general forests fires that Arkansas has known for years, and I have yet to learn of a single instance where those fires resulted in the loss of human life. Your California correspondent, Novice, was in Arkansas during November of the year mentioned, and he will join me in saying that the country had never been drier since that notable "dry year" when the woods burned before; that the earth was covered with a coating of fallen leaves running from one inch to one foot in depth, and that he had to work "like fighting fire" to keep his own camp from going up in smoke. Still, there was never a time that the issue was in doubt; nor that an ordinarily active man, with a bush or a stick, could not have easily whipped out the line of fire and saved any particular scope of forest intact. With a high wind to fan it onward, fire sometimes travels remarkably fast, and wipes up miles of fencing before it, but this is never the case when the farmer is sufficiently wide awake to burn a strip a few yards wide around his field. The Arkansas forests are of hard wood—not of pine like those of Michigan and Wisconsin—and the forest, generally speaking, does not burn at all. The fallen leaves and decayed logs are consumed, and some of the undergrowth killed, but the heat is barely sufficient to char the bark on the standing timber. Canebrakes sometimes burn, and then the onlooker has to stand back a little, while he is treated to as lively a racket as the average small boy would wish to hear. Every individual cane joint pops as the heat strikes it, and some of the reports are as loud as that of a .32-caliber Winchester—a key note with which all sportsmen are acquainted. Unless a confirmed cripple, an invalid, or suffering from the jims, a hunter would have no trouble in moving back when the fire got too warm for him, for, even in the cane, there are a multitude of open sloughs where the bare ground offers a partial barrier to the fire's advance and exceptional facilities for the efforts of an energetic sprinter.

Just why "grave fears" were entertained for the safety of the hunters aforesaid, I am at a loss to understand. But, on the other hand, there is hardly a particle of doubt that the item quoted was read by sportsmen all over the country, and that more than one luckless fellow gave up what would have proven an enjoyable outing through fear of being barbecued in a sweet gum thicket, forty miles from the nearest settler, and without the benefit of clergy. Another forcible example of the power of printers' ink.

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE—"A FEAST OR A FAMINE"

One of the best hunting grounds in the Southwest to-day is that dual belt of swamp lands lying contiguous to Crowley's Ridge, which is followed by the St. Louis & Southwestern Railroad. The range is broad enough and wild enough to please the most fastidious; yet we learn that we must not enter this desirable territory until after it rains. Question the oldest inhabitants, and they will tell you that the fire sometimes sweeps over and destroys their range—to the extent of killing the grass and burning the mast upon which their hogs fatten—but ask them if the air at such times is odorous with the appetizing flavor of prematurely roasted pigs or overdone beef, and the man of the yarn galluses and white muslin shoelaces will laugh you to scorn. And when [illegible] porkers and decrepid milk cows can easily esc[illegible] devastating fury of those terrible conflagrations w[illegible] should not a man be intelligent enough to brin[illegible] corduroy nether garments out of the fire unsin[illegible] Brother Rowe, kindly count the nobs of your numer[illegible]

THE MICHIGAN STATE FISH AND GAME PROTECTIVE LEAGUE

Jackson, Mich.

Editor American Field:—The Michigan State Fish and Game Protective League, of which Judge John J. Speed, of Detroit, is president, and the leading sportsmen of the state members, met at Lansing on December 27, completed its organization and placed itself on record in favor of certain radical changes in the game and fish laws of the state.

The constitution adopted states the primary objects of the league to be the framing and procurement of laws for the protection of game and fish and the enforcement of such laws. Each fish, game or shooting club in the state may send three delegates to the annual meetings of the league, and acceptable individuals may become members.

At this meeting about thirty leading sportsmen of the state were present, and various amendments to the game and fish laws were suggested. The executive committee was ordered to frame and present to the Legislature a law to prohibit all Spring shooting, changing the open season for deer shooting so that it will commence October 10 and close November 1, making the open season for shooting deer the same in the upper as in the lower peninsula, making the open season for the killing of grouse, quails, partridges, etc., from October 1 to November 1. Fox, black or gray squirrels or rabbits are to be killed only from September 15 to December 31, inclusive, to prevent the use of ferrets in rabbit hunting, prescribing penalties sufficiently large for violating the game laws to make them circuit court offenses, preventing shooting from sailboats, steamboats or naphtha launches, prohibiting the killing of more than two deer in one season by any one person, and preventing the shipment of deer unless accompanied by the hunter.

Laws relative to the protection of fish were also favored. In the opinion of the league the trout season should open May 15 and close September 15, that no bass should be taken except by hook and line, that the meshes of nets should be so arranged as to catch no undersized fish, that there should be no spearing in inland lakes, that no trout or grayling should be sold, that no nets should be used in St. Clair River, and that all local fish laws should be abolished. Mr. A. R. Avery, of Port Huron, will place the above ideas in a bill to be introduced at the coming session of the Legislature.

The league is almost unanimously in favor of a law licensing hunters, similar to the one in effect in Canada, but it was deemed prudent not to attempt the passage of such an act at this time.

THE PROPOSED INDIANA GAME LAW

Elwood, Ind.

Editor American Field:—I have read in the American Field, with much interest, the articles of Mr. Hyatt L. Frost of Connersville, Mr. Walter Sharp of Indianapolis, and Mr. J. B. Stipp of Bedford, Ind., and being one who would like to see some changes in our game laws whereby our game may have more and better protection, I would also like very much to see more interest taken by the different gun clubs of the state. There are a great many clubs in the state of Indiana, and if they would only coöperate, I think the object could be accomplished. I would like to see rabbits protected, and will give as my reason that we have here in Elwood a class of people who go out under the pretense of shooting or hunting rabbits, and woe to anything that looks like game, even if it be a farmer's chicken or young turkey. I know of several cases where rabbits have been killed while carrying their young, and were used as food, it being done by foreigners who live here and work in the different factories. If we had a close season on rabbits, it would save many quails. I know we have men here who shoot quails out of season. I know also of an officer of the law, one who is sworn to protect and abide by the law, who shot quails before the open season. Now if men of this caliber violate the law and set such an example, how can we expect to have the game protected?

In the Fall of 1893 the Elwood Gun Club offered a reward of $10 for the conviction of any person shooting quails out of season. The result was that the farmers talked of keeping the members of the gun club off their places, stating that the gun club members wanted the quails for themselves, as they were better shots than most persons. This was not very encouraging, especially as this talk came from the very ones who should give their support to the good cause. If the farmers could only be [illegible] lators of the game law are the [illegible] we would then get their sup-[illegible] lish our purpose we must work [illegible] gun club appoint a committee to hold a conference with the representatives from their legislative district, and let these representatives of the people know what they want, and ask them to give it their support. If this is done I think we may then get a game law passed that will benefit every true sportsman. The proposed law meets with my approval. I rather prefer the open season on quails, say from November 1 to December 25. We all know how anxiously we look for the open season to arrive, and when it comes as late as November 10 some become impatient and shoot the birds before that time.

THE CHOICE OF A GUN

Washington, D. C.

Editor American Field:—In a recent number of the American Field I saw an article by I. Jim, who wished to know what make of gun to buy. I strongly recommend that he buy one of Parker Bros'. guns. Every American sportsman knows that the "old reliable" Parker gun is good, and that it will shoot and wear with the best of them. I. Jim seems to be concerned about the safety of a gun, and about a gun's shooting loose. Let me say to him right here that he need have no apprehension of the safety failing to work or of a sprung breech if he gets a Parker. Even should the gun spring in the breech (which I do not think it will, as I have been shooting one for five years steadily with heavy charges of nitro powders, and it is still as tight as when I bought it), it may be tightened by giving its hinge pin a turn to the right with a screwdriver. All of Parker Bros'. latest guns have this compensating hinge pin and are bored for nitro powders. Aside from these points, the Parker gun is, I think, the best gun for the money that a man can get, and if I. Jim will compare a Parker with any other gun of the same price I think he will coincide with me in my opinion.

A Parker gun can be put together at all times, whether the gun is cocked or not, and when the safety is placed at "safe" I think it is impossible for the gun to go off accidentally, unless it should be hurled over a precipice.

One of the best recommendations a gun can have is that it is used by a large number of sportsmen, and I think there are more Parker guns in the hands of the shooters in this country than of any other make, unless it be the L. C. Smith. All I. Jim needs to do is to compare the Parker with other guns of the same grade, and I feel warranted in saying that he will find it as good, if not better, than any of them.

NOTES

I wish to call the attention of West Virginia sportsmen, and especially the officers of the Game and Fish Association, that hardly a train enters this state in the Fall of the year but what has on board of it one or more parties of hunters who call themselves sportsmen, but who, in part at least, were no better than game-hogs, and who came here, ostensibly to hunt like gentlemen sportsmen, but who really came for a frolic and to kill all the game they could regardless of the results. West Virginia people, sportsmen as well as others, welcome every true, gentlemanly, well behaved sportsman to her forests and fields, but to those who come here for a spree and to slaughter her game without stint, as has been done by some, she has no quarter; and what is more, we are going to put a stop to such work. We have paid tribute long enough to the Baltimore and Boston game markets, and although I am an old market-hunter I know whereof I speak. Covers that formerly furnished pheasants and turkeys by the hundred now yield but a few dozen and they are only to be found in the most inaccessible localities. Formerly pheasants could be found along nearly every mountain road, squirrels were so plentiful that they nearly ruined the farmer's corn crop, and wild pigeons came in such flocks as to almost hide the sun for hours, but those days are past and gone and the sportsmen of this state see the great necessity of protecting from the game-hog what little game there is left and give it time to restock our fields and forests. Accompanied by my English setter Countess, I recently visited a former famous shooting ground, but we traveled far and long ere our labors were rewarded with the sight of game. At last Countess, standing on the bank of a beautiful mountain stream, threw her head into the air and came to a stand, and a moment later a pair of flashing, gray wings gave evidence that her sensitive nostrils were not mistaken. A second later a sharp report rang out upon the mountain air and the old market-shooter rejoiced in the fact that he had made a clean kill. Countess moved forward and pointed dead bird, when there was a flash to the right of her and another pheasant took wing. The steel tubes were quickly brought in line, the gun cracked again and the old-time market-shooter, as the smoke cleared away sufficiently, saw that his second shot was also successful. Countess retrieved the dead and the old pot-shot dropped down on his hands and knees on the bank of the stream to quench his thirst. As I did so a pair of pheasants flushed from nearly in front of me. I made a wild scramble to reach my gun, but I was too slow and the birds escaped, going farther into the dense woods. A little later Countess made an inexcusable flush and was chided in language more forcible than elegant. Still farther on I bagged another bird of the same variety. We pressed on, Countess and I, and had the good fortune to grass three more before the gathering twilight warned us that we should turn our steps homeward; and as I reached home and laid the game upon a table for my friends to admire, I felt more than satisfied with the result of the hunt and the excellent work of my little setter, for such bags are seldom made nowadays.

Clarksburg, W. Va. Cumberland.

Mr. W. H. Heming and Mr. Casper W. Whitney have gone to the haunts of the musk ox and wood buffalo in the far North for the purpose of studying the habits and characteristics of those animals. Mr. Heming is quite an able descriptive writer, while Mr. Whitney is a clever artist, and they have gone to the locality mentioned for material for the pen and the brush. A writer who interviewed them at Winnipeg, Manitoba, speaks of their trip as follows: "They have mapped out a route northward from Edmonton, 900 miles north to Fort Rae, on the Mackenzie River, which follows generally the waterways used by the Hudson Bay Company, making the company's posts their sources of supply. This will enable them to travel 'light,' and they hope to accomplish the object of their trip and return to civilization by April. From Fort Rae they will swerve off to the east, and the young explorers will skirt the northern coast of the continent, finally coming home again down the westerly shore of Hudson's Bay and reach civilization at Lake Winnipeg. They expect to penetrate the Barren Lands until they encounter the musk ox, and after securing data will retrace their steps southward and invade the territory inhabited by the remnants of the wood buffalo. During this season of the year the temperature in that part of British America into which Heming and Whitney are going ranges from 50 to 70 degrees below zero. To make this worse, there is no wood or other inflammable material during Winter in most parts of this region. For weeks at a time they will be unable to have a fire of any kind. For food they will have to depend almost entirely upon their skill as huntsmen. Musk ox, reindeer, wood bison, moose and caribou abound in this country, but they will have to eat the flesh raw most of the time, and without much, if anything, else to make it palatable. They will travel on snowshoes and transport their equipment and provisions on dog sleighs. They will sleep in Eskimo bags in the open air, using a canvas windbreak when necessary. The chief danger to be feared is the awful blizzards which sweep over that part of the continent during the Winter. These storms which blow across the Rocky Mountains are said to be worse than in any part of the world. Only one white man has ever penetrated the wilds into which they are going, and he did not go as far north as the present explorers have planned to travel. Some years ago one Pike went north to Great Slave Lake, and wrote a book about what he saw in that country, but Heming and Whitney hope to go many leagues beyond this point."

About the middle of last month Mr. Ames Apgar, of Gladstone, N. J., who was hauling wood from the woods to his house, had a novel experience with a partridge, as the ruffed grouse is called in that section of the country, and which is described by a correspondent as follows: "While Mr. Apgar was loading wood on his wagon in an old road, a partridge came out of the woods to the road and lit on one of the front wheels of the wagon, within two feet of where Mr. Apgar was standing. Mr. Apgar having had considerable experience in hunting these birds knew how difficult it was to get within shooting distance of them, and therefore was more than astounded when the bird remained on the wagon wheel as Mr. Apgar tossed a stick of wood onto the load. Mr. Apgar then stepped toward the bird and it flew to the hind wheel, but immediately returned to the front one when he stepped back again. Looking up, Apgar saw a hawk circling around not much above the tops of the trees. This explained the strange action of the partridge. It had come near to the man, its instinct telling it that its enemy, the hawk, would not dare attack it in his presence. After circling around a short time the hawk sailed away. Soon afterward the partridge flew back to the woods. The next day Apgar was at the same spot loading wood. Suddenly a partridge, presumably the same one, came flying out of the woods and lit on the ground close to his feet. He stooped down, and the bird not only permitted him to pick it up, but it nestled confidingly down in his arms. He glanced upward. The hawk was again circling about, no doubt intent on the capture of the partridge, but it soon departed as before. Apgar placed the partridge on the ground, but it did not go away. When he started to drive his load home, the bird fled to the top of the load, perched there, and did not leave it even when Apgar reached home. On the contrary, it permitted him to take it from the wagon and place it in a chicken coop, where it now is, apparently in the greatest content, and manifesting every evidence of pleasure when Apgar is in sight."

The Sportsmen's Fish and Game Association of Maine held a meeting on the afternoon of January 1, and, after listening to an able address from President Hersey, considered the recommendations suggested by the committee on legislation, which were as follows: "To make the penalty of illegally killing moose, caribou and deer, fine or imprisonment at the discretion of the court. That $40,000 annually be appropriated for use of the commissioners in enforcing the fish and game laws and for propagating fish and game. To provide for the transportation of game or parts of game to licensed taxidermists for purposes of mounting. To have three commissioners of inland fish and game, with a salary of $1,500, and to have power to make rules and regulations not in conflict with general laws relative to taking fish and game. To confine damages to actual damages in actions of trespass committed in wild or unimpoverished land for hunting and fishing. To prohibit the shooting of moose, caribou or deer by use of 'jacklights,' so called." Treasurer Choate then made his report showing the receipts of the association to be $855.22 and the expenditures $499.62. After some further routine business the following gentlemen were elected officers for the ensuing year: President, Eugene M. Hersey, Bangor; vice-presidents, Chas. A. Marston, Skowhegan; F. H. Appleton, Bangor; Edwin C. Burleigh, Augusta; Wm. P. Frye, Lewiston; A. M. Spear, Gardiner; A. R. Nickerson, Boothbay; J. H. Kimball, Bath; directors, E. M. Hersey, Bangor; J. C. Holman, Farmington; J. F. Hill, Augusta; J. F. Sprague, Monson; J. H. Kimball, Bath; G. H. Fisher, Winthrop; G. G. Gifford, Auburn; L. T. Carleton, Winthrop; F. M. Simpson, Carmel; secretary, E. C. Farrington; treasurer, W. S. Choate; superintendent, J. A. Fairbanks, Augusta; committee on legislation, F. E. Timberlake, Phillips; J. F. Hill, Augusta; J. F. Sprague, Monson; L. T. Carleton, Winthrop; E. C. Farrington, Augusta; A. M. Spear, Gardiner; executive committee, E. M. Hersey, Bangor; J. F. Hill, Augusta; A. R. Jenness, Fryeburg; A. M. Spear, Gardiner.

A LEWISTON (Me.) paper tells of a race between a railroad train and a moose as follows: "Between Island Falls and Crystal, about thirty miles out of Houlton, the engineer saw a huge moose on the track, watching the approaching train and evidently undetermined whether to derail it or jump off and let it go about its business. The engineer blew a succession of sharp blasts with the whistle. Mr. Moose evidently took this for the word 'Go' for a race between himself and the huge monster which he saw approaching. At any rate, he turned, and, with the train not more than a dozen rods from him, he set sail down the track. The train was moving at the rate of forty miles an hour, but the moose flew like the wind and kept his distance. The passengers heard the warning blasts of the whistle, and knew that something was on the track, but not until the train reached Crystal station did they learn that they had been racing with a moose. For a quarter of a mile the big animal kept up the almost incredible pace necessary to keep ahead of the train, and then, as if satisfied that he had convinced his competitor that there wasn't anything in the steam line that was coming up into Aroostook and do him in a sprinting match, he left the track and plunged into the woods."

AFTER leaving the gold camp I went to the Sacramento Mountains and spent six weeks. Game was not so abundant as I expected, the deer, turkeys and bears having drifted to the lower end of the range and across to the Guadalupe Mountains. As I was confined, owing to important business matters, to a limited scope of country, I found it impossible to follow the game. The weather during all my stay (until November 15) was too warm to permit the saving of meat without the greatest of care, therefore only a few deer (and no other game) was killed, except just enough for table use. Hon. S. P. Ascarate, Receiver of Public Moneys for this land district, recently returned from his ranch in Mexico. From his description the section visited by Mr. Ascarate must be a sportsmen's paradise, as the streams are abundantly supplied with fish, lagoons with geese and ducks innumerable, and the gay and festive antelopes gaze with open-eyed wonder at passing horsemen. In the foothills adjacent, numerous mule deer are also to be found, while higher on the mountains one can find cinnamon and black bears. An expedition will be fitted out in a short time to visit that section at the foot of the Sierra Madre Mountains.

Las Cruces, N. M. W. P. F.

I WAS astonished a few days since to hear a loud crash of glass in my kitchen and also to hear the girls rushing in all directions. Going to the kitchen I found a cock quail dead on the floor close to the window, and the glass of the window in a thousand fragments. I am certain no blow from a man's hand could have in like manner demolished the glass. It is believed a hawk was after the bird but no one saw it. Another extraordinary thing happened a few days ago while I was out with one of the members of the Robin's Island Club. A cock pheasant got up near the shore and flew about three hundred yards out on the bay, and dropped into the water. We watched the bird and saw him commence to swim and he was not long in reaching the shore again, about 500 yards from where he started. Although seldom taking voluntarily to the water, the pheasant is quite at home in it. I raised about 400 pheasants last season, and have a large stock of hens for the coming year, but I found that my birds were inbred too closely, so I have sent to England for a new stock of cocks, which I expect will arrive in about a week.

A HUNTING party composed of Jim Reubens, Nat White and Tom Bell, of Lewiston, Idaho, accompanied by "Pile of Clouds" and "Lazy Coon," of Little Salmon, returned recently from a hunting trip that extended away beyond the mouth of Little Salmon River, and during which they claim to have killed sixty deer, five elks, three brown and black bears, and caught three hundred salmon and over seven hundred trout. One day the party met a large grizzly bear, into whose skin they pumped twenty shots from repeating rifles without any serious effect. When the bear had disappeared over the mountain they returned to camp, thinking themselves very brave, but the next day when they come to look at the bear's tracks and found that his skin was impervious to their bullets, they felt that they had met with a lucky escape.

ON Janury 1 the sportsmen of Sussex County, N. J., and others interested in the preservation of game, in response to a call that had previously been issued, met at Newton and organized the Sussex County Game and Fish Protective Association, electing the following gentlemen as officers; President, J. Brittin Hendershot; vice-president, Thomas A. Decker; treasurer, Lewis M. Morford; secretary, William W. Woodward Jr.; committee on by-laws, Robert T. Johnson, Nathan Hart, and the president, secretary and treasurer. The association will hold another meeting to-day, January 12, when it is expected that representatives from each township in the country will be present. The members unanimously favor the passage of a law making the open season for quails, grouse, rabbits, woodcocks and squirrels from October 15 to December 1.

THE committee appointed recently by Nebraska sportsmen to draft a new law for the protection of prairie chickens and quails in that state has made a report and recommends that the open season henceforth be from September 1 to November 1. Heretofore it has been from September 1 to January 1, and the result is that prairie chickens are growing very scarce in that state. The committee further recommended that the state appoint game wardens, whose duty it should be to enforce the law and arrest violators. The committee also suggests that imprisonment be the penalty for violating the law, and that non-resident sportsmen should procure a license before they can hunt or fish within the state. An effort will be made to have a law embracing the above enacted at the session of the Legislature this Winter.

MR. A. G. GREEN, of Reading, Pa., President of the Berks County Fish and Game Association, will prepare a bill for the better protection of game in his state and submit it to the state Legislature this Winter for its consideration. Before the bill is submitted to the Legislature it will be presented to associations of sportsmen in Montgomery, Bucks, Chester, Northampton and other eastern counties for their approval. Much work is already being done among the representatives from the various districts, so that when the matter comes before them for consideration they will be prepared to act in accordance with the needs and wishes of their constituents.

THE St. Louis County (Minn.) Fish and Game Protective Association has been giving much consideration to the changes necessary in the game and fish laws of that state, and will recommend the following to the Legislature as the proper open seasons: Ducks, September 1 to December 1; deer, bull moose and caribou, October 15 to November 15; no fawns of any deer, moose or caribou to be killed at any season; prairie chickens and ruffed grouse, September 15 to November 15; rice birds and rail birds, same as ducks; speckled trout, April 1 to September 1; sale of all game fish prohibited.

THE sportsmen of North Dakota are awakening to the fact that if the game of their section of the country is protected from almost complete annihilation, something must be done at once to secure better game laws than they now have, and it is probable that a meeting will be held soon to discuss what action will be taken looking to this end. The organization of a state sportsmen's association is under consideration and is meeting with general approval. It is quite probable that a new game law will be enacted in that state this Winter.

IT is said that in the Bad Lands of the M[illegible] are being slaughtered by the hundreds by [illegible] Indians and that at the present rate of de[illegible] not be many years before they will be a[illegible] buffalo. The Montana Democrat, spea[illegible] this slaughter, said: "Percy Dorkings, [illegible] returned, last Sunday, from the Missouri River, reports that a band of Indians, in the short distance of forty miles, between the mouth of the Musselshell and Rocky Point, had killed one hundred deer, and would have killed more had they not been run out of the country by the cowboys."

A MEETING of sportsmen was recently held at Malone, N. Y., at which time the Franklin County Fish and Game Protection Club was organized, the purposes of the organization being to stop illegal fishing and hunting, assist in the preservation of game, and punish violators of the game and fish laws of the state. The officers of the club are as follows; President, George W. Cushman; vice-president, F. P. Wilson; secretary, Henry C. Skinner; treasurer, E. W. Knowlton; trustees, George S. Howard, F. L. Turner, J. O. Ballard, W. L. Collins and F. O. Conant.

THE sportsmen of Maine will this Winter ask their state Legislature to amend the game laws of that state so as to insure the complete protection of imported game birds for a term of years, or until the birds may become well established, as they contemplate introducing quite a large number of the black game birds of Norway and Sweden. Already a beginning has been made at East Auburn, but they desire to increase the number largely if they can get protection for them for from three to five years.

AT a meeting recently of the Game and Fish Commission of Ohio, it was decided to make an attempt to stock the forests of the state with pheasants by renting a farm in Mercer County to be used as a breeding farm. Experiments, it is said, will also be made on some of the islands in Lake Erie. Of course, to make a success of this project a law would have to be enacted for the protection of these birds for not less than three years—probably five years would be better—and then strictly enforced.

STATE Game and Fish Warden D. W. Fernandez, of Wisconsin, in his annual report recommends the appointment of an attorney, whose services will be at the command of the department of fish and game and food and dairies, in order that this department may get more effective work than it can from the district attorneys, who have too much of other work to do to act promptly.

MR. CHARLES R. OSBORN, editor of the Sault Ste. Marie News, has been appointed game and fish warden of Michigan by Governor Rich. The term of office is four years and the salary $1,200 and expenses. There was quite a scramble for this appointment and Editor Osborn is to be congratulated on securing the plum.

IT is reported that Mr. C. J. Paterson of Chicago, a gentleman who has a Summer residence on the south shore of Fox Lake, has purchased a quantity of land adjoining his Summer home, which he purposes using as a preserve for game. He intends fencing the land and stocking it with deer and other wild game.

THE sportsmen of this state are taking some steps for the better protection of our game and fish. Our partridges and quails are being rapidly killed off, principally for the market, and I believe the only way to protect them is to stop their sale.

Port Huron, Mich. H. W. MAINES.

MR. H. D. GARDNER of Milwaukee, who has extensive interests in Waushara County, Wis., has been appointed game warden of that county, and illegal fishermen and game violators in that section will now be brought to an accounting.

THE Bergen County (N. J.) Game Protective Association recently assessed its members one dollar each for every twenty-five acres of land owned by them, the money thus obtained to be used to purchase quails for restocking purposes.

QUAILS are more plentiful in this section of Mississippi than before for a number of years, and fine sport is to be had with little effort.

Michigan City, Miss. CHAS. W. TWAY.

1895 Outlook

Straws show which way the wind blows and the number of large orders already placed for sundries indicates that the prod[illegible] of wheels next year will be fully as large as an[illegible]icipated [illegible] sanguine. Cushman & Denison, who make oilers for the [illegible] manufacturers and jobbers, are very much rushed on [illegible] ders and will make a larger stock than ever before. The [illegible] Pocket Oiler is being made even better than at present. In spite of the reduced price of wheels and the consequent tendency to use cheaper material, the "Perfect" Oiler will be used with almost the really high-grade wheels. They will also make large quantities of medium grade oilers as well as oiler holders and pump holders

Hunting

A WEEK WITH MR. THOS. HITCHCOCK

HICKORY VALLEY, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Perhaps it will be interesting to some of your readers to know what grand sport we have at Aiken, S. C., with the foxhounds. Mr. Thos. Hitchcock of Westbury, L. I., is now a half owner of my pack, known as Avent & Hitchcock pack. He has a beautiful winter home at Aiken, S. C., and the best and most convenient kennels that I have ever seen. His stable of hunters are all thoroughbreds of the very best blood, and some of them are the most noted racers and jumpers in America. He races them all the Summer and Fall through the North and East and hunts them during the Winter after the hounds, so they are always in the pink of condition and ready for six or eight hours' hard hunting. They are champion Gerina (he is well known, having twice won the championship for jumping in New York) Windbran, Oakwood, Grey Fox, The Pear, Daybreak and Latitude; all noted winners; also other good ones; which makes the greatest hunting stable in America. Mr. Hitchcock also has other sport for his friends; he has a track with hurdles and jumps of different kinds, and a jumping ring, and his horses and colts are schooled daily; he also has a polo ground, with some of the best polo ponies. Those who cannot ride can amuse themselves by playing golf, shooting from the trap, and in the field, fishing, driving, etc. There is some kind of amusement to attract everyone who likes outdoor sport, and the beautiful mild climate gives every visitor the opportunity of spending about fifteen hours every day in first-class sport of some kind. There are already quite a number of visitors from New York. Mr. Thos. Hitchcock and family, Mr. F. R. Hitchcock, Mr. Pete Duryea and family, and Mr. Walice have taken houses and expect to spend the Winter; Mr. H. K. Vingut has arrived with quite a good string of horses; Mr. Aperton and family have taken a house; Mr. R. P. Carrel and family and Mr. Butler Duncan and family are others.

The country around Aiken is an open pine wood country with white sandy soil and slightly hilly; the hounds rarely follow a fox through any place that the horsemen cannot follow at a fast canter and there are but few fences. The only drawback to the country is that in dry windy weather it is impossible for hounds to do first-class work on the dry sandy soil. On wet, damp, foggy mornings our hounds make short work of the best red fox. In the past three years Mr. Hitchcock has put out about one hundred and fifty foxes. He has a gamekeeper that feeds them regularly every day in holes made for them, and the country for miles around is full of foxes. On Monday, December 17, I arrived at Aiken with forty-seven of our best hounds, and found Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock, Mr. F. R. Hitchcock, Mr. Pete Duryea, Mr. Walice, Mr. Harington and other New Yorkers anxiously waiting for the first hunt. On Wednesday morning at 6:30 a large crowd was well mounted ready for the first sport. Thirty of the best hounds were let out of the kennel, and in less than ten minutes the pack could be heard half a mile away on a fast trail.

Before the sun rose we had two foxes going at great speed, but they soon came near each other and both packs went together, making a beautiful dodging race. About thirty people were following at full speed, everyone trying to see who could see the most of the chase. The race was run principally in and out of a pasture that had a new four-foot fence around it, which afforded great jumping to those who cared to risk their lives in that way. Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock generally led the party. The pack crossed the railroad, making a circle of about one mile; then back to the pasture, all running at the top of their speed. About the middle of the field they sighted the fox and soon had him surrounded in a thicket. Reynard made a dodge but when he came out quite a number of the hounds were at his heels. I rushed at them at top speed, popping my whip and trying to check the mad pack to give the fox a little longer chance for his life; but it was impossible to check them. They closed in around me like mad dogs and caught poor Reynard by the time he made his first squall. I was down among the hounds, trying to save his life; but they fairly covered me and the fox, and I had to get from among them as quickly as possible, and before the large crowd could gather round they tore poor Reynard to pieces, hardly leaving me the brush in good shape. They killed him in thirty-five minutes after the pack went together.

Mrs. Hitchcock was the first lady to clear the fence and get to the kill. She, I expect, is one of the greatest lady riders in America. She can ride any kind of a thoroughbred horse thro[illegible]h the wood and over all kinds of jum[illegible]er that I would be proud of [illegible]ecks her. She is also a thor[illegible] man in many ways; she takes in[illegible] horses, shoots well, plays golf [illegible]ght or before day, cold or hot, rain or shine, it is a certainty that she is one of the first to mount her horse and one of the last to say quit.

Before going into another day's hunt I will mention a few other New York ladies that have proved themselves to be expert sportswomen at Aiken. Mrs. Mot and Mrs. Hatton are also expert riders and experts at following the hounds at full speed through the wood. At our wind-up hunt last season at Aiken, in March, Mrs. Hitchcock, Mrs. Hatton and Mrs. Mot hunted with us three nights in succession and followed through the woods, at night, this being their first fox-hunting at night. One night Mrs. Hatton's hunter fell, throwing her quite a long way. I jumped down to help her, thinking she was badly hurt, but before I could get to her she was up and insisting on me going on, saying they were all trying to beat me following the hounds; but of course I could not think about leaving a lady all alone in the dark wood at night, and in a moment she was up and off again as if nothing had happened. The three ladies, however, looked something like they had been to an old-time scratching match when the three nights were ended, but that only made them more anxious to become expert riders at night through the wood. I hope to see the two ladies at Aiken again this season with their splendid stable of well trained hunters. If many other sportsmen would encourage their wives and daughters to take an active part with them in their sport it could be made more pleasant.

Thursday and Friday we spent drawing the country with two old "strike hounds" to locate the foxes, and quite a number were located. On Saturday Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock invited quite a crowd of farmers and town people to take part in a hunt and hunt breakfast. At 6:30 a. m. about fifty people were on hand, well mounted and eager for the sport. The hounds were crated in a wagon, so as to be taken about three miles south of town, where a noted old red stays. At about seven o'clock they were released and in a few minutes old Hunter had a trail about a quarter away. The pack quickly joined in and trailed a cold track about three miles before jumping, and the sun was well up before Mr. Reynard had to move himself. Rowdy jumped the fox, and the rest of the pack joined in so quickly that they hardly gave Reynard time to limber himself up before they were at his heels and pushing him hard for his life. Away they went in full cry, and away went the crowd of about fifty people, going helter-skelter and plunging to take the lead. The pack got off so quickly that it was impossible for us to stay near them. The fox ran a circle of about two miles. Mr. Hitchcock was mounted on The Pear, Mrs. Hitchcock on Wenbeam, and I on Oakwood; there are few better hunters in America. Mr. Hitchcock was leading the party through the open pine wood at full speed, with Mrs. Hitchcock following at his heels. The speed was, I thought, too great to be safe, and I pulled out to one side to a road, to cut the pack off on first turn. Just at this moment Mrs. Hitchcock's horse, trying to follow the horse in front of her, caught a small scrub oak in his martingale, turning him a complete somersault and throwing Mrs. Hitchcock about twenty feet on her head, which knocked her completely senseless for about five or ten minutes. As soon as she was at herself she insisted on having a horse to follow the pack, which was nearly out of hearing. Her horse had run off, following the pack, and as soon as he could be caught and sent back she mounted and followed the rest of the day through three races as fearlessly as if nothing had happened.

The accident knocked me out of the race completely for about twenty-five minutes, but as I was assured that no serious injury was done I made for a road and made a hard ride for two miles, meeting fox and pack all closely bunched. Mr. Reynard had his tail down and tongue out. I saw he could not stand the tremendous speed much longer, so I went at them hard to again secure the brush. About twenty of the party were following closely, their horses foaming and men all excited like madmen. Then I took the lead for a few minutes. Reynard ran into a thicket, made two short rounds, and then the riders completely surrounded him. They had boasted that I would not get the second brush in such a crowd, and it looked very doubtful; but the fox made a dodge and went down the branch, followed closely by the mad pack and wild hunters, leaving me two hundred yards behind on the opposite side of the thicket. I saw my only chance was to take a road and depend upon Oakwood's speed and endurance to get me to the front. They ran straight for half a mile down a branch, with the road parallel, and when they turned out I was with the front men. The fox ran in plain view of hounds and hunters across a little field, and here I fairly went away from the field of hunters. The fox went into a negro's garden, which checked the pack a moment, but three of my young hounds—Bouncer, Blackbird and Whalebone—went around it so quickly that they again sighted him about seventy-five yards in front; and by the time he could run two hundred yards Bouncer, Blackbird and Whalebone caught him, with me on their heels. Before the remainder of the pack could close the gap I had the fox, but the three hounds had bitten him so badly I let the pack kill him, which ended his life in just forty-three minutes. The large crowd of about fifty-five people soon gathered around to my horn, all with foaming horses and excited, everyone trying to tell how he got behind and how often he saw the fox, etc., and all rejoicing to see Mrs. Hitchcock appear, just after the death, with a smile on her face, saying no limbs were broken and she would be in at the next.

After a general hurrah of about ten minutes the second hunt was made toward the, old mill and tea house where breakfast was to be served about twelve o'clock. The pack soon had another trail, and after about one hour's hard cold trailing the second fox was jumped. The most of my pack and native hounds went closely bunched after this one, but a few of them went to old Hunter that had jumped a fox a mile away. The crowd mostly followed the pack that was closely pursuing an old straight running red. He evidently thought it was best for him to leave the country, for he went straight for five miles. Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock and myself soon had the lead of the large crowd, and at the end of thirty minutes we were the only ones within hearing.

On this straight run my young hounds soon shut out all of the native hounds, and we had hounds and hunters scattered for five miles.

We followed until our horses had had enough for one time, and as there was only about half of our pack and none of the other packs running we stopped and listened until they went out of hearing, still going northeast. We then started slowly back toward the old mill, picking up hounds and men every half mile. Just before reaching the breakfast place we heard old Hunter and a few of the native hounds running in full cry, and we soon had in what few of our hounds had not gone after the other fox. Hunter's old red was about run down, and they only made our circle after we got the other hounds in, for then he went to earth.

This fox had been running around and around the breakfast house a long time, once crossing the bridge at the old mill in plain view of all the ladies that had come out in carriages and giving them great sport.

We all, about sixty people, gathered at the tea cottage about 1:30 p. m. for breakfast, which was relished and enjoyed by everyone, and Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock will be long remembered for having such a grand selection of everything good to eat and drink. The meats were a barbecued shoat, a dozen turkeys, half a dozen hams, roast duck, and chicken; different kinds of salad; cakes and pies of many kinds, ice cream, hot coffee and chocolate, wine and beer; also fruits of all kinds, cigars, etc. We all ate and discussed fox-hunting, and kept eating as long as we could.

Then a most pleasant meeting of the fox-hunting club of Aiken was called to order by President Holly. After discussing all business connected with the sport a motion was made by Mr. Lamar and seconded by Judge Williams (two of the native fox-hunters of Aiken) to give Mr. Hitchcock five days in each week to hunt his pack, and the native pack only to take one day and night (Tuesday night and Wednesday). This motion was unanimously carried. After several speeches the meeting was adjourned.

Part of our pack that run off in the morning had not returned, and we all went home and did not find them. At 5 p. m. Mr. Hitchcock and myself mounted fresh horses to go after the hounds that were missing. After a long ride in the direction they went, blowing our horns all the time, they came within hearing. It was now getting dark and they were working steadily, apparently started in for the night. We blew for them and holloaed ourselves hoarse trying to stop them, but they did not pay the slightest attention to us until they came near a road that we were on, and we succeeded in stopping them at eight o'clock. All but one young dog came in, and he has not yet been heard of; he is a blue, black and tan hound, branded with letter "A" on right side. No one but those that have been on such long hunts can imagine how tired we were when we reached home.

On Monday we again hunted our best pack, jumping a red that went to earth in about fifty minutes. Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock and Mr. Pete Duryea shut the field out and were the only ones with the pack for some time. We then went to the same creek bottom where the first fox was jumped and started the pack out again, and they soon commenced trailing up the swamp. Mr. F. R. Hitchcock and Judge Williams went to the road that crossed above. The pack then started like mad hounds up the swamp, and three red foxes ran out within fifty yards of Mr. F. R. Hitchcock and Judge Williams. The pack split into two packs, and the faster pack soon ran its fox to earth, with Henry Crags, the gamekeeper, the first to the hole. The other pack went off in an opposite direction, and some of the hounds did not return until night.

The last day's hunt was also a good one. A hard run after a red for two hours resulted in putting him in one of the feed boxes with me only fifty yards behind, the fox running in plain view of the hounds.

That afternoon we hunted the puppy pack with a few old hounds. They jumped a large red and after a sharp run of some time they succeeded in catching and killing him; with Mr. Pete Duryea the only one in at the death. Mr. Hitchcock and myself were the next to come up. Mr. Duryea was very much excited and had the fox lying up in a little bush with the pack of puppies jumping all over him trying to get the fox. This is his first experience of fox-hunting, and he no doubt will keep this brush many years; and as he is a good rider he will make a keen sportsman.

This ended my hunt and I returned to Tennessee with part of the pack, leaving Mr. Hitchcock twenty seven of our best hounds, which he will hunt at Aiken until Spring.

Perhaps we shall again see something from Mr. Smith about our hounds. What he said in a recent issue we care but little for. Our hounds are like our setters; they travel over several states and hunt before hundreds of the best fox-hunters in America, and never a pen scratch has been written against them from anyone who has hunted with them. If what has so often been written about them is not fact why is it that those who have thoroughly tried their packs against them in different states do not come out and pronounce it as such?

It would be useless for me to try to explain to Mr. Smith how such hounds as old Hunter can go on a range and trail a fox that has been gone from five to twenty-four hours as fast as the hunter wants to canter on a thorough-bred horse. He does it just the same any time of day he is taken to a fox range, and hundreds of men in different parts of the country have often seen him do it. They are like such dogs as Roderigo, Count Gladstone IV, etc., just a little too good for a lot of stay-at-home hunters to appreciate or know how to judge such work. They are not for sale at any price. Mr. Hitchcock and myself will keep the best ones exclusively for our own pleasure, for a few years anyway.

DIXIE RED FOX CLUB

We have received from the Secretary the prospectus and constitution of the Dixie Red Fox Club, which is not an aggregation of the South's fastest and most aristocratic red foxes, though the name might give that impression, but is a band of sportsmen bound together by their undying love of hunting those foxes. The club was organized September 15 of last year, with the following officers: President, Dr. I. F. Deloney of Rowland, Ala.; first vice-president, W. I. Spears of Ingram Mills, Miss.; second vice-president, J. Overton Ewin of Florence, Ala.; secretary-treasurer, John H. Wallace Jr., of Town Creek, Ala. The master is Capt. John A. Turner of Athens, Ala.

The club will hunt near Rowland, Limestone County, Ala., for six days between the first and fifteenth of October, 1895. The hunting will be for sport, but the following stakes will be offered for those who wish to compete: The All-Age Pack Stakes, for all-age hounds; all hounds eligible at $1 entrance; purse, amount of entrance fees, the club to add money, but how much has not been decided upon. The Derby, for hounds under twenty months at $1 each; purse, the amount of the entrance money and an indefinite amount to be added by the club.

The constitutions of clubs, sporting and otherwise, are so much alike that we will not weary the reader with this club's in full, yet the following few articles will, we, believe, be of general interest:

ARTICLE I.—The object of this club is for the sporting interests of its members, and to adopt such rules and regulations as to enable us to ascertain and promote the breeding of the typical foxhound.

ARTICLE V.—The maximum standard for judging foxhounds shall be 100, which constitutes a perfect hound, viz.: Speed, 20; hunting, 20; endurance, 20; trailing, 20; tongue or voice, 10; fox sense, 10.

ARTICLE VII.—Each member shall be allowed not less than four or more than six aged hounds for the hunt.

ARTICLE VIII.—Each member shall be allowed not less than two or more than four puppies for the hunt.

ARTICLE IX.—Puppies shall consist of hounds under twenty months.

ARTICLE X.—The judges shall be elected on the first day of each meeting annually.

The prospectus is as follows:

"All practical fox-hunters well know that the foxhound is perhaps the only breed that will not appear to an advantage on the bench. His place is in the field, and it is the duty of every lover of the hound and chase to assist in perfecting the foxhound.

"The reasons for an assured successful meet are:

"First. Foxes are plentiful, often two or more being started at the same time. The foxes are 'reds.'

"Second. The country is a hunter's paradise—perfectly level, with small streams every two or three miles running to the Tennessee River.

"Third. We are centrally located in the forks of the L. & N. and E. T. V. & G. R. R., six miles from Athens and eight miles from Decatur, Ala.

"Fourth. The charter members of the Dixie Red Fox Club are practical hunters and representative citizens, each member owning a pack of hounds.

"Fifth. The citizens of Limestone County are cordial and hospitable, and invite hunting. When a hound gets lost he is immediately brought to camp by someone. Pleasant arrangements have been made for board and lodging at a typical Southern home, which is capacitated to accommodate fifty men at the low price of $1 per day. Good saddle horses can be procured for $1 per day.

"Sixth. We will have no 'red tape' about our hunts. Everything is to be done on the square. 'Equal rights to all and special privileges and favors to none,' is our motto.

"To our incredulous northern brethren we will say: Come down and see southern hounds outfoot a full grown southern red fox. They have done it and are better now than ever.

"We would consider it a favor if every hunter who receives a copy of the prospectus and constitution of the Dixie Red Fox Club would send us the names of his 'foxy' friends, so we may have the pleasure of sending them a copy of our constitution, etc.

"Come, do not hesitate, my brother. Be one of us and you will never have cause to regret it. Further information will be furnished upon application. Kindly address all communications to the Secretary."

Without any particular reason for so doing we have reversed the order of things in the little pamphlet sent us by Mr. J. H. Wallace. In it the constitution is to be found at the end, with the prospectus next before it, and the two preceded by this address, which is entitled "To the Fox-Hunting Fraternity:"

"A number of the South's most noted and enthusiastic hunters for the past four years have been holding annual field trials in Limestone County, Alabama. Realizing that great success had been theirs in the past, after a careful and premeditated discussion it was unanimously agreed by the hunters present to organize a club, under whose auspices annual foxhound trials are to be held.

"Saturday, September 15, 1894, the terminus of the most successful meet ever held in the South, the Dixie Red Fox Club was organized with twenty charter members.

"We take this method of extending a cordial invitation to all hunters and lovers of the chase to join us and be with us next October, and guarantee plenty of high-class sport.

"The low price of entrance will necessitate hunters with widespread reputations competing so as to retain their laurels and win new honors for their hounds and themselves.

"There will be at the first annual meet of the Dixie Red Fox Club hounds of every prominent strain in the hands of practical hunters. A defeat of the participating packs will be a victory that any hunter might prize and covet."

We wish the new organization every success and hope that as a promoter of good sport and good fellowship it may completely realize the expectations of its originators.

NOTES

MR. FRANCIS J. HAGAN spent the holidays with the Walkers in Garrard County, Ky., and those famous fox-hunters planned to show him some good sport, to which he would naturally look forward with more than ordinary eagerness. But from an entertaining letter just received we gather that the big storm of Christmas week completely spoiled their anticipations and robbed them of the brushes they were to have captured. "Thermometer below zero," says Mr. Hagan, "ten inches of snow on the ground and twice the quantity, which was cheerfully shoveled down our backs at the slightest provocation, on the bushes." Whew! It actually makes the room feel cold to read about it. However, these bold huntsmen were not easily discouraged, and for two days persevered in their pursuit of the wily "reds." "You should have seen the Walkers," continues Mr. Hagan, "plunging through drifts, sliding down precipices, and stumbling over logs and into holes and gullies concealed by the snow; of course we had to follow their lead." We hope he and his companions had something better than livery horses to do the following with, otherwise the result is not as gratifying as it might be, for we have tried it. Mr. Hagan says barring this experience they have enjoyed splendid hunting weather since the Olympia meet, and he promises to send an account of some of their runs. We are sorry to hear that Mr. Ware, of Washington Court House, O., who with Mr. Kinney, the Massachusetts enthusiast, spent some time in Kentucky after leaving Olympia, has had remarkable ill luck with the four hounds he had at the N. F. H. Association's meet. One he left with Mr. Archie Walker, one got killed, and another got lost; while he had no sooner landed the fourth one safely in Ohio than it was struck by a railroad train and killed. Furthermore, Mr. Hagan says he believes the hound that was left with Mr. Walker has also passed over to the silent majority, though he is not quite certain about this. However, Mr. Ware took two good ones from Kentucky home with him, and we hope they will prove such clinkers as to compensate for the loss of the others. Concluding, Mr. Hagan says, "we shall rely upon your assistance in getting up the next meet," and we can assure him than any assistance possible will be rendered with the greatest of pleasure

JUDGING from a special dispatch from I[illegible] the Cincinnati Enquirer, the "four hund[illegible] named city did not make a happy be[illegible] efforts to get up an imitation of Brit[illegible] The dispatch, which is headed "A Far[illegible] first meet of the Briarbrook Hunt Club came off to-day. It was a magnificent and overpowering burlesque on a fox chase, but the swells of the town attended, both masculine and feminine, and in a social sense 'it was the correct thing, don't cher know.' The shipment of Wisconsin foxes failed to arrive, having been snowed in by the blizzard in Northern Indiana, and so while the huntsmen were rehearsing their parts in an open field by making their hunters jump a two-bar fence, in which feats several of the 'swell' riders were dismounted, a raccoon was surreptitiously killed and its bloody hide was trailed over the course covering several miles. The dogs were then turned loose, and only one, an old coon dog, struck the trail and followed it. The others funked. The riders followed the dog, but only two of them, Miles Burford and Dr. Martin, rode to a finish. During the meet a horse ridden by Miss Laycock stumbled and threw its fair rider, who was seriously injured. To-night the club is giving the swellest dance of the season, but few of the riders to-day are taking much satisfaction in trying to dance—their joints ache." When "the shipment of Wisconsin foxes" does arrive the poor beasts will be in anything but prime condition to afford a good run, and even under most favorable circumstances hunting a "bagman" is but a poor imitation of finding and hunting a bold fox over his own country. The Briarbrook people might send a committee down south to Lexington to get initiated in the mysteries and recklessnesses of the Iroquois Club's rabbit hunting on horseback; there is a good deal of fun in it, and that the element of danger which gives spice to all such sports is not absent we can personally testify—especially if some field should contain an old well cunningly concealed by tall grass and weeds, or if two or three people should ride over you just as you dive off your horse to pick up Br'er Rabbit.

THE city of Frederick, Md., as is well known, is a charming old place, says the Washington Post, nestling in the lap of the foothills of the Catoctin range of mountains in Western Maryland, and has long been known to name and fame. By the late lamented Whittier it was specially immortalized in his poem "Barbara Fritchie," in which he so beautifully says: "The clustered spires of Frederick stand, green-walled by the hills of Maryland." In earlier days, when men were not given to "all work and no play," this section was renowned for the sport of fox-hunting. Nearly all the farming gentry kept a few hounds, and many are the stories still told of the pleasure of the hunts of "ye olden times." Although not indulged in, upon a scale as elaborate as in days of yore, the sport is still kept up by some of the sons of the sportsmen of the past, and among its most enthusiastic devotees is Col. L. Victor Baughman, ex-comptroller of Maryland and formerly president of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. He is a member of the Elk Ridge Hunting Club, of Baltimore, and of the Maryland Club, of that city, and also of the Metropolitan Club, of Washington. The beautiful country home of this gentleman is situated a short distance west of Frederick, on the National Pike, over which the armies of both McClellan and Lee passed on their way to South Mountain and Antietam. The estate is known as "Poplar Terrace," and its three hundred broad acres is the admiration of all who visit that charming locality. His pack of hounds, numbering twenty-odd, include some good ones from the old Gilmore pack near Richmond, Va.; the Severs pack at Asheville, N. C., and others from Point Rock, near Hot Springs, W. Va., and native breed.

THE Monmouth County drag hounds were out for the first time this season on December 17, the meet being held at Mr. George J. Gould's country house. A drag of about eight miles had been laid, and a small and select field enjoyed a good gallop across a pretty stretch of country. On the following Saturday the meet was near Red Bank, N. J., and the trail was laid westward to Holmdel. The New York Sun credits a follower of these hounds on this day with an escape that was little short of marvelous; it says: "On one hand was a high fence, and on the other an abrupt descent of thirty feet. When Dr. Edwin Field came to the fence his horse refused to jump and turned toward the precipice. Dr. Field kept his saddle in good shape in spite of the bolt, but in an instant he saw that the momentum of the horse as he turned would carry him over the precipice. If he had jumped from the saddle his own momentum would almost surely have given him a dangerous tumble down the steep descent alongside of his horse. He doesn't lack presence of mind, and, making ready to slip his feet from the stirrups, he caught hold of the fence post nearest th[illegible] pice just as the horse's feet slipped over the edg[illegible] horse went out from under him, and left him c[illegible] safe to the post. The horse turned a c[illegible] somersault, and came up standing on all fours, saf[illegible] sound, at the bottom. Dr. Field was soon in the saddle again and he rode in the hunt to the finish." We are inclined to take a liberal allowance of salt with this little [illegible]

On Tuesday, December 13, Mr. Simon Delbert gave a [illegible] at the club house to the members of the Rose Tree Hunt Club. It was really a breakfast, too, not one of those midday affairs, and after proper appreciation had been shown the proffered hospitality a move was made, at nine o'clock, toward the Upper Providence Hills. Here a good fox was found and a very long hunting run of nearly five hours resulted. At first he headed across toward the Middletown Barrens, then through Edgmont and on to Willstown and the Chester County Barrens. Here Reynard turned, and came back through Newtown, and took to earth at Castle Rock, less than half a mile from where it started. Those who stayed well up until the end of the chase were, the Master, George W. Hill, "Doc" Rogers, the whipper-in; Dr. John Dohan, Samuel D. Riddle, Harry Sinnott, Leander Riddle, John Hawkins, Simon Delbert, J. Howard Lewis Jr., George Hoopes, Will Vellotte, John Vellotte, William Dohan, A. L. Hawkins and Wm. Stolesbury. An unfortunate and perhaps serious accident befell a young farmer named William Evans in the early part of the run. When going through the Willistown Barrens Evans' hat was knocked off by a branch, and he dismounted to pick it up. Approaching his horse carelessly, it kicked him in the stomach, causing him severe pain and possibly injuring him permanently. A carriage was procured and the injured sportsman was taken home.

The West Chester Hunt made preparations for a great Christmas chase, which ended very ignominiously. The meet was at the West Chester fair grounds on December 26, and at 10:30 a. m. a fox that had been captured some time before and kept for this occasion was turned loose. Neighboring hunts participated, and two hundred horsemen and horsewomen and thirty-eight couple of foxhounds are said to have mustered for the occasion, and their chagrin at the ridiculous result must have been great. According to the Philadelphia Public Ledger "the chase lasted only one hour, and took its course into the Brandywine Valley, where, luckily for the fox and to the displeasure of the sportsmen, the dogs, in working a circle, struck the scent and took a back course, soon reaching the fair grounds, where the sly animal was given its liberty only a little while before. In the meantime the fox continued his way to liberty and the hunters soon returned to town."

The Chevy Chase Hunt Club, whose headquarters are near Washington, D. C., the day after Christmas Day had one of the best runs its members have ever enjoyed. By 10 o'clock a field of nearly forty had assembled, when the Master, Mr. Halloway, made a move from the club house with the pack of twenty-five couple, of which three-fifths are imported hounds. A stout fox was quickly found not far from the club house, in the Barra woods, and after a capital two hours was run to ground. At first he headed for Rockville, but swung off to Rock Creek, which he crossed; after a big detour he came back to and recrossed the creek, up to which time the pack had run fast. But scent becoming poor they hunted along rather slowly until their fox went to earth.

Mr. Mitchell Harrison of Chestnut Hill, Pa., will probably spend the Winter near Washington, D. C., and hunt with the Chevy Chase pack, which devotes most of its time to drag hunting; though an occasional fox is found, and a good run with one is always thoroughly appreciated by the Master and his followers. The club's second annual hunt ball, which has at once sprung into great favor in the Capitol City, was held the evening of December 28 and was a brilliant and enjoyable affair. Last year it was held at Wormsley's, but on this occasion it was given in the club house, the ball room being dressed in greens and adorned with brushes, pads and masks, saddles and bridles, whips and spurs.

The Radnor Hunt had its annual "farmers' breakfast" on Christmas Day. It was a charming hunting day, and all of the farmers whose places adjoin the hunt were present and thoroughly enjoyed the good cheer set forth by the club. A few impromptu speeches were made by the Master of Hounds and the hunting farmers, all of which were full of good-fellowship and showed good feeling between the hunt and its neighbors. Soon after eleven o'clock the pack was thrown off and a good run enjoyed with a wild fox. Mr. Rodman, W. C. Ellison and Mr. Edward Toland got nasty falls.

Foxhounds are offered for sale this week by No. 63, Tapleyville, Mass.; Mr. J. H. Miller, Christiana, Pa., and Mr. E. Haight, Wes[illegible]ick, N. Y.

FLY FISHING ON THE NORTH SHORE OF LAKE SUPERIOR—NO. 8

BY ALEX STARBUCK

We were ready for camp, and on boarding the boat our swarthy sailor boys spread her snow white canvas to the gentle breeze and we went merrily rippling o'er the Summer seas, and under a sky of transparent blue from which the refulgent sun poured down a flood of bright golden light. The waters through which we cleaved were as clear as crystal and generously gave up their exhilarating coolness to the air, while the green leaves along the wooded shores whispered softly in the soothing silence. It was our dolce far niente, like

A glimpse of beautiful worlds untrod,
Of elysian fields in the home of God.

It was so dreamlike to our roving gaze of fancy that like luxurious idlers we entirely resigned ourselves to a new sense of the infinite beauty of Nature. Little bright sapphire wavelets, scarcely flecked with foam, crisped and broke with delightful impotence against the massive ramparts which were as marvelous in glistening tints as the delicate wild flowers that sprang from their narrow clefts. The air was deliciously fragrant and sensuous; the butterflies—rare visions of beauty—were on wings of velvet and gold; the pine treetops that surmounted the cliffs proudly waved in burning crimson, while the tender note of some drowsy bird joined in the gentle anthem of the sea. We were deeply entranced with the lovely effects of the landscape so wonderfully varied, and reverently bowed to Nature's God with "cheerful faith that all we behold is full of blessings."

FLY FISHING ON THE NORTH SHORE OF LAKE SUPERIOR—SAND RIVER

We would undoubtedly have continued in the enjoyable role of lotus eaters till we had reached camp, had not my greedy partner discovered as we slid through the silver seas tempting channels of serpentine ledges along the rocky bottom, which kindled in him the enthusiasm of the angler to such a degree that naught but his dancing flies over these inviting places would really satisfy him. I well knew no demur on my part would avail, for when his blood was once up the ethics of the angler were trod upon with an iron heel of barbarism. I therefore quietly sat by and saw him excitedly prepare for a tinted tragedy, and when he was ready for his first cast his face was one glowing picture of radiant hope. His flies were skillfully delivered and danced and recovered; and again and again they went through the same graceful mission, but no gleam from golden fin was seen, no water was unduly disturbed. At last, when convinced that "all is not gold that glitters," as applicable to his efforts there, he ceased his casting, and ordered the "boys" to hoist the sails which had been lowered to admit of his omnivorous warfare, and we proceeded to camp.

Fully satisfied with his attempted larceny of the tattooed tribe he lapsed once more into indolent languor, and intently watched the fanciful shadows shift upon the flashing cliffs as the sun played hide-and-seek with the drifting clouds and the golden light raced o'er the emerald hills so opulent in grand and wild beauty.

We had had during the day tha exultatio and the miserere of trouting, as it were, many triumphs and a few defeats, and therefore returned with our most ambitious aspirations of the angle fully satisfied. True my partner did not secure the odd trout his soul so yearned for, but as we had yet to pass some rough ridges that appeared to have been fashioned by the gods of war into crenelated battlements, and where a little mountain stream was gently murmuring and singing its way o'er the rocks, it evidently was the one chance more offered to unsatisfied greed. As we neared the seductive spot the wily half-breed, with a merry twinkle dancing in his eyes, motioned—unobserved by all but me—with an index finger, to the venerable angler and then to this cavernous grot where the little rivulet precipitated its cool and pearly drops into the deeps below and where was supposed to poise the glittering prize in radiant dyes. I covertly signaled silence, in response to the pantomime, and then intently waited the expected development.

He—my partner—was not so dreamy or unobservant as we thought, for with an instinct like that of a bloodhound he turned when we were abreast of this witching rookery, and on giving it one long and earnest look shook his head and then remarked in undertone, as if alone:

"No, no, I must control this insatiable greed which is ever prompting me to unsportsmanlike conduct."

I was deeply amazed at the self-denial he was inflicting upon himself, for I well knew the temptation to angle there was great within him and that it was a very, very hard struggle for him to forego it. Kenosh was also taken aback at this unexpected revelation, and looked as mystified as if some miracle had taken place. This sudden conversion was really unaccountable; but as my faith in him was not at all steadfast I concluded to await further results before final judgment, for there were yet many trials for this grasping angler who had always been sighing for just one more of the bespotted tribe.

This little enjoyable event so silently so unobtrusively passed, we again sank into listless inaction as if sailing o'er Venetian seas of serene loveliness, mid isles whose Summer smiles no wintry winds annoy, and courted nothing but dreamy elysium. Our shapely little craft seemed also to partake of this caressing delight, for she went lazily and languidly along o'er curling waves with uncrowned spray to zephyr lullabys. How white —— and full our swelling sail!

How cool and fresh the breezes free!
How bright and warm the kindly sun!
How blue and deep and wide the sea!

We feel the kisses of the wind,
And tritons sport our bows before.
We keep in touch with Nature here
As they may not who stay ashore.

I still thought my partner would again become demoralized and that his good intentions expressed in the boat would go for naught when we had made camp, which was then in view, but he was true to his repentance as the sequel shows. After we had reached our quarters and supper had been served, we both walked out to the massive ramparts in front and there took position on a huge pillared rock that overlooked the great and grand old lake, which was one vast sheet of golden gleam. There we saw the last red glare of the sinking sun upon the breathing waters and the last crimson tint on the sky fade into the drapery of night without my partner once expressing a desire for that additional beauty of the spangled robes. It was evidence of emphatic sincerity in his reformation, and I earnestly hoped that no inviting chasm with its shaded lines nor mountain brook with its translucent pool would make him forget again that he was a faithful member of the guild.

The next morning opened in gorgeous splendor, with the gentle wind kissing the fragrant flowers and tossing the branches of the green woods in caressing playfulness. I felt its delicious influence, and while the early meal was in preparation took my rod and hastened to the declivitous shore that encompassed our quarters; and there, where the glimmering waves were curving in little plumes of snowy whiteness, I tossed my artful flies with downy lightness. Once, twice, thrice they went; and then a princely trout broke water and hastily started off with my silver doctor, the reel clicking a merry tune and the line humming in charming unison. On and on the brave beauty sped, as if unlimited freedom were his, until I finally checked his dashing career, and then like an arrow from a crossbow he bounded to the surface and leaped into the bright sunshine with his golden sides radiantly ablaze. Again in his element he dashed he knew not whither, his only thought being to rid himself of the tormenting feathers that adhered so tenaciously to his gory jaw. Not an inch of line did he gain then, for with the butt of that magic rod of the Chubb imprint I held him securely and let him wear away his ebbing life.

At last he came reluctantly to the shore but with wasted vigor, panting sides and glaring eyes, and though his brave heart was still for battle no vital force remained within him for further struggle. He fretted and foamed a little, as a dying protest, and that was all. I drew him close to the rocky ledges, completely conquered, and as the semi-barbarian, whom I had called to the strife, made the unerring dip the unfortunate captive showed through the latticed twine like a dream of grace and beauty, with the bright sun making every scarlet spot, every bar of orange and crimson and pearl, a picture of infinite delight.

It did not take long for my triumph to be heralded in camp for I was not over a hundred yards away, and as a consequence my partner came striding over the lichened rocks rod in hand and eyes ablaze, significant of disaster to any mottled beauty that was daring enough to toy with his illusive flies. He took position on a ragged rock but a short distance below me, and commenced industriously thrashing the waters; but, as it was a place where we had never caught a trout, I was certain he would receive no response to his well-delivered flies. Being fully satisfied for the present with my magnificent capture, a three-pounder, I desisted from further efforts and called him to take my place at the lucky ledge. He was quite prompt to accept, and after thanking me for resigning in his favor sent his tempting lures in search of some inquisitive or hungry trout.

On his third cast he aroused and hung a noble fontinalis that fairly made his eyes dance with excessive delight. I watched with great interest the overjoyed sportsman as he set to work to demonstrate the subtleties of the gentle art in killing an impaled trout. His bronzed and furrowed face, like that of a knight of old, was all aglow with intense excitement and unalloyed joy, and would have made a most delightful study for an ideal artist. If a Praxiteles could have modeled him from a block of pure white marble, as he then stood with every nerve to its utmost strung and every joy which comes to the angler on such an occasion radiating his face, the statue would graphically illustrate the varying emotions that spring from the pleasures of the gentle art, as no word painting from wizard pen could ever faithfully describe them. I was sure, from the skillful manner in which he was handling the bewildered and struggling beauty, that it would never again count

> The ripples on the river, or the sunbeams on its breast,
> Or the pearls in the deep sea caverns, or the stars in the tinted west.

After a gameful battle, the mottled warrior bade adieu to the rocky mansions which he had so long beautified with his spangled sides and scarlet hood, and came to the net a heart-broken victim to the selfish enjoyment of the ambitious angler. As I gazed upon that lovely piece of animated painting, as it lay that early morning upon a silvery streaked rock, with the bright sun giving added luster to its ravishing hues, I—weak mortal that I then was—repented of my tragedy and felt that what we call pleasure was nothing more than the alluring voice of the syrens of destruction, and then realized as applicable what Byron has stated in stately verse, "There is no sterner moralist than pleasure."

Suddenly sobered by the morning's murderous slaughter of the two tinted innocents, I quietly took up my rod and in deep contemplation sought the camp, followed soon after by my partner, the tawny half-breed bringing up the rear with our iridescent trophies.

After we had partaken of a most delicious breakfast, of which the piece de resistance was broiled trout, and which was simply a dish of the highest perfection, we stood around quite a while without any particular object in view for the day's recreation. It was infinitely too delightful to be idled away in camp, for the time is apt to come, and that when least expected, when day after day may turn up a blank. Perhaps will come storm or dense fog, or a slaty and chilly sky spreading a mournful monotony over scenes that one will want to see transfigured by the > Mysteries of color daily laid,

> By the sun in light and shade.

And then, again, a whole week may ensue in which will be drawn a prize every day—south wind, north wind and west wind will come by turns and do their best.

> It may blow north, it still is warm;
> Or south, it still is clear;
> Or east, it smells like a clover farm;
> Or west, no thunder fear.

Then the lake, with Neptune in a peaceful mood, will be dancing in little wavelets edged with silver over which tasseled clouds drift in luxuriant languor; while the mountains, as if puffed up with vanity amidst all this royal splendor, will overhaul their meteorological wardrobe and array themselves, by rapid turns, in their violets and purples, their cloaks of azure and caps of gold, their laces and velvets, and their scarlet scarfs. One day it will be so clear that to the eye space will seem to have been half annihilated. Every sharp ridge will lie on the sky like the curving blades of an adz, and the pinnacles will tower sharp as spears. Then the few shadows that spot the slopes seem engraved upon them. Such is the time for proof-impressions of the roughness and raggedness, the cuts and scars, the ravines and spurs, the boundary lines of trees, shrubbery and rocks.

Then will come a day sacred to great clouds. How majestically they will sail through the azure, perplexing the eye with their double beauty, the blazing fleeces which move and melt in the upper blue, and the fantastic photographs which they leave, often draping the mountains in a leopard skin of spotted light and gloom. Or, perhaps, the south wind may fill the air with dusty gold and make each segment of a range that was prosaic enough a week before seem a fraction of Italy. "Possibly it tries its hand at mists. Then what mischief and frolic! It brindles the mountain sides with them, or it stretches them across their length as though it meant to weave all the vapors which the air could supply into a narrow and interminable web of fog. Now, again, it twines the mist around their necks, then it smothers the peaks with them, and soon tears them apart to let the grim heads look out; and, before long, in more serious mood, it bids them stream up and off like incense from mighty altars. Sometimes, for half a day, it will revel in a rollicking temper and will wind a ruff around the neck of some solemn peak or the top of some beetling cliff." Then there will be sunsets and dawns, each of which alone would compensate the contemplative angler for the trip.

In sheer restlessness we walked to the rocky ramparts in the immediate front of our camp as if going to a natural art gallery for solace There we drank in the matchless realisms. there we felt we must assuredly wander in that atmosphere of beauty; and we returned and ordered the boat for an exploration along the shore, amid islands, in bays and inlets and around bold headlands.

"Which way, east or west?" inquired the tawny Kenosh, who just then was indulging in the soothing effects of a well-filled pipe.

"Anywhere—where 'The western waves of ebbing day roll o'er the glen their level way.' Anywhere—where 'Each purple peak, each flinty spire, is bathed in floods of living fire.' Anywhere—where 'The rocky summit, split and rent, forms turret, dome or battlement.'"

"Just laze along, that it?"

"Aye!"

To return to the practical. We thought it best to take our rods, for we well knew there might be a great temptation to cast a fly or two at some ideal spot where an old trout is presumed to abide. Our parental boatman had a similar idea as to game, for he came strutting down to the boat with a gun and a belt of cartridges.

"What do you bring that along for?" inquired my partner, when Kenosh stood before him thus armed.

"Why, for bear, of course!" I interjected.

At this rejoinder the half-breed smiled to the very tips of his ears, and then answered:

"You git fooled, sometime; you see; then you want gun."

"Even so. Already a half-starved dog has been taken for a bear, as has an inoffensive rabbit."

"Ha! ha! that good. But you wait while; you see something, soon, maybe."

"Very likely, Kenosh, and therefore we will patiently await, but don't stir up any more—"

"No, no; you see; you wait; that all."

And so we did, and as our shapely little craft was ready we stepped aboard and soon were afloat, and when out where the gentle breeze caught our sails slid caressingly along, while

> Beneath our bows the green sea breaks
> In curling wave with crest of spray,
> And, rippling oft in swirling foam,
> Stretches behind us far away.

It would be tiresome repetition to give in detail the angling, and the incidents and humors pertaining thereto, of this and the remaining ten days of pure delight we spent there. To summarize, however, we would one day be skirting along the eastern shore, its savage ramparts of wall glistening in the sun like massive blocks of silver, patiently coaxing the tinted trout from some deep chasm or from behind some seamed and ragged rock. The day following, perhaps, would find us seeking our pleasures in some quiet bays or around some rocky and barren islets. Again, if the barometer indicated "set fair," we would extend our excursion as far as Sand River, six or eight miles distant, where we would have a charming day with the adolescent trout as well as an ideal tramp up the sinuous river so diversified in rough terraces of racing rapids and lovely pools.

At another time we would try the other shore, so regal in lofty and precipitous walls and so fancifully [illegible] in picturesque towers and bastions by the [illegible] of flinty fragments. There we would gl[illegible] shadows of the castle-like turrets, and dr[illegible] files in the narrow ravines so sharply ar[illegible] eled by the torrents of centuries that no human could ever hope to scale their walls. If good fortune favored us not, we would advance until we reached the little wandering Blind River, a poem of wild beauty in singing waters and seething foam. Should disappointment again occur, it was onward to the more pretentious Gravel River, which comes dashing and rippling from the rugged heights, through clusters of spruces and pines, with ever-changing lines of bold and graceful beauty and a soulful aria that tells the mountain's own joy. Then when a grand storm arose and tortured the great lake into crested waves and violently battered the buttressed walls of our cozy quarters, we would seek consolation in our books and cards till the bright sunshine and silver seas temptingly called us forth to again angle or sail in charming bays or quiet nooks, or where we could realize a generous view of new wonders of the soaring ridges, jutting crags, rounded slopes and winding ravines which were so impressively displayed in the gorgeous colors of a glowing sun. If pallied with tempting trout, and the morn was bright and gay, we would take our guns and scour the shadowy forests for seasonable game or revel in the flora by way of agreeable diversity.

The most enjoyable, however, of all our excursions on foot was the ascending of the lofty mountains in our immediate front, with the sole object of obtaining a magnificent sunset view. From such an elevation we looked down upon a scene of replendent glory; in the west the sun was slowly sinking into a bed of crimson and gold, the horizon tranquilly and softly lighted with a flushing radiance which was infinitely sublime, while the whole landscape glowed with splendor, every tint and hue imaginable intermingling in that sea of color, and every rippling wave and racing river, every beetling cliff and pinnacle of sullen rock flaming as though a thousand rainbows had fallen out of the sky and hung themselves there like glorious banners. We felt as if we were in a region of that eternal silence which wraps the summit of the "everlasting hills."

And so passed the days, like dreams of delight, until with our hearts full of joy and the vigor of new life within us we embarked and sailed for the wood-crowned island opposite, where we secured passage on a fishing tug, and bade a tender adieu to the glorious ridges and princely peaks, to the ragged cliffs and rugged shores, to the singing rivers and silvery lakes—to all, in fact, that had won our admiration and had given us a world of enjoyment in our pleasant pastime.

Cincinnati, O.

If the people of the various commonwealths comprising these United States desire to preserve fishes and game, it is not only necessary that proper and reasonable restrictions should be placed upon the capture and killing of the same, but the laws enacted must be faithfully enforced. To do this, state and local fish and game wardens must be carefully selected as to their qualifications for the position, and must have police or constabulary powers to enable them to execute the laws. The necessity for selecting competent men is aptly set forth in the following recent communication from New Paynesville, Minn., to the editor of the St. Paul Pioneer Press, regarding two fish and game wardens in that state: "The article in one of the evening papers of Minneapolis yesterday relative to the poachers on the lakes in this neighborhood has caused no little discussion here. Many of our best citizens are indignant that Lake Koronis should be brought thus into disrepute. They say that if the deputy wardens that are sent out are no better than those in times past they had better remain in the cities. The last two who were here were shams altogether. One of them after loafing around town all day went out to Lake Koronis to watch at night; he slept soundly, so his local guide says, all night on the first island in the lake. The next and last one who was here heralded the fact that he was a warden, so that the poachers could all lay low; he drove down to Green Lake, but turned round when about two miles from it, saying: 'There's no use going there; they all know I'm coming.' As for the boat load of nets captured on Koronis, the story is manufactured out of whole cloth. The only nets ever taken from that lake were accidentally discovered and confiscated by our local justice, A. Haines, two years ago, and no shots were fired, either. The truth is there is no such place as Shooting Hollow around the lake, all on its shores being highly respectable people. That there is poaching done on the lake cannot be denied, and our people are as anxious as [illegible] else to see it stopped, but they do not think it nec[illegible] for a swaggering warden to come out here armed [illegible] teeth as if to hunt down Indians. If a deputy [illegible] come here for conscientious duty and go at his work in[illegible] telligently, he could do much good by a few judicious

...York State Fish Commission held its annual ... Albany January 4. The members of the commission made a call upon Gov. Morton, at the Executive Chamber, and during their visit the reorganization of the commission was discussed. The present commission will be reorganized either by the resignation of two or three of the democratic members and the appointment of republicans in their places or by legislation. There is a movement on foot to establish a single-headed commission, the same as the United States Fish Commission, this commissioner to be a practical man. There is also being considered a proposition to have a superintendent of the state fish hatcheries, to serve under the commission, who shall have full supervision of the management and work of all the hatcheries. James Annis Jr., of the Caledonia Hatchery, is the man mentioned for this position. There is another proposition to divorce the work of the State Fish Commission and of the game protectors, and to have the latter appointed by the Governor. Among those who are prominently mentioned for appointment as fish commissioners are D. Bauder, of Bath, President of the Pleasant Valley Wine Company; James E. Richmond, of Canajoharie; Edward Thompson, president of the Edward Thompson Publishing Company, of Northport, L. I.; Charles Babcock, of Rochester, and A. R. Fuller, of Meacham Lake, Franklin County. The present intention of the State Fish Commission is to increase the distribution of fish fry this year by about 40,000,000. One subject discussed was the propagation of typhoid fever by oysters, and, as it has been determined the evil occurred at Middletown, Conn., through oysters which had been "freshened" in streams into which sewage from cities and towns flowed, steps have been taken to prevent any future "freshening" in such streams in New York.

THE Christmas number, under date of December 22, of our valued cotemporary, The Fishing Gazette, of London, Eng., leads off with a detailed report of the festivities attending the annual dinner of the Fly-Fishers' Club, which took place at the Holborn Restaurant Friday evening, December 14. The members of the club were present in goodly numbers, and many had brought friends as guests to the banquet. The toasts and speeches were followed by an interesting program of songs, instrumental solos and recitations, and the annual festiva of the Fly-Fishers' Club was successfully concluded. The number is embellished with a cut of two monstrous trout, caught by Mr. J. Thurlow in the Wycombe stream, on June 13, in two hours' fishing. The trout weighed respectively seven pounds two ounces and five pounds six ounces—twelve and one-half pounds the brace—both taken upon an Alexandra fly. There is a picture of the late Mr. Francis Francis, for many years angling editor of The Field, engaged in roach fishing (a favorite amusement of that gentleman) upon the Crane, at Twickenham. An interesting article, entitled "The Late Czar's Fishing House in Finland," is finely illustrated, and this double number of the Gazette is replete with other matter of interest to anglers, notably the portrait of a well-known angler, Mr. Merthyr Guest, Master of the Blackmore Vale Foxhounds, and upon the opposite page that of a sixty-four pound salmon which that gentleman landed from the river Namsen, Norway, July 20. The salmon is the record fish of that river, tradition crediting the previous record to one of sixty pounds' weight, which was caught some fifty years ago by Sir Hyde Parker. In the picture a salmon of twenty pounds' weight was hung by the big fellow as a comparison of size.

THE statement is made that in Germany most of the inland waters which are well stocked with fish are held by proprietors whose tenure is exclusive. One such lake, at Tegensee, in Bavaria, is owned by Duke Theodor in Bavaria. Any person may fish in this lake upon the payment of a license fee and so much a pound for the fish taken. Upon this statement has been based a suggestion that fish and game clubs in this country would do well to adopt the plan of charging their members a certain royalty of so much per pound for all fishes or game captured or shot by said members. The deduction is that such a charge would not only prove a source of revenue, but members would be apt to kill less game and fewer fishes under such a by-law; beside these advantages, through the conservative sentiment thus brought about game and fishes would be more abundant upon all club preserves, and annual assessments, for the purposes of restocking, which have been so burdensome ofttimes to club members, would undoubtedly become unnecessary. The fact is cited that the Jekyl Island Club, as published in the AMERICAN FIELD of November 24, claims absolute ownership—as a club—of all game on its preserves, and enforces the claim through a by-law which provides that ... members or their guests must be ... But the superintendent is al... to ...ers desiring it, any surplus of game ... not necessary for the use of the ... seems a very timely hint to sports... by the fishes and game of the various preserves may be better protected, at a nominal cost to the clubs and their members, and we most cordially invite their attention to the suggestion.

AT the recent annual meeting of the Indiana Academy of Science, at Indianapolis, I. Walter Sharp, corresponding secretary of the State Fish and Game Protective Association, read a paper on the propagation and protection of fishes and game in that state, from which we quote: "Several causes tend to destroy Indiana game—severe winters, preying animals and especially man The quails are killed by the thousands, and the lives of many more are destroyed by egg collectors. The waters of Indiana streams are now almost devoid of fish life. Refuse from oil wells has killed many fishes. W. T. Dennis estimated that the streams of Indiana can produce yearly 600,000,000 pounds of fish. * * * * * The Legislature will be asked to create a fish and game commission, with an annual appropriation of $8,000, of which the commissioner shall receive $1,500. It is proposed to appoint deputies to do police duties on streams. These shall receive five dollars for every man convicted of violating the game and fish laws, the costs to be taxed to the defendant. A fish commission could make the waters of Indiana yield $60,000,000 worth of fish every year."

I MAIL to you a copy of the Jacksonville Times-Union, stating that fishes of all kinds were frozen at Sebastian, on Indian River, during the terrible cold snap of December 28 and 29. Indian River is an estuary of the Atlantic, in which the tide ebbs and flows as in the ocean. Halifax River, farther to the north, is similar. Each abounds with sheepheads, channel bass, mullets, etc. I was on Halifax River several years ago, with my old friend, William Brackett, now gone to the happy hunting grounds, fishing for channel bass and sheepsheads and we were told by farmers at different points on the river that after the freeze of January, 1886, they drew off frozen fishes by wagon loads and used them as a fertilizer on their land. I have no comments to make, further than that I have never heard of fishes freezing in tidewater anywhere else. The famous Icelandic writer—I do not now recall his name—tells of chasing trout on the thin ice, tiring them out and then catching them, but nothing of freezing them out.

Orlando, Fla. J. B. AIKEN.

A SHORT time ago, an angler of Portland, Ore., Mr. L. W. Moody, went out to Yaquina with an eight-ounce trout rod, silk trout line and an automatic reel, and gave the fishermen there an object lesson in salmon fishing. They had always used hand-lines and hauled in the royal salmon as if they were yanking in bullheads. They made all manner of fun of Mr. Moody's tackle, and prophesied disaster for the city "feller." He opened their eyes, however, by landing twenty-one salmon, which averaged fourteen pounds apiece. But, finally, a monster estimated at about twenty-five pounds carried away the outfit. Mr. Moody said afterward that he had there the greatest sport of his life, that his "automatic worked like a charm." He played one of his fishes one hour and one-half.

ON December 20 Game Protector Schwartz and two assistants, while patrolling the waters of Braddock's Bay, New York, saw two fish poachers. They pursued the men with all possible speed, but the fellows were faster oarsmen, reached the shore at Rigney Cove several minutes ahead of the officers, and led them a merry chase of a mile or two on shore, easily outfooting the pursuers at last. Returning then Game Protector Schwartz and his men found at the landing a boat containing a net and over 200 pounds of fishes. The latter were released, the net was confiscated, and the boat is in the hands of the authorities awaiting a claimant.

ACCORDING to a recent dispatch from Lacon, Ill., the fishes in the Illinois River are being killed off in great numbers in a singular manner. The surface of the stream is frozen, which confines noxious gases emanating from the sewage and the tar flowing from the Illinois and Michigan Canal, and the fishes are dying by the ton. It is claimed a fish from the river will emit a nasty odor when being fried, and that it tastes of tar. A number of fish dealers from towns adjacent held a meeting at Lacon on January 7, and decided to enter a protest before the State Fish Commissioners. It is thought the only way to preserve the remaining fishes will be to open the drainage canal.

SOME of the officers of the Maine Sportsmen's Fish and Game Protective Association are in favor of closing to anglers all brooks and streams flowing into waters that have been or are being stocked by the state. Objections have been made to such a proposition as being too sweeping in its action. But Col. E. C. Farrington, secretary of the association, claims the principle is just; that the state should not be expected to propagate trout and salmon, rear them to a length of three inches, and then liberate them in the streams to be caught out by hundreds and thousands.

AT Velasco, Tex., early this week, a strong north wind blew for three days, and caused the tide there to become so low that on December 29 thousands of fishes of all sizes and many varieties were stranded upon the river bank, for six or seven miles above its mouth. The affair was a boon to the colored folks of that section, who went out with sacks and wagons and gathered loads of the largest fishes.

THE fact that Chautauqua Lake, New York, is rich ground for violators of the fish laws, tons of fine game fishes being taken from its water and sold in the open market, has developed a desire for more thorough protection in that part of the state, and a meeting of sportsmen and others has been called to discuss plans for the better enforcement of the laws.

THE Adirondack League Club, of New York, has purchased some 26,000 yearling and two-year-old trout from the State Fish Commission, with which it is stocking its preserves at Fulton Chain, White Lake and Forestport.

THE superintendent of the United States Hatchery at Green Lake, Me., Mr. E. M. Robinson, has been transferred to a station in Virginia, and Mr. C. G. Atkins, of Bucksport, Me., has charge of affairs at Green Lake until another superintendent shall be appointed.

A SURPLUS of 5,000,000 of whitefish eggs from the United States hatchery at Paris, Mich., have been transferred to the hatchery at Duluth, Minn., probably to be hatched there.

ON January 4, Governor Altgeld, of Illinois, appointed Thomas Williams, of Havana, fish warden for that district of the state.

AT Parkersburg, W. Va., a storekeeper named Thanhauser has a tortoise in the backyard of his store which is said to be a most successful and remarkable killer of rats. The tortoise was presented to Mr. Thanhauser some years since by a man who had found it in the woods; it had lived in the rear of the store from that time, and its peculiar propensity for rat killing was discovered as follows, says a correspondent to the New York World: "One afternoon a store clerk heard a lively squealing in the yard. Looking out of the window he was astonished to see a big rat attacking the terrapin. The rat was the picture of savage rage as it charged upon the tortoise again and again, and bit at it with all its force. It failed, of course, to make even an indentation in the turtle's hemispherical armor. The rat climbed all over the tortoise, gnawed, scratched and squealed, but the tortoise, with feet tightly embracing the earth, its head drawn within its shell, lay apparently asleep. At last the rat stood with its hindlegs in front of the place where the tortoise's head ought to have been, and in a second out shot the head and neck, and the horny mandibles closed with a snap on the rat's leg. When the rodent felt the grip it turned and tried to reach the head of the enemy, but the shrewd tortoise had withdrawn its head, together with the rat's leg, under the shell and out of reach. Finding its efforts in vain, the rat made frantic attempts to pull itself loose, but the tortoise's jaws could not be moved, and it remained in one position as firm as a rock. This lasted a minute or two, when suddenly the rat pulled itself away, but its leg was amputated as cleanly as if done with a knife. The rat bled to death. The battle came off in view of as many spectators as could look through the windows of the store, and everyone admitted that it was the most remarkable one they had ever seen. After that battles were fought almost daily between the tortoise and the rats which infested the store, and which seemed to have a deadly antipathy toward the former. They all ended in victories for the hard-shelled gladiator. Sometimes the rats attacked him two at a time, but the result was the same. A leg was amputated, a disk of hide or flesh was clipped out or a tail was abbreviated, but the tortoise invariably escaped damage. It soon acquired a reputation as a rat-fighter, and it had admirers by the score. At last the rats deserted that neighborhood entirely."

IN a recent interview, Dr. J. T. White, physician and surgeon of the revenue cutter Bear, which arrived at San Francisco, Cal., November 14, is reported to have said, regarding the reindeer imported into Alaska by the government: "There are now about 600 reindeer at Port Clarence in the government herd and all the animals are doing well. The forty Laps placed in charge of the deer by the government are thriving and their change of residence seems entirely satisfactory to them. In all, about one hundred people live at the station, known as the Teller Reindeer Station, named after Senator Teller, who was the father of the scheme to transplant Siberian reindeer to Alaska for the benefit of the Eskimos. The other people who live at the station are young Eskimos, supported by the government, and are being educated in the herding and care of deer." Of the animals in Siberia, where many were bought, Dr. White says: "The reindeer are somewhat taller than the ordinary cotton-tail deer, with big bodies, slender legs and hoofs large and about the size of a cow's. They are in some respects hardy animals, but I saw two of them die of fright when lassoed and caught. In the Summer they live on leaves and fresh grass, the Arctic Coast being covered with tundra, a network of leaves, willow and moss. The grass is excellent for a few months and the deer become quite fat. In the Winter they live on a species of yellow moss which, when the snow becomes deep, they burrow for, being able to smell it, and they keep digging until they come to it. In the interior some men have as many as 1,500 deer in one herd. When we arrived at Killurin, near Cape Serdee, the natives were making their annual killing of deer, and the day we were there they killed about 700. The manner of slaughter is quite interesting, being humane. One man holds the deer by the horns, while another slips a knife between the animal's ribs, piercing the heart, and death results instantly. The natives are superstitious and the killing is attended with a great show of ceremony. When the slaughtered deer drops, fresh water is poured in the wound and also in the mouth. Bunches of hair are then seized and thrown to the winds and the cutting up of the animal is proceeded with. Everything is saved, there being no waste."

It seems strange that a city like St. Paul, Minn., to which the great game country of the Northwest—almost to Bering Sea—is tributary, should be without a first-class taxidermist. We quote from a letter received recently from a youthful sportsman of that city, as follows: "We have a city of 200,000 people and no taxidermist, and it would seem to me, if there is any money in the business, that a good taxidermist would do well in St. Paul. I am getting up a collection of game birds, and know several others who are doing the same. I am sure that if the right kind of a man should come here, and advertise in the AMERICAN FIELD, he would do a good business from the start. If you can help us boys in this matter it will be appreciated. We all take great interest in the AMERICAN FIELD, and its moral effect on the young sportsmen of Minnesota is great." It gives us pleasure to help the "boys," so far as calling attention to this matter is concerned, and to add that the great game resources of the British Northwest, as well as those of our own country, would seem to offer a profitable field for a good taxidermist located at St. Paul.

A SHORT time since the engineer of a passenger train upon a Maine railroad in the Aroostook region saw a large moose standing in the center of the track, the animal watching the rapidly approaching train and being evidently undecided whether to charge the locomotive or give it the right of way. A number of sharp blasts of the whistle decided the question for him, however, as he turned tail when the snorting monster was near and flew down the the track ahead of it. The engineer said the race was magnificent; that, although his engine was slipping by the mileposts at a forty-mile gait, the moose easily skimmed over the ground ahead and kept up the pace for about one-quarter of a mile. Then he left the track and plunged into the woods, apparently satisfied that he had beaten his opponent in the race.

AT Manasquan Inlet, N. J., on December 29, a whale thirty-five feet in length entered the inlet during high water and lay in a deep hole until the tide had fallen to the lowest ebb, apparently asleep. Then the big mammal discovered its situation, and the spectators witnessed a regular circus for some time. The whale lashed the muddy water into foam, in its attempts to force its way out over the bar, but unavailingly, and the entire population turned out to see the unusual exhibition. Arrangements were made to capture the cetacean before the water could rise sufficiently to give it liberty.

BY W. S. B.

It is interesting to know that Capt. John Mullan, that intrepid pioneer officer of the army, knew a good deal about the upper Yellowstone region as early as 1853. In his report on the construction of a military road from Fort Benton to Walla Walla he states that he learned from the Indians as early as 1853 that there were an infinite number of hot springs at the headwaters of the Yellowstone, and that in the midst of these springs were a number of geysers which spouted hot water and steam to a great height.

As the expedition under Capt. Clark descended the Yellowstone River it was discovered that some of the horses' feet were worn down to the quick, and they were unable to proceed. Horseshoes and blacksmiths were thousands of miles away, and some substitute must be at once devised. Pieces of green buffalo skin were cut into the proper shape, and a sort of moccasin was made and tied firmly around each hoof, and thereupon it was found the lame horses could march as well as ever.

The journey down the Yellowstone was without any remarkable incidents. At a point on the river where is now the town of Big Timber, Capt. Clark observed two streams, flowing into the Yellowstone from opposite sides, the mouths of the two streams being directly opposite each other. To these he gave the very appropriate name of "Rivers-Across," but modern vandalism, or idiocy, has called them "Big Timber Creek" and "Boulder Creek," respectively, and the striking and beautiful name given by the great explorer is no longer on any map except his own.

Captain Clark there determined to build some canoes or dugouts in which to float down the rapid current of the Yellowstone. He sent out one of his men to hunt for timber to make these boats, and this man returned with an account of a contest he had had with two white bears which chased him. He wounded one and then escaped on his horse. He described these bears as being very powerful and fierce.

Elsewhere in the narrative we find that Clark and his men had contests with these so-called "white bears." It was doubted for many years that there were any such "white bears" in that region. But it has since been ascertained that along that part of the Yellowstone is the habitat of the lightest-colored grizzly bear known. His skin is a very light tawny color, mixed with white or gray hairs, which give the animal the appearance of dirty white. A few years ago the writer was in the vicinity of Big Timber and saw one of these bears brought in by a hunter. The animal was very light-colored, and might easily be mistaken in the early morning or evening light for a "white bear."

The skins of these grizzly bears are beautiful, and it has always seemed strange to the writer that no specimens of this variety of the grizzly bear are to be found in museums or natural history collections. The light-colored grizzly bear skin of the Yellowstone country ought to be a trophy that sportsmen and naturalists should greatly value, as something nowhere else to be found.

Captain Clark built two canoes or dugouts from large cottonwood logs, and lashing them together he loaded them with his provisions, baggage and camp equipage. It was fortunate he had these canoes, for the Indians succeeded in stealing twenty-four of his horses during one night, and the party were thus "set afoot," as the Western phrase of to-day describes such a situation.

On one of the many beautiful islands in the Yellowstone, Capt. Clark landed one day and found a deserted medicine lodge, probably of the Crow tribe. Speaking of this island he says:

"It was a beautiful spot with rich soil and covered with wild rye (a species of grass), and some of another kind which the Indians wear in plaits arou[nd] ac[cou]nt of a strong scent resembling th[e] Th[ere] was a thin growth of cottonwoods [on] th[e] island. In the center was a larg[e] [lod]ge seems to have been built last Sum[mer] th[e] form of a cone, sixty feet in diam[eter] and the whole structure covered with b[uffa]loes. The interior was curiously ornamented. On the tops of the poles were eagle's feathers and circular pieces of wood with sticks across them. From the center was suspended a stuffe[d] buffalo skin. On one side of the lodge was a buffa[lo] head, on the other several pieces of wood stuck into [the] ground. From its whole appearance it was more lik[e a] lodge for holding councils than an ordinary dwelli[ng] house."

On July 25, 1806, Capt. Clark discovered the re[mark]able rock on the Yellowstone called by him "Pom[pey's] Pillar," and known by that name at this day. It is [about] thirty miles above the mouth of the Big Horn River, [and] is a huge mass of yellow sandstone some 400 feet h[igh]. Its top is flat and covers about half an acre. On its s[ides] the Indians have carved the figures of animals and [other] objects, and on the top were found by Capt. Clark [some] curious monumental piles of stones, placed th[ere] doubt by the Indians. Capt. Clark thus describe[s the] view from its summit:

"From this height the eye ranges over a large ext[ent of] variegated country. On the southwest are the [Rocky] Mountains covered with snow. The low grounds [of the] river extend nearly six miles to the south, when the[y rise] into plains reaching to the mountains and watered [by a] large stream, while at some distance below a ra[nge of] high land, covered with pine, stretches on both [sides] the river in a direction north and south. The n[orth] side of the river, for some distance, is surrounde[d by] romantic jutting cliffs; these are succeeded by ru[gged] hills, beyond which the plains are again open and e[xten]sive. The whole country is enlivened by [herds of] buffaloes, elks and wolves."

On the north face of Pompey's Pillar Capt. Clark c[arved] his name and the date of his being there, and th[is] scription is still visible: "Wm. Clark July 25, 1806."

The Indians had told Capt. Clark of the Big [Horn] River, which flows from the south and empties into [the] Yellowstone. They said it was navigable for a long [dis]tance up stream, through a rich, fine and open coun[try] where there was plenty of big game. The explo[rers] camped at the mouth of the Big Horn and was so w[ell] impressed with the place that he afterwards advised t[he] American Fur Company, of St. Louis, to build a permanent fort there.

It is truly an interesting region, aside from the natural beauties of the place. Up the Big Horn, forty miles from the Yellowstone, is Custer's fatal battle-field, where a monument to the slaughtered soldiers of the Seventh Cavalry now stands.

In early times, as early as 1807, the year after Capt. Clark was there, one Manuel Lisa, a Portuguese trapper and fur trader, established a fort at the mouth of [the] Big Horn, known as "Manuel Lisa's Fort." There [for] many years a flourishing trade was carried on with t[he] Indians, and white trappers made Lisa's fort one of the rendezvous and outfitting points.

There is no doubt that John Colter explored the hea[d] waters of the Big Horn in 1807, and he was at the mou[th] of that river, probably, when Manuel Lisa's fort w[as] built. If this was not the fact, how did Capt. Clark c[on]tain such accurate knowledge of the source and cours[e of] the Big Horn? His map shows the river very ac[cu]rately, and also shows Colter's route of 1807, running u[p] the headwaters of that stream. Colter's journey, as n[ow] on Capt. Clark's map, was from the Yellowstone River [to] Pryor's Fork, then across onto Clark's Fork, and fro[m] there to the Upper Yellowstone, thence around Yel[l]owstone Lake, thence south to the Three Tetons and Jackson's Lake, thence south to one of the forks of the Green River, which Clark on his map calls. "Colter's River;" thence back north to the Big Horn and down that stream from its source; thence to the great Boiling Spring of the Stinking Water River and then down Clark's Fork, Pryor's Fork, and the Big Horn to [its] mouth, where Lisa's Fort stood.

A most interesting memorandum is made by Capt. Clark in his journal at this point. He says:

"From Manuel Lisa's Fort, or mouth of the Big Horn River, the Indians say a man on horseback can tra[vel] [south] to the Spanish settlements in fourteen days—[to] the head of the Del Norte."

On July 27 Capt. Clark and his companions had the[ir] last view of the Rocky Mountains, which had been co[n]stantly in view since the first of May. He speaks wi[th] regret of their passing out of the range of vision, an[d] only the rolling hills and bluffs of the Yellowstone r[e]maining as a background to the scene.

The explorers next passed down the river to its mou[th] to await the coming of Capt. Lewis and his party, wh[o] were descending the Missouri.

While on the Yellowstone, Sergeant Pryor, accompanie[d] by three men, was in charge of the horses, driving the[m] by day and herding them at night. One August night a[ll] the remaining animals were stolen by the Indians, an[d] Pryor and his men were set afoot. But the Sergeant ha[d] learned to make bull-boats, or skin canoes, while winte[r]ing among the Mandans, and he construeted two of thes[e] curious vessels to transport his men and their provisio[ns] arms and baggage down the river. These "bull-boats" were like a huge basin, about seven feet in diameter a[nd] two feet deep. Two saplings were bent into a round hoop for the rim, and a second hoop—a little smaller—was se[t] in for the bottom of the boat. The frame was made firm by small sticks lashed with thongs between the hoops like the ribs of a boat. Over the frame a green buffalo bull hide was stretched tight and tied with thongs.

In these frail vessels Pryor and his men embarked, and were surprised at the perfect security in which they passed over difficult rapids and dangerous places on the river, and during high winds and storms rode the waves without shipping any water.

The valley of the Yellowstone, from where it debouches from the mountains near the present city of [Livingston] Montana, down to its mouth where it empties into the Missouri, is a region of surpassing interest to [the] who loves wild and picturesque scenes, to [the] who desires to observe the strange fossils of [past] bedded in the rocks along the river bluffs, and [to the] student who loves to recall the stirring events [of]

...Indians fought back the whites from in... ...th favorite feeding ground of the buf... ...ry's early events, of the struggles and ... of the pioneers, has been but imperfectly ... ...n now living who took part in those events shall h... ...se from earth—and their locks are now already white with age—the early history of the Yellowstone Valley will be an almost forgotten tradition. Around the mouth of the Big Horn, and up that stream, have marched and fought the bravest and best men that ever trod this earth, and the story of their heroism is now almost forgotten and lost. Events of more recent years, such as Custer's battle and the slaughter of his command, have been written about time and again; but the heroism of the early pioneers of that region, who opened the way to advancing civilization, has never been chronicled in any history as it deserved to have been.

Later Capt. Clark had given an account of the river, of the fertility of the soil along its banks, and the abundance of beavers on the main river and its tributaries, several fur companies established their forts on the Yellowstone. The life of those early trappers and traders along the beautiful river is almost lost to us now. We have some scanty accounts of expeditions up the Big Horn, Powder River, Tongue River and Clark's Fork, and some allusions to the lovely and fertile valleys along those streams; we have, also, some accounts of the fierce opposition of various Indian tribes who hated to see white men invade this paradise of big game. But the life of the early trappers and hunters of the Yellowstone, those who visited and traded at Manuel Lisa's Fort at the mouth of the Big Horn, is almost lost to us. Even the living pioneers of Montana know nothing of that period, as they all came later on the scene. Mr. E. S Topping well says, in his interesting Chronicles of the Yellowstone:

"The valley of the Yellowstone has been for many years the main battle ground in the United States between civilization and barbarism, and now when the former has triumphed, when old battle-fields are flourishing farms, when schoolhouses have taken the place of stockades, the time has come to record, as far as can be, the early history; for the deeds of its pioneers, the tales of their toil, privations and acts of heroism are fast being buried by the gravedigger—time."

The adventures of the men who marched up the Yellowstone in the early sixties, some in search of gold and some to hunt big game and to trap fur-bearing animals, would fill many volumes. Their sufferings and hardships were out of the usual run of such events, and were terrible and remarkable in almost every case.

For example, in 1864, three trappers, all celebrated shots, successfully defended themselves one entire day against 500 Sioux on the Big Horn. These trappers entrenched themselves and repelled repeated mounted charges of the Indians until night came, when the brave white men escaped. So severe had been the losses among the Sioux that they did not attempt to follow.

Perhaps the most remarkable heroism was shown in 1862, by a party of fifteen men who prospected the Yellowstone and Big Horn for gold under the leadership of James Stuart. Their camp was about fifteen miles up the Big Horn from its mouth. By compact among these men it was agreed that in case any member of the party was mortally wounded, he should kill himself, so that the rest might devote all their energies to fighting, or to escape if it was deemed best to retreat. A night attack by a large band of Indians resulted in seven of the white men being wounded—two mortally—and five horses killed and others wounded. Early in the morning one of the men, Watkins, died. The other badly wounded man, named Bostwick, told his comrades to give him a pistol and leave him. According to the compact he was given a pistol, and after bidding farewell to all, the brave fellow shot himself, so that the party should not be compelled to turn their attention to him. The Indians finally withdrew, and the next day, Geary, one of the best men in the expedition, accidentally shot himself in the breast, while drawing his rifle out of a pile of blankets. His comrades wished to break the agreement and stay with him. He, however, feeling that his hour had come and knowing that delay in the retreat would be fatal to all, sent his comrades out of camp and shot himself in the head, nobly dying to save the others. He was a great favorite, and the survivors wept like children when they returned and found Geary dead. Fighting their way, and almost starving, this band of brave men, some sorely wounded, crossed northward through the mountains to the Sweetwater River and returned to Idaho, having traveled one thousand six hundred miles through a country full of hostile Indians.

Such were the pioneers of the Upper Yellowstone, who suffered toil, privations, and sometimes death, making possible a future prosperity and peace, and laying the foundations of the glorious young state of Montana.

The path of Lewis and Clark along the Yellowstone has been trodden by many heroes who were worthy successors of the great explorers. Some of their names appear in history; others, the noblest and bravest of all, have passed, like their names, into oblivion forever.

Oh, for bard to chant their requiem! Oh, for storied pen to save
From the silence of oblivion legends of the true and brave!

Passing down the Yellowstone, and near its mouth, Capt. Clark and his party encountered vast herds of buffaloes. One Sunday in August, a herd was crossing the river. Such was the multitude of these shaggy monsters that, though the river including an island over which they passed was a mile wide, the herd stretched as thickly as they could swim from one side to the other, and the party had to wait for many hours until they had crossed. The shores for miles on either side of the stream were black with multitudes of buffaloes.

On August 12, A. D. 1806, the party under Clark was once more floating on the turbid waters of the Missouri, and about noon of that day was overjoyed to see the boats of Capt. Lewis heave in sight. ..., gliding swiftly along in a palace ... the beautiful valley of the Yellowstone. He can see from his car window many of the landmarks and objects of interest described so accurately and well by Lewis and Clark. He can view the cliffs and strata where that heroic explorer and geologist, Dr. Francis V. Hayden, made his interesting and valuable discoveries, which he gave later to the scientific world. He can see in a bend on the south bank of the river, just above the mouth of the Big Horn, the exact spot where old Manuel Lisa built his fort, the resort and rendezvous of the old-time trappers and hunters who called the river by its French name, the "Roche Jaune," or Yellow Rock River. The traveler can find and mark the trail where gallant Custer led his battalions to their last fatal field, on the Little Big Horn. He can visit many places on the river where fierce and bloody combats were fought between our troops and Indians of various tribes. He can see the glorious "Gate of the Mountains," near Livingston, up and through which he can now ride in a palace car to the wonders of Yellowstone Park, following along the path of old John Colter, whose story of those wonders no man (except perhaps Capt. Clark) believed for fifty years. He can follow in the footsteps of pioneer hunters and explorers whose heroic deeds have made the Valley of the Yellowstone classic ground for all time. He can follow in the paths of Bridger and Bozeman, who led many a train of emigrants through opposing tribes of hostile Indians to the lovely and fertile Gallatin Valley. He can stand on the little plateau at the Three Forks of the Missouri, where Sacajawea, the Indian woman, pointed out to Lewis and Clark the way through the Rocky Mountains to the headwaters of the Columbia. He can visit that mystical lake of Wonderland which is by far the most beautiful and picturesque lake in North America, once noted on the map of Capt. Clark as "Lake Eustis," now known as Yellowstone Lake to all the world,

The traveler may return from Wonderland and from the Upper Yellowstone, but the charm of that region will forever haunt his dreams by night, and his thoughts by day. He can never quite shake off the spell cast upon him by those snow-capped mountains, those crystal streams and that mysterious lake in the heart of the Rocky Mountains. Returning to the dull haunts of civilization and the monotonous routine of a commonplace existence, he will and must exclaim with the poet of the mountains:

My heart's mid the mirage, the lakes and the plains,
The buttes and the coteaus where wild Nature reigns:
My heart's mid those valleys and cañons so grand,
My soul wings its flight to that lone Wonderland.
Oh, my heart's 'mid toose fountains and streamlets b low
Those cloud-circled mountains, white-crested with snow.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—When reading the AMERICAN FIELD of December 22, I ran across that short, but rather remarkable note over the signature of Mr. E. O. Damon, of Northampton, Mass., a person who for the past several years has posed before the American people as a sportsman. Does he assume the honorable title of sportsman because of having owned two or three good dogs that were placed in stakes run at field trials in the past? If so, and charitably granting that to be sufficient grounds for him to assume that role, his idea of the attributes and requirements of a sportman must be very strange indeed, to judge from his own writings, for his one aim and ruling passion are apparently to cast slurs on others, presuming that they would stoop to the practices he appears to be familiar with and writes so fluently and freely about in charging others with perpetrating.

When Antonio won the Champion Stakes at the Eastern trials and the Free-for-All Stakes at the Central trials in 1891, he it was who, although he did not attend those trials, wrote and published an article in which he claimed the dog only won because its owners were present and indulged in untold lobbying and wire-pulling with the judges.

The owners! Who were they? When Mr. N. T. Harris purchased Antonio the preceding January, he bought him outright, and no one else owned a hair on the dog's body from that time until he was sold to the Blue Ridge Kennels, two months after the running of those stakes. Does anyone knowing Mr. Harris imagine he would even stoop so low as to think of, let alone countenance or permit for one moment, any lobbying or wire-pulling with a judge or judges in behalf of any animal he may own an interest in?

Mr. Harris was not even present at those trials in 1891, nor has he ever attended any of the Eastern or Central trials. On the contrary he was at that time over a thousand miles away, being at Eureka Springs, Ark., at the bedside of his wife, who was very ill.

Mr. Damon could have had no foundation for his statements when he wrote and sent them to the paper, yet, when the owner of Antonio telegraphed him they were false in toto, he did not have courage enough to publish a second article admitting that fact, and retracting and apologizing for his assertions as publicly as he had made them.

Again, after the "B" trials of the United States club at Grand Junction, Tenn., last Winter he once more breaks out through the public press. This time trying to vilify one of the owners and handler of Topsy's Rod, hoping to start a newspaper controversy and thus secure a chance to boost his own dog through such free advertising means, by claiming that the handler of Topsy's Rod had deliberately dosed that dog for fear Strideaway would defeat him the next day for the Derby Absolute if both ran on their true form. Like other men who are successful in any line of business, Mr. Avent may have his enemies, but his most rabid traducer cannot honestly accuse him of cowardice; and during the twelve years he has been owning and running dogs in the trials, not once has he shown fear of or shirked a possible defeat of any of his dogs, but on the contrary has always been ready to and has run them in every kind of competition. At that time he did not want the Absolute to be decided by default, but asked instead that it be postponed for a day so he could get his dog in a fair condition once more and then run the heat off. No, the facts themselves show it was not Mr. Avent who was afraid his dog might be defeated if run in his proper form, but rather the Strideaway followers who were shaky over the possible result, for they took advantage of the existing circumstances, demanding and securing the forfeiture of the heat to them. Was that true sportsmanship and a desire to see which was really the better dog of the two? No, most decidedly not.

When throwing his little bomb that was to crush out the Avent camp Mr. Damon overlooked the fact that an exploding bomb is sometimes liable to kick backward and do more damage in that direction than forward, as intended by the thrower. I do not mean by this any reflection against any of the Strideaway party who may have been present at those trials, or to insinuate that they were directly or indirectly involved in the dosing of Topsy's Rod. I most sincerely desire to believe that they would have prevented the dirty work if they could have done so or had even suspected anything of it beforehand. No, I merely wish to show them what a grave error they made, and the loophole for suspicion that was left open, when they accepted the decision of the stake under the existing circumstances. After Topsy's Rod was found to be dosed and unable to run, and the race had been postponed, they should have remained at Grand Junction regardless of time or expense until he had fully recovered, and then they should have insisted on the heat being run off. Such a course would have neeessitated a delay of only two or three days at the outside, and would have been positive proof in itself that they did not countenance any dosing of the opposing dog. But, failing to see this side of the question, what a pity they did not at least stop Strideaway's owner from putting them in the vocative by publishing such a letter as he afterward wrote.

Coming on down to the recent trials at Bickneli, Ind., where Strideaway next ran in public, as all know he there won the All-Age Pointer Stakes; and rightly so, I think, for I followed all the dogs closely, and consider that he won that stake beyond any possible chance of a controversy. Another close observer of the work of each dog in this stake was Mr. N. T. Harris, who afterward conceived the idea of a match between Strideaway and Lad of Rush, purely from a sportsman's desire to see a trial between two such dogs and a public demonstration as to which was the better. Not owning any interest in either animal, but willing to back Lad of Rush for a liberal amount in the hope by so doing of getting up a little extra amusement, on Saturday afternoon of that week, at the close of the trials, Mr. Harris spoke to me about trying to get up a match to be run at the "B" trials in January. I told him then I did not believe he would succeed, for I did not think Strideaway's owner would match and run him against Lad of Rush. Nevertheless, hunting up Mr. Adams, Mr. Harris talked to him about the matter and asked his consent to offer to run Lad of Rush against Strideaway. Mr. Adams at that time declined, giving as his reason the very fat and soft condition of his dog, which had done no field work since he ran at New Albany, Miss., nearly two years ago, and said he did not believe Lad of Rush could be put into proper condition to run a hard trial at the "B" trials, especially against a dog already in thorough training and the pink of condition, as Strideway was. The matter was then dropped and not thought of again until several days after his return home, when receiving from the owner of Strideaway a letter in which certain statements were made, Mr. Harris, on his own responsibility, replied, suggesting a match between the two dogs. He afterward tried to arrange the match by private correspondence, but failed; although Strideaway's owner never let pass an opportunity to try to belittle Lad of Rush.

Mr. Adams meanwhile was informed by Mr. Harris as to what was on the tapis, but still did not enter very heartily into the idea. Nor did he do so until upon the insistence of some of his friends, when, withdrawing his advertisement offering Lad of Rush for sale, he sent the dog to his trainer and at the same time issued his gentlemanly challenge through the AMERICAN FIELD.

In attempting to answer that challenge Strideaway's owner appeared in the next issue in one more of his usual contemptible articles. Owning a good dog, yet for some unknown reason afraid to run him against Lad of Rush; but, in a clumsy style, he attempts to conceal that fact and bespatter the "Louisville crowd," Mr. Adams and his dog in particular, and the "unfortunates in that land of five-cent cotton" in general. What a disgustingly weak reply, and how thoroughly portraying the character of its author!

How proud the noble old state of Massachusetts must feel to be able to call Mr. Damon one of her citizens! Such a wonderful discoverer, too! For does he not announce to us poor, ignorant mortals that Kentucky is part of that land of five-cent cotton? I wonder what any child in one of Massachusetts' kindergartens would reply to that. Such an exhibition of mental culture reminds me of the Englishman who was coming over to the States on his maiden trip, and happening to meet a young American girl on the steamer asked where she lived. She told him her home was in San Francisco, but she was attending school in Boston. "And do you go home every evening?" he asked.

One can hardly imagine it possible, yet, for fear some of our Northern friends might be misled, permit me to say that in one sense of the phrase Kentucky is not exactly in that "land of five-cent cotton," as not a pound of the staple is raised in this state for the market. Possibly some few along our southern border may raise a little for their own use.

If Mr. Damon meant that as an exhibition of his wit (?) and a sarcastic "fling" at the South, then, in that sense, he is perfectly right We are in that "land of five-cent cotton;" but, far from feeling "unfortunate," we are as proud of that fact as we are of being American citizens. With such an idea of "that land of five-cent cotton," and the "unfortunates" residing within that section of this country, as his writings have always shown, what cruelty and recklessness the man exhibits in sending his dog so far from home, and right into the heart of that land, too, to compete at any trials. Is he not afraid his dog might be kidnaped or made away with by some poor, miserable "unfortunate?" No, he knows full well the Southerner's love for a fine animal, and that his dog or any other dumb brute is always perfectly safe among us. But how carefully he always hides behind the wall of distance before venturing to indulge in some of his vaporing.

I do not wish anyone to think for one moment I desire to belittle Strideaway in any manner whatever. I most emphatically do not. And beyond a natural desire to be on hand to witness such an interesting match as the one would assuredly be between Lad of Rush and Strideaway, or any other two such dogs, I have no other interest whatever. Indeed, I would much prefer to see a sweepstakes between Rip Rap, Kent Elgin, Lad of Rush and Strideaway run at the "B" trials, if those dogs could be properly prepared and brought together for a two-hour heat race like the Free-for-All Stakes of the Eastern Club. There is a week intervening between the U. S. Club's "B" and the Southern trials, and such a contest could be run at that time under the auspices of the U. S. Club with such gentlemen as Messrs. P. Lorillard Jr , H. Duryea, F. R. Hitchcock and A. Merriman in the saddle as judges (all setter men and none interested in the dogs) and prove very entertaining.

What I have attempted to do is to show up the true colors of the man from Northamptou, Mass., who for the past several years has been ever trying to throw discredit on, and villify "that land of five-cent cotton" and her "unfortunate" people. To even condescend to notice or answer his letters is, I must acknowledge, almost paramount to lowering oneself to his plane, but forbearance finally ceases to be a virtue.

ST. MARC MERLE MUNDY.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—It is with reluctance that I enter your columns with an article on the above subject. It is unpleasant to be involved, as it were, in a matter of this kind, still I feel it a duty, on this occasion, to make some comment on the subject.

I wish to state that I should not feel called upon to make any comments were it not for the fact that the gentleman from the land of wooden nutmegs has taken it upon himself to include in his rabid, rambling article all persons who reside in the "land of five-cent cotton." I am proud to say that I was born and raised in the glorious land of cotton; and am also proud of the fact that he was not. However, this is only a difference in opinion, and I shall not deal in personalities, as it is out of place in a matter of this kind, besides being uninteresting to your readers. I simply wish to make a few comments on the recent challenge business.

In the first place, I have always supposed that when a man came out and claimed to have the best of anything which had been run in public competition he should be willing to prove the merits of what he had in actual competition; and the fact of anyone making such a claim is virtually a challenge to anything in the same class. Therefore, as our friend from Massachusetts took upon himself to claim that his dog was "the best that was ever brought out at our trials," it seems very unreasonable for him to get beside himself with impotent rage because he receives a gentlemanly and courteous challenge from the owner of a dog possessing a higher public record than his own. Under the circumstances it was both sportsmanlike and gentlemauly in Mr. Adams to make a challenge to Mr. Damon, and it was done in a square, business-like and courteous manner, and I ask the readers of your paper if the same can be said of the reply made by our Massachusetts friend?

As to the merits of the two dogs, I wish to ask if Mr. Damon considers his win at Bicknell against the long-haired puppy, which was then much younger than Strideaway (and which by the way ran his shorthaired wonder so close that it took the judges some time to decide which had won) and only seventeen months old, equal to two winnings by Lad of Rush against aged dogs? Strideaway started against aged dogs and was beaten. Which is the better dog, one that can win in his puppy form against all comers or one that can only win in puppy stakes?

Again, I will ask if the records show that Strideaway has won as many stakes as Topsy's Rod? And if he has not, then which has the better record? And why does he now refuse to meet a dog whose record shows a greater winner than his own? I think the records will show that Topsy's Rod is the best dog Strideaway ever met, and when they met at Bicknell Topsy's Rod was the youngest puppy in the stake, being only seventeen months old.

In regard to Mr. Damon's fling at the "Louisville crowd," I want him to state when and where he ever saw a challenge issued by the "Louisville crowd" previous to the one under discussion? I can see no wrong in a challenge if it is couched in gentlemanly language and made in good faith, and I regret very much that Mr. Damon has allowed himself to use sectional malice and personal spite as weapons in this challenge business; it is unsportsmanlike and will injure both himself and dog very much.

As to the remarks made in the gentleman's last article about our king of handlers from Tennessee, I do not think the public records will bear him out. If it had ever been shown in the records that J. M. Avent was guilty of any dishonorable acts he could not to-day occupy the position he holds in public opinion. Such men as Messrs. Dexter, Thayer, Hitchcock, Harris, Duryea and others are not apt to have close dealings with a man whose record is not clear, and it seems to me that if Mr. Damon really has any proof of the dark and terrible things he hints at he should say what they are and not deal in hints and sarcasm.

In conclusion I wish to say that some few years ago, if my memory serves me rightly, Mr. Damon attempted to impose an indignity upon one of our field trial clubs by having a negro to handle his dogs in competition with our best known handlers, who are, I am proud to say, all as highly respected gentlemen as any in this country. That, I think, had it been allowed, would have caused more gentlemen to withdraw from field trials than anything that has been said or written by any man from Tennessee or any other state in the Union.

D. G. ROWLAND.

DALLAS, TEX.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I noticed in a recent issue of your great paper a challenge from Avent & Thayer to E. O. Damon, in which they wish to run Topsy's Rod against his Strideaway. The challenge is certainly broad enough, and I am inclined to believe that Mr. Damon is a "little windy." I will wager he will never meet them, for Avent & Thayer have made their challenge business-like, and Damon will back down. Anyone who knows J. M. Avent knows him to be honest, and his word is sufficient guarantee to any of us who live in "the land of five-cent cotton."

I do not know Mr. Avent, but I have, through your valuable paper, often read of his achievements, and I do not hesitate to say that I had rather select a dog that he has bred and handled than from any other kennel or handler in the United States, for he will not misrepresent anything.

Mr. Damon's reference to "the land of five-cent cotton" was uncalled for, and that land will yet make him hump. You will see him back away from Avent, because the $150 deposit knocks his wind out.

GEO. E. WILLIAMS.

LEAMINGTON, ONT

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Permit me to say just a word in corroboration of Mr. Damon's position in regard to his opinion of Rip Rap. In writing me, before Mr. Avent's letter appeared, he took occasion to mention the dog in most favorable terms, expressing the opinion that he considered him "one of the greatest that ever lived."

I would be sorry to see disruption in the pointer ranks. The breed under adverse circumstances has proven itself the equal of any; and it only needs the encouragement of those who have done so much for it to continue to advance. Setter men seldom disagree, though their field trial advocates number a third more than the pointers, and the same unanimity among pointer men will soon show the breed's high capability.

Stick together, boys, the outlook was never more favorable. Work for one object, and that "to win."

HUNTING TO THE GUN

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In your last issue of the old year Mr. P. H. Bryson rides his hobby with good judgment, and I am glad to see that he believes things are coming his way at last. It is indisputable that the rage for range and speed has been carried too far, as is usually the case when any particular point, quality or accomplishment in an animal becomes a fad with the body of men most deeply interested. The ridiculously large ear of the fanciers' field spaniel, a dog designed to work in heavy and perhaps thorny coverts, and the equally idiotic, not to say unpleasant, brevity of the at present fashionable dock of the tails of driving horses, behind which dealers seem to forget that one has to sit, are simply parallel cases of the absurd length to which the craving for range and speed (at the expense of judgment) has been carried. Plenty of range is, of course, desirable, but it must be of the right kind; it must be tempered with bird-sense, judgment, discretion, headwork, or whatever you have a mind to call it. If a dog is put down in a large bare open field and he makes a bee-line across it, surely he should not be censured and sneered at as a bolter. The field affords little cover for birds, the probability is that it contains none, and very likely the dog is aware of this. The dog knows—at least he is supposed to know—that his duty is to find birds as quickly and often (and accurately) as possible, and in his judgment it is more profitable to pass over that stretch of ground and get to a more likely territory as quickly as possible. He takes some risks, to be sure, in so doing, but no more than does the enterprising merchant of everyday life. If matters turn out favorably, well and good; and merchant or dog, whichever it may be, is applauded as clever because there is a great deal of truth in the old adage that "nothing succeeds like success." The enterprising business man must, and is usually willing to, take some chances, and so must the dashing, enterprising dog. Perhaps, nine times out of ten, the dog comes out all right, because when the followers pass over that big, bare field no birds are found; but the tenth time up they get right from under the horses' feet, and we read in the reports "the birds were flushed by horsemen on ground that Crack-a-Jack had passed over." A black mark is scored against Crack-a-Jack, and a virtuous feeling prevails that bird-sense and judgment have been vindicated. Nevertheless Crack-a-Jack has used judgment, his action was taken for the same reason that it had been on the nine times when no birds were found, and he has used his best efforts toward "hunting to the gun."

"I have cited numerous instances wh[ere] range found more birds than those wi[th] Bryson. There is no denying that. [If] followed far enough we reach the [point] does the potterer cease and the good [bird] dog" begin (of course the potterer hu[nts] own way), and where must we draw the line between a bold and enterprising hunting-to-the-gun dog and the dog which Mr. Bryson accuses "many handlers and more spectators" of favoring?

Is it not true that many dogs of fair range belonging and broken by country sportsmen show great intelligen[ce] in working ground to the best advantage and find game very successfully, without laying themselves open to the charge of being potterers? Their range is purely natural and they are self-reliant, and are they not really good hunting-to-the-gun dogs? I think they are, and I believe one reason why they are is because, as Mr. Bryson puts it, they are "given their heads." It may not be, but is not, safe to give every dog his head, because he is a fool or too headstrong, but it was perfectly safe with Rip Rap and Chevalier their heads in the heather, as Mr. Bryson refers to because they were not apt to abuse their liberty. It is much the same with dogs as with horses, that a good deal depends upon the handler. The man with good hands can ride or drive a high spirited nervous horse, even if it is a bit hard in mouth, with comparative comfort to both, and he can give the horse its head. But the heavy-handed man does not, and perhaps cannot, and probably uses a shorter rein, very likely rides the bridle, and neither he nor the horse has a good time. Of course some horses are like some dogs—bolters—but rules must not be made to fit the exception. Let us by all means see to it that the bolters and rangers without judgment are relegated to the rear, where Mr. Bryson rightly declares they belong, and let the birdfinders come to the front. But when the pendulum swings back, as it shows signs of doing, let us also see to it that it does not swing too far the other way.

Someone, I forget now who it was, in a recent contribution to the AMERICAN FIELD, said that we have the best field trial dogs in the world. I think such statements are foolish and uncalled for.

TWO-BITS.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Lovers of dog and gun in general in this city wish to thank Mr. P. H. Bryson of St. Louis, for his able article in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 29, on "Hunting to the Gun." He expresses our sentiments, and if field trial managers and handlers would make hunting to the gun a rule more dogs would be trained and run in field trials. The people are tired of having to get the reports from the next county by telegraph as to what their dogs are doing. Like Mr. Bryson, we want speed, range and style, but we want some of the old-time bird-sense, and we want it where we can see it.

A BULL TERRIER CHALLENGE

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—To-day's mail brought me a stud card from Dr. R. S. Huidekoper of New York, receipt of which I hereby acknowledge, giving breeding, etc., of his bull terrier dog, Ch. Cardona, together with a list of this dog's winnings. All this is very well on a stud card and I heartily congratulate the Doctor in owning such a nice little dog and so successful a prize winner. I would, however, like to ask the Doctor what competition his dog had since the New York show last February outside Chicago and Providence, R. I. At Philadelphia, Boston and Boston Terrier shows he had bloodless victories. The Doctor says in a footnote at bottom of stud card, and referring to the award of the Westminster Kennel Club show, February, 1894, when his dog Cardona was placed second, "This award was made by an amateur judge at Madison Square Garden, and was reversed at all succeeding shows: first and specials over the same dogs."

Now here is where the object of this communication comes in. There were no "dogs" shown against Cardona at all succeeding shows. My dog, The Duke of Rochester, was the only dog that beat him at New York, and the only dog shown against him (that did beat him at New York) in Chicago and Providence, The Duke winning second in Chicago to Cardona's first.

Readers of the criticism in the AMERICAN FIELD in the issue giving an account of the New York show can readily see why The Duke of Rochester could not do any better than second at Chicago. The criticism I refer to was extremely harsh, and made by the party who afterward judged at Chicago and Providence, viz., Mr. J. Mortimer. I ask any right thinking man could my dog do any better than he did in the face of above facts? I do not for one moment question Mr. Mortimer's knowledge of his duties as critic or judge. I have the highest respect and warmest regard for Mr. Mortimer, and should never have referred to this matter, if I were not compelled to do so by seeing the footnote which appears on Dr. Huidekoper's stud card. The inference is plainly visible that my dog, The Duke of Rochester, is the dog (not "dogs") this note is aimed at. The reference to Mr. Stevens, as a judge, is not at all complimentary to the officers of the Westminster Kennel Club, who appointed him to officiate. We all knew what was going to do the judging long prior to the date of the show, and if we did not think him competent, we should not have sent our dogs to be judged by him. "Hollering afterward is the subterfuge of a sore head. Mr. Stevens, I admit, is an amateur in the ring—who were not at one time or another? I can, however, assure Dr. Huidekoper that he, Mr. Stevens, knows a "whole lot" about an English bull terrier and has had some as good ones as either the Doctor, myself or anyone else that I know ever had. At least he had the credit of owning them.

As before stated, this footnote is evidently [aimed at] The Duke of Rochester. If so, and Dr. Huidekoper imagines that his dog Cardona was [beaten] at Madison Square Garden last February, on [account of] dog The Duke of Rochester, I will make him the following proposition: I will show The Duke of Rochester against Cardona in New York in February, at the Westminster Kennel Club's show, and bet him $50 that [The Duke]

...ions. The conditions: The Doctor ... one, those two to appoint a ... recognized terrier judge), to pass ... I will also bet him $25 more that ... is the best American bred, heavyweight bull terrier dog living to-day outside my own kennels.

If it were not that the two open class wins in Toronto have not been recognized by the A. K. C., I might have a chance of again demonstrating in New York this year what Duke did last year. Unfortunately he has to go back again to the open class.

I hope Dr. Huidekoper will take this in the same spirit (legitimate rivalry) as it is written.

NATIONAL BEAGLE CLUB'S QUARTERLY MEETING

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The quarterly meeting of the National Beagle Club of America was called to order o'clock Friday afternoon at the rooms of the American Kennel Club, with First Vice-President J. W. Appleton in the chair. The members present were Second Vice-President H. F. Schellhass, Third Vice-President J. W. Rogers, Secretary-Treasurer George Laick, John Bateman and N. A. Baldwin.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read by the secretary and approved.

The new officers for the year 1895 were then installed as follows: President, H. L. Kreuder; first vice-president, J. W. Appleton; second vice-president, H. F. Schellhass; third vice-president, George B. Post Jr.; secretary, George W. Rogers; treasurer, George Laick. Executive committee: A. D. Lewis, N. A. Baldwin and J. B. Adler.

In the absence of the President, First Vice-President J. W. Appleton occupied the chair. On motion the chairman appointed a committee to audit the accounts of the Secretary-Treasurer for the year 1894.

The case of alleged fraudulent beagle pedigrees issued by John Jarvis, that was brought before the meeting of the American Kennel Club, was, on motion, voted that Mr. Best be addressed that the case was decided as follows: That the A. K. C. recommends that the charges be dismissed, but that Mr. John Jarvis be reprimanded for carelessness in the issuing of the pedigrees, and warned that any future errors of a similar nature will be severely dealt with, and the A. K. C. requests the privilledge of retaining the correspondence.

It was voted that the Secretary notify the A. K. C. that they would like to claim the date for their next field trials during the week beginning November 11, 1895.

In the case of the killing of Mr. John Bateman's two beagles, Mr. Bateman said that he did not care to enter into any lawsuit, but if the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals wished to prosecute the man, he would appear as a witness and state his case.

The chairman, on vote, appointed Messrs. H. L. Kreuder and H. W. Lacy a committee of two lay the case before the society.

The following gentlemen were placed in nomination for membership and were duly elected: Mr. Daniel F. Summers, Thorndale, Pa., Mr. A. D. Heald, West Chester, Pa.

It was voted that Mr. Pottinger Dorsey's name be stricken from the club's list of official judges, and the A. K. C. be notified of the same.

It is proposed by the club to offer a special prize of a piece of silver plate at the coming Westminster Kennel Club's show for the best beagle bred by a present member of the club, to be competed for by the members of the National Beagle Club of America only.

The meeting was then declared adjourned.

GEO. W. ROGERS,
Secretary National Beagle Club of America.

BUYING AND SELLING

CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Of late I have been interested as well as amused on reading in your valuable journal the several articles regarding how to buy or how to sell a dog.

My experience has been varied in this matter, but I have come to the following conclusions. First, in buying make sure you know your man, send him the money and order the dog; second, in selling be sure you have the money before shipping. An experience I have had of late fully confirms my decision in this matter.

Early in the past Summer I had an order from a gentleman in New Brunswick for a first-class cocker spaniel dog puppy. I had none, having dropped the fancy some years ago, but I corresponded with several breeders and finally ordered from one, sending money with the order. In due time the dog arrived, and a dandy at that. Seeing such a fine cocker gave me the old longing, which resulted in ordering a bitch for myself. I received her during August, and to say that she was first-class only half explains it. Her breeder informed me he considered her as fine a puppy as he had ever shipped, and on seeing her I fully realized he must have told the truth, for a more perfect specimen it had never been my lot to see.

About this time my English setter bitch had whelped seven puppies, and when they were five days old the mother was stricken down by arsenic poison, given with the intent to kill. In this the villain made a partial failure, as I saved the bitch but lost all of the puppies. Here a new trouble arose, fearing, as I did, an attempt on the life of my cocker; and, with all the care and I attention could give her, she received the fatal dose and died September 6 after suffering the most intense agony it has ever been my misfortune to witness In writing to her breeder I told him of my loss, and by return mail I received his ... that he was much interested ... how well she would please ... her baok he would send me ... opportunity free of expense. ... s, as I could never expect ... s she was, he being in no ... ough December 1 another one ... may not be quite the equal of the ... enough for me. Now let me say that the three puppies he has sent me have been first-class; all good in head, ears, legs, body and color and of the straightest possible coats. How he manages to get them all so good I do not quite understand, but when I remember that he is one of the veterans in spaniel breeding and still clings to his first love the mystery is partially explained.

Concerning the poisoning referred to above, I will say that I was unable to cause the arrest of the scoundrel, although I was quite positive who exposed the poison. I had every assistance from the police of the division and from all my neighbors; also from the S. P. C. A., which told me if I could give them positive proof they would do the rest. They also told me that in all the years they had been doing business they had never been able to make a successful conviction in a dog poisoning case. This was a new revelation to me, so I let the matter drop.

At the present time I am living in dread, not knowing how soon or where the lightning will strike. But should it strike in my yard again I possibly may take the law into my own hands; which if I do, rest assured, I will either convict or be convicted.

But I have departed from my text, and will end this somewhat lengthy and rambling letter by saying to all: "Gentlemen, order your dogs from breeders who have a reputation to sustain and who have always tried to be honest and square; then, if on receiving your purchase you are not satisfied, it is dollars to marbles you can exchange for something more pleasing."

A DAY AT ROSE'S KENNEL

CORINTH, MISS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—"A lover of dogs is a lover of man." This truth was exemplified in a convincing way when I had the pleasure last June to visit the kennel of Mr. D. E. Rose, at Lawrenceburg. Mr. Rose is a dog man, every inch of him, and he knows a good dog when he sees it and he sees the best string in the country every day in the week.

A visitor is struck with the pretty appearance of his home on the outside and the elegant appointments inside, which bespeak the taste of Mrs. Rose, a very pleasant lady and a musician of no mean ability.

After a chat with Mrs. Rose and little Marguerite a visit to the kennel was proposed and promptly accepted. The all-age dogs were first seen. They are Bessie Shoupe, Allene, Dick Fox, Blue Ridge Mark and Sadie Ross—a better lot of dogs would be hard to get together. The Derbys are all by Antonio—six in all—two out of Countess Rush, one each out of Ruby's Girl II, Can Can, Laundress and Lillie Burges, and a likelier lot of youngsters were never seen.

White Wings, one of the few bitches that were bred to Wun Lung, was nursing a litter by Antonio.

Mr. Rose has two puppies of good Derby age out of the Wun Lung—White Wings litter that he is very proud of and expects great things of. The dogs are in good condition, flesh firm and not too much of it, which shows they have been working hard. The kennels are roomy, admirably drained and perfectly clean.

Mr. Rose had his speeder brought out, driving me to the fields which have been made historic by being the ground where his great ones were developed, from Daisy F down to the present. The second day of my visit we went out with ten puppies—flyers, most of them—and Mr. Rose's ability as a trainer was demonstrated by the control he had over the lot. I was asked my opinion as to the best one. It would take a field trial judge to form a correct idea and I would not venture an opinion, but secretly I was much impressed with the Antonio—Can Can puppy. But they were all high-class puppies, and Mr. Rose expects to come in under the wire with some of them. A more pleasant day with the dogs I never spent.

All these added classes have three prizes, $15, $10 and $5. THE St. Louis Kennel Club held its second general meeting at the office of Treasurer J. B. C. Lucas, 919 Chestnut Street, on Friday evening, December 28, many members being present when the meeting was called to order by President John A. Long. The principal business which came up for discussion was the question of incorporating in due form under the laws of the state of Missouri, and the recommendation of the board of directors that a stock company be formed with a capital of $3,000, divided in 300 shares of $10 each. This scheme was carried by an overwhelming majority, there being practically no opposition. The first intention was to have a nominal entrance fee and annual dues not to exceed $4 per annum, as was stated in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 8; but objections arose, principally that the individual liability of members of a club of this kind was not clearly defined, and many gentlemen interested in the movement, and willing to help it along by becoming members, considered the annual dues feature undesirable and troublesome. The plan of incorporating on the basis of a capital stock was then decided upon, the ownership of one or more shares of stock to constitute membership, thus putting the club on a solid financial basis. Subscription lists to the capital stock have been opened, and already many prominent St. Louisians have become stockholders. President Long congratulated the members on their success up to date, but told them that much yet remained to be done, and urged them not to be satisfied until every share had been subscribed for. Information can be obtained from Treasurer J. B. C. Lucas, President Citizens' Bank, or Secretary Hutchison, 1800 Hickory Street. A committee for the purpose of soliciting subscriptions, consisting of J. B. C. Lucas, Phil. C. Scanlan, John F. Shepley, Mark Ewing, B. Van Blarcom, J. M. Carpenter, Harry C. January, Marshall F. McDonald and J. A. Long, was appointed, and after the transaction of considerable routine business the meeting adjourned. The list of members of the Kennel Club up to date is as follows: J. B. C. Lucas, Phil Scanlan, John A. Long, William Hutchison, John F. Shepley, P. H. Bryson, Sam B. Stannard, Dr. E. H. Kessler, B. Van Blarcom, Martin F. Nolan, C. W. Scudder, J. W. Scudder, Irwin Z. Smith, C. A. Pratt, Charles H. Kunkel, Rene Bakewell, D. L. Parish, W. M. Anderson, Ben Many, Mary Hill, W. E. Field, John H. Schlachler, R. P. Slattery, L. E. Anderson, Mrs. Mai M. Robbins, Frank Green, Clarence Beck, Blake Collins, A. McElrath, George E. Burrowes, Mrs. C. H. Phillips, E. V. Papin, John J. Baulch, A. B. Koenig, William Clark, H. Teschenacher, John H. Roeker, Marshall F. McDonald, F. P. Vest, John T. Cochran, Rudolph Schmidt, Harry C. January, A. C. Carpenter, Mark Ewing and N. W. Ewing.

IT is a wonder to me how the dog thieves exist, but I have thought many times that they went from one large city to another. Right here in New York City valuable dogs are taken from their owners by spells, and I was just musing about one of my lost dogs when a friend of mine, a traveler for a large wholesale house in St. Louis, handed me the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of December 31, calling my attention to an article on dog thieves headed "Valuable Dogs Stolen. An Organized Gang of Thieves Operating in St. Louis." One man, a Mr. Morgan, lost two dogs valued at two hundred and twenty-five dollars. It is high time the dog men of this country got together and form an organization to protect themselves from thieves. Yet on the other hand, Mr. Editor, there is another trouble that is worse in my eyes than stealing. When a man buys a dog from a breeder on trial, that man should return the dog if the dog does not suit, or keep the dog and pay the money agreed upon. In looking over my back numbers of the AMERICAN FIELD I find in your issue of May 19 a letter from one G. O. Smith of Wheeling, W. Va., wherein he says he sold a pointer dog to a man in St. Louis and that that man would neither pay Mr. Smith nor let him have his dog back. If the dog fiends would only just leave good men's dogs alone, and steal only from a man that gets dogs under false pretenses, it would be all right, but as a rule these "guys" are left alone. While writing I remember that about one year ago I went west on a real estate deal, passing through St. Louis, a very fine city. On my way back I concluded to stay over at St. Louis for three or four days and take in the town. I went on 'Change, and got well acquainted with a man who deals in options and other stocks and is a lover of good dogs. He told me he had just bought a fine pointer from a man in the South. But as G. O. Smith did not give the name of the man in St. Louis that had got his dog and would not pay for it, I never dreamt that the fine dressed fellow on 'Change was the one; on the other hand my newly made friend did not tell me who the man in the South was. But since reading that article I would advise breeders not to sell dogs to anyone in St. Louis unless they are well known and are what I call genuine sportsmen.

New York. ST. PAUL.

THE Western Kennel Club Company is early in the field with its premium list and the show committee hope their efforts will be appreciated by a correspondingly large entry. Mr. John Davidson will again judge the entire show, and Mr. C. H. Withington will once more be superintendent with Dr. Bock as veterinarian as usual. A challenge class of $10, two open classes of $10 and $5, and a puppy class of $10 and $5, are provided for St. Bernards (both varieties), mastiffs, Great Danes, greyhounds, pointers, all setters, cocker spaniels, collies, fox terriers and pugs, with the exceptions that pugs and Great Danes do not have the puppy class. Borzois, deerhounds, foxhounds, field spaniels, bulldogs, bull terriers, beagles, Irish and Scottish terriers get two open classes of $10 and $5; bulldogs and bull terriers each having a $10 challenge class also. A single open class of $10 and $5 is the portion of the following breeds: Newfoundlands, bloodhounds, Chesapeakes, Irish water and Clumber spaniels. And poodles, dachshunde, whippets, Dandie Dinmonts, Skyes, black and tans, Yorkshires, other toy terriers, toy spaniels, Italian greyhounds and miscellaneous each find an open class of $5 and $2.50. Kennel prizes of $15 are offered for St. Bernards (rough or smooth), mastiffs, Great Danes and Newfoundlands, and of $10 for bloodhounds, borzois, deerhounds, greyhounds, pointers, foxhounds, all setters, field spaniels, collies, beagles, cocker spaniels, fox terriers and pugs. There is a handler's prize, not open to local competition, of $1 a head for each dog shown (by the handler with the largest number we suppose, though the premium list does not say so), provided they number thirty or more. The entry fees are graded as follows: For mastiffs, St. Bernards, Great Danes and Newfoundlands, $3; for toy terriers, toy spaniels, pugs, Italian greyhounds and whippets, $2; and for all other breeds $2.50. The club will bench and feed, using Spratts Patent's biscuits, and entries will close on February 27.

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of December 29 Mr. L. W. Blankenbaker, of Louisville, Ky., denies my claim, in an advertisement in the AMERICAN FIELD, to having trained Lad of Rush. In reply I beg to submit a few facts: On the sixth day of October, 1891, when he was six months and twenty days old, Lad of Rush was delivered to me by Mr. T. H. Gibbes, of Columbia, S. C., to be trained for field trial purposes. I handled Lad from the time of receiving him until March 22, 1892, when he was delivered to Mr. Gibbes, being then one year and six days old. When he left me he was steady to shot and wing, worked well to the gun and was under as good control as any dog I ever handled. After that Mr Gibbes disposed of Lad to Mr. J. L. Adams, of Louisville, Ky. Mr. Blankenbaker says that Lad was placed in his hands "when only about twelve months old; he then was practically untrained, was not steady to wing or shot and only showed good natural quality." How Mr. Blankenbaker can make the claim he does in view of the facts given above—and they are facts which can be proven by outside witnesses if necessary—I am at a loss to understand. It is usual for entries for field trials to close in May or June, and if Mr. Blankenbaker can foresee what an untrained dog can do with sufficient certainty to warrant its entry in two Derbys to be run in November and December following, I am constrained to say Mr. Blankenbaker is a farseeing man, and as a "dog man" is certainly a good one. If it is customary to work bird-dogs on game in Kentucky during the summer months it is impracticable to do so here. If he took Lad of Rush—according to his statement "an untrained dog"—and completed the work in the Autumn months in time to make him the winner of two Derbys in November and December following, Mr. Blankenbaker is certainly a rusher.

Yorkville, S. C. C. H. SMITH.

LAST Saturday Mr. Geo. Hill arrived in Chicago, and Monday found him installed in the Mascoutah Kennel Club's rooms busy with the premium list for the show in March. He is looking very well and declares he is in good trim to stand all the hard work incidental to the superintendency of a big show. We were permitted to have a peep at the premium list, or as much of it as was completed, and found some pleasant surprises in the list of judges. Two new men are down for mastiffs and English setters, and if both do not acquit themselves thoroughly well we shall be much surprised. The list of judges was not quite complete, but will be so in a few days and we shall be able to announce them next week. Some of them have, of course, been here before; in fact one or two officiated at the club's show last year, but it is some time since the gentleman who will make the fox terriers' awards has judged in Chicago. The club's premium list will, as usual, show a liberal classification, but the prize moneys will be less than last year's; this, however, to a certain extent, will be compensated for by a long list of special prizes for dogs owned in Chicago and suburbs. Most of the specialty clubs have done well by the show, and, as it has been made a point not to duplicate the New York judging list, there should be no falling off in the matter of entries. One well-known name will be absent from the premium list, and no doubt its bearer, who, with the exception of a single year, has made such a popular veterinarian at the Chicago shows, will often be kindly asked after; we allude to Dr. R. J. Withers, now in California, who will be succeeded by Dr. W. A. Bruette, formerly a partner in the Bulled-Bruette Kennel. We understand that the entry fee will be $3 and that entries will close on Saturday, February 16.

UNDER the heading of proposed amendments to regulations governing clubs holding shows under A. K. C. rules we find in the December issue of the American Kennel Gazette that the committee on constitution and rules gives notice of the following proposed amendments to be acted upon at the annual meeting of the American Kennel Club.

TO BE REOULATION IX

In the event of any persons or club, not a member of the American Kennel Club, holding a show at which the entry of any person not eligible to make entries at American Kennel Club shows is accepted or who may be permitted to show dogs or act as agent for any other exhibitor, and officiate in any capacity at the show, every person officially connected with such show shall at once be suspended by order of the president and deprived of all privileges of the American Kennel Club, pending the holding of the next meeting of the executive or advisory committees, at which meeting the committee must either remove the suspension or impose a penalty of disqualification for such period as they may decide upon.

TO BE SEC. 2, REOULATION XIII

The secretary of every show must forward to the secretary of the American Kennel Club a duly certified copy of the judges' awards within seven days of the closing of each show.

Perhaps Mr. Geo. Bell's exhibiting at Pittsburg last September and judging at the Toronto Kennel Club's Spring show in April has something to do with the proposed new regulation.

PORTLAND, Oregon, has been having a midwinter fair, and during the recent holidays an informal dog show was added as a special feature. This show was in no sense a competition. There was no intention to have the animals officially judged nor to award any prizes. It was simply an an exhibition of well-bred dogs by their owners, with the ultimate object of having a kennel club organized and a regular dog show held at a later date. That such a show could be made a success was demonstrated by the way in which one hundred and seventy dogs were brought together, belonging to some fifty different persons, without any special inducement for the owners to go to the trouble and expense necessary. The breed most numerously represented was the English setter, of which thirty-seven were on exhibition. A great many breeds were shown, and several litters of puppies as well. In connection with this exhibition the following queer predicament is related by the Oregonian: "Tonight, owing to the Salvation Army having possession of the center of the building, under a lease made several months ago, visitors to the fair will be admitted at the Washington street entrance near the east end of the building." That must have been nice.

AN Associated Press despatch from Minneapolis says: "A plan is on foot for the formation of a canine mutual protective association which if carried out will save for its owner many a valuable dog. The scheme is outlined by O. B. Clarke, of this city, and it is proposed to have a small annual dues. Each member will be furnished with a list of the dogs owned by the other members and a basis of identification will be arranged. Lost or stolen dogs can be traced and dog thieves can be caught. The dues will be used as a fund to prosecute persons caught with stolen canines. It is expected a thousand members can be obtained." What a time the secretary of such an organization would have compiling a list of all the dogs owned by a thousand members and keeping it up to date. By the time he had finished his compilation and had furnished each member with a copy perhaps twenty-five per cent. of the dogs would be dead or sold, and besides that the remaining seventy-five per cent. might be increased to double the number by dogs bought and puppies reared. Still, there is nothing like trying what can be done.

MR. ROGER WILLIAMS is breeding bloodhounds by the drove, herd or flock. It is only a few weeks since we mentioned that his show bitch Vigilant had presented him with a fine litter of nine, but that was insignificant alongside of what his other bitch has done in the way of production. "On January 1," writes Mr. Williams, "my bloodhound bitch Frisca whelped sixteen puppies by Jack Shepard—twelve bitches and four dogs—all big, strong and lively. If I am not mistaken this is the record for bloodhounds. Before breeding Frisca to Jack Shepard John Naylor assured me she would have a large litter, but I had no idea of such a wholesale lot. As she is an excellent mother and has an abundance of milk I think she will raise them all." It is hard to say positively what is the record number for a litter of bloodhounds, but sixteen is a very large litter and larger than any other American-bred litter. No doubt Mr. Winchell could give some figures about large bloodhound litters.

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of December 29 I noticed an article from Mr. Alvord of Gloversville, N. Y. [illegible] the pedigree of the fox terrier Warren [illegible] seems to me that there has been quite a [illegible] about the pedigree of this dog since he [illegible] York last Spring, and I wish to let [illegible] know that we have given his pedigr[illegible] dam, Eggesford Sapphire, just as we g[illegible] not right it is not the fault of either the Messrs. Rutherfurd or myself. I have now before me the pedigree certificate that came with the bitch; it is signed by Mr. Aspinall, the secretary of the English Kennel Club. Mr. Vicary most certainly should know the pedigree of Sapphire if he was the breeder of her dam, but the writing before me is too plain to be mistaken in the name; it spells V-a-t-i-c-a-n, and I do not think anyone can make "Vacation" of that. If there is a mistake it was made in England.

Allamuchy, N. J. DONALD MUNRO.

THE Newark (N. J.) Whippet Club brought off some whippet races on New Year's Day. The course was laid out in a big field on Bloomfield Avenue, opposite Roseville Avenue, and the attendance was large. In the trial heats the following dogs won: First, Douglass' Peeping Tom; second, Thompson's Bendigo; third, Camb's Young Dick; fourth, Wade's Paddy Fullerton; fifth, Hart's Daisy; sixth, Parkin's Tony Pastor; seventh, Camb's Canteli; eighth, Mayfield's Fanny; ninth, Thompson's Peggy. In the final heat R. Thompson's Bendigo won the first prize of $35, Wade's Paddy Fullerton the second prize of $10, and Camb's Young Dick the third prize of $5.

MR. W. M. EVERTS, of Topeka, Kan., paid us a pleasant visit last week. He is much interested in the advancement of Great Danes and St. Bernards in Kansas. Of the former he has the golden brindled bitches Queen, Polly and Bessie, by Prince Victor—imported Bauscham, and in St. Bernards he owns three good ones. Sir Nero (E. 31747) is five months old, twenty-seven inches high and weighing one hundred and five pounds—a large puppy for his age but without an imperfection, due to early and plenty of exercise. Topeka Belle (33780) and Juno fill out his trio of St. Bernards.

A STRAY dog played the part of a hero at Anderson, Ind., last Saturday, by saving a child, named Gail Newton, twelve years old, from drowning. A number of boys were skating when the ice cracked suddenly and the lad fell in a large crevice, the others escaping, well frightened. When they had recovered their senses they looked back and saw a strange dog holding young Newton's head above water and trying to gain a footing on the ice. They hurried to the rescue and pulled the boy out and carried him home. The dog disappeared and now Gail Newton is looking for his savior.

SOME two, or possibly three, years ago a very handsome English setter dog showing every evidence of being splendidly bred was lost from some one of the trains passing through this city. Now if any person having lost a black, white and tan English setter dog about the time above mentioned, from any of the railroads passing through this city, should see this and will address me at 1403 Locust Street, giving full description of same, I will do all in my power to help him recover his property.

Des Moines, Ia. T. W. S.

MR. E. H. MORRIS' imported King Charles stud dog Royal Roy (30359) died on December 28 after a series of epileptic fits. Royal Roy was whelped November 27, 1889, and was bred by Mrs. E. Forder, a well-known English breeder and fancier of toy spaniels. Since his importation he had done some winning here, and in Canada as well. In 1892 he won at Ottawa (Canada) and Nashville, and was second at Toronto; in 1893 he got the reserve card at the Rhode Island State Fair and won at Danbury; and last year he was third at New York, where Mr. Morris expected to exhibit him again next month.

IT appears there is no chance to get a match between Lad of Rush and Strideaway. I propose to have nothing more to say in regard to it. Mr. Damon does not seem to like my advertising Lad of Rush as "without an equal living or dead" as a field trial performer. I believe the statement I make to be true. I have been told by men much better posted than Mr. Damon or myself that it is true, and as I pay for it I shall continue to advertise it while I own the dog, unless some other dog beats his record.

Louisville, Ky. J. L. ADAMS.

MR. E. O. DAMON, who leaves Massachusetts this week for three weeks in the South, has purchased the English setter dog, Cash Boy, by Vanguard—Georgia Belle, by Gleam—Doe, and will breed his Count Noble bitches to him. George Gray has Strideaway at Guyton, Miss., where he is putting the finishing touches to him for the United States F. T. Club's trials.

A NUMBER of New Jersey sportsmen have formed the Sussex County Fish and Game Protective Association, and though the stated objects of the association do not include protection of dog owners, yet it has offered a reward of $100 for the arrest and conviction of dog-poisoners that have been operating in Newton, N. J., very recently.

WE hear that Mr. C. Trecker, of Odell, Ill., has a Lawrence Garza puppy which at four months and six days weighed eighty-six pounds. Its form, color and markings are described as exceptionally good, and we are assured by a good judge that it is a coming winner if things go right.

THE Pacific Kennel Club's show will be held [illegible] week in May, and the show committee has [illegible] enough to again secure the Mechanics [illegible] the 1893 show was held so successfully. [illegible] talk of trying to hold sheepdog trials at the [illegible]

FIXTURES

American Waterloo Cup meeting (first), Huron, S. D., October 8, etc. F. B. Coyne, secretary.

Altcar Coursing Club's third annual meeting, ——. October 15, etc. Entries for Altcar Produce Stakes close March 1. T. W. Bartels, secretary.

Kenmore Coursing Club's third annual meeting, ——, October 22, etc. C. F. Weber, secretary.

Cheyenne Coursing Club's first meeting, Great Bend, Kan., October 29, etc. Ira D. Brougher, secretary.

IT is an old saying that one must go away from home to learn the news. A friend in San Francisco has kindly sent us a marked copy of the Morning Call, from which we glean the following: "Mr. Grace has received a very complimentary letter from J. A. Sauer of Huron, S. D., chairman of the executive committee of the American Coursing Club, asking him (Mr. Grace) to judge the first American Waterloo Cup meeting, which is to take place there next October. Mr. Grace states that he reluctantly had to decline the honor and pleasure it would afford him to judge this great meeting for the leashmen of the country owing to business affairs which will require his strict attention. Mr. Grace's resolution not to judge the meeting is much to be regretted, for there is not another man in the country in whom all coursing men have such unbounded faith as they have in this gentleman." We heartily indorse the sentiments of the writer on the Morning Call, and hope that Mr. Grace will reconsider his decision. Only recently we received a letter from Mr. Grace, saying that he intended to give up judging, but we trust he will think better of it and consent to take the saddle at many future meetings; his permanent retirement would leave the Californians inconsolable, and his successor would have a difficult task indeed to fill the position in the same satisfactory manner. Further on we learn that Mr. Martin Kerrigan, who attended the Goodland meeting last October, has leased a large piece of land in the vicinity of San Francisco and intends to have an inclosure ready for a meeting by the middle of February. The Call says: "The field is admirably suited for coursing purposes, the soil being of a rich black sandy formation well covered with grass, so that a dog can run on it all through the year without taking any risk of being injured. The extent of the field is 1,500 yards by 500. This will give great room for dogs and hares to test both their speed and staying qualities. The railway and the electric cars pass by the gates, which are no more than one hundred or one hundred and fifty yards from the station." Such an inclosure as this—though perhaps the dimensions are a trifle overestimated—with a man like Mr. Kerrigan as manager should be very popular and furnish really good coursing if meetings are not held too frequently. Another paragraph which will undoubtedly interest many of our readers is the following: "Mr. B. Doherty's Royal Buck—winner of the great Merced meeting—and probably his sister, Dalsy Crest, will enter for the Waterloo Cup. We understand that one of them, at least, will run in Mr. J. Herbert Watson's name. As these dogs were sired by Royal Crest, the owner of the latter dog was anxious to have one or two of them go into the first American Waterloo Cup, and with that object in view Mr. Watson has settled with Mr. Doherty about the matter. Mr. Watson could scarcely have made a better selection, and if Royal Buck goes to the slips in the Waterloo Cup in as good a condition as he did last November in Merced it is safe to say that the dog that can down him will surely come out close up to the finish, if not the actual finisher of the big stake."

WE desire to call attention to the Altcar Club's advertisement in our business columns, where will be found in full the conditions and all particulars of the Altcar Produce Stakes for dog and bitch puppies whelped last year. We believe the conditions will appeal favorably to the coursing men of the country and we expect to hear that by March 1 a large number of entries have been made. No breeder or owner having promising saplings can afford to let this opportunity go by, for this will undoubtedly be a far more valuable event than any puppy stakes that American coursing has yet seen. The Altcar Produce Stakes should appeal to owners and breeders of greyhounds in the same manner that the Derby of England or America appeals to breeders of thoroughbreds. Last year's American Derby received 272 entries, and we hope the Altcar Produce Stakes will receive fully a third of that number; at any rate we see no reason why seventy-five entries cannot be confidently reckoned on. Of course, it is not expected that all, or nearly all, will start, but if this stake does not prove to be worth a thousand dollars, at least, we shall be disappointed; and with liberal entries it will be more valuable than that. We wish particularly to call the attention of Californians to this rich event, for such it will undoubtedly prove. Californian owners have little or no provision for puppies made at meetings on the Pacific Coast, and their puppies generally have to compete against aged greyhounds. We hope we may calculate on California sending some greyhounds to run in the American Waterloo Cup at Huron, S. D., and as the Altcar Club's meeting is scheduled for the following week, and will be [indirectly] on the way back to California, the Californians will surely take the opportunity to send some of their best puppies to compete in the produce stakes under notice. The liberality of the Altcar Club in adding $150 must not be overlooked, and as the entries close seven weeks hence we advise owners to lose no time in "sizing up" their youngsters. The man who neglects to enter his puppies and next Autumn finds himself blessed with one or two that have turned out to be really good will not feel happy. As we have said, we believe owners will like the conditions of the stake, but it might be advisable to change the date of payment of the third forfeit from August 15 to September 1, which would afford a better opportunity to give puppies some sort of a trial or two before making the payment. There is just one thing we do not quite understand, and that is why an event in which can be entered greyhounds whelped perhaps a year ago or more is a produce stake, but good authorities have been quoted to show that it is correct.

THERE are no more "ifs" about Dr. Van Hummell's trip to England; he has engaged passage on the Lucania, which sails on the twenty-sixth of this month, and will be accompanied by Mrs. Van Hummell and her sister, Mrs. Stevens. It is not the choicest time of year to go (except for a fox-hunting or coursing enthusiast), for there is the probability of a rough passage, followed by some nasty weather at the other end. The Doctor will see coursing under very different conditions and surroundings to what he is accustomed to in our western states, and he may think the weather miserable when compared with the Indian Summer of America, but he is pretty sure to pick up a thing or two worth knowing, for he is not the kind to go around with his eyes shut; and he may pick up a dog or two worth running, though he will have to put down the pieces if he buys something they think well of over there. With Mr. H. Scott-Durbin (who sailed from New York last Thursday) and Dr. Q. Van Hummell at the Waterloo Cup meeting the United States will be well represented on the famous Altcar plains—though the first named is not an American.

A FRIENDLY letter from the West points out that in taking the Dixie Coursing Club to task for the incorrect order of running of the second round of its stake we ourselves fell into an error. When we wrote "the top dog on the card was given the bye which Duke, the bottom dog, was entitled to" we evidently had overlooked the fact that Duke had already had a natural bye. As our correspondent points out, Mornington should have had the bye which Black Joe got in the second round, and the latter should have run with Duke. We are a thousand times obliged for being apprised of our mistake, and the only excuse we can offer for such carelessness is that Tuesday of last week being New Year's Day compelled us to go to press thirty hours earlier than usual, and in the consequent hurry and rush we fell into the error.

IT seems that Simonian was in such a dreadfully emaciated condition when he reached the end of his journey from Russia to Eltham that Col. North declined having anything to do with him, a condition of the purchase being that he was to be delivered all right. So bad was the dog that only high veterinary skill availed to keep him alive, and though now improved somewhat, he will be in no state for stud service this season. Simonian, meanwhile, remains at Eltham, instructions having been received from Russia that he is to be sold in London for what he will fetch, and he may be included in the catalog of Mr. Rymill's sale at the Barbican repository on January 26.

THEY have been having a little meeting at Cottonwood Falls, Chase Co., Kan., and it seems to have been enjoyed thoroughly, hares being reported plentiful. Messrs. Wilhite and Fuqua's bitch Fanny Fly proved the winner; she ran at the Emporia meeting, which Mr. H. C. Lowe judged, on Thanksgiving Day, 1893, and on the card figured as "pedigree unknown." Mr. Wilhite will be remembered as running, in partnership with Mr. Soden, Just In, Lady Lyon and King Crow (all by imp. Trales—Tenee) at the Altcar Club's Winter festival last February.

BY the way, what has become of the match which Mr. John McMahon of Sacramento, Cal., offered to make between either Gile or Gare and the Merced winner? Before the Merced meeting Mr. McMahon posted a forfeit of $100 with the Sacramento Record-Union. After the Merced meeting a San Francisco paper said that Mr. John Perigo, who is well known as the owner of Longfellow, Wee Lassie and others, was ready to back Royal Buck and would like to hear from the Sacramento man. And there the matter seems to rest.

ARTHUR MASSEY dropped in recently to make inquiries about one or two things. It was the first time we had seen him since the Fourth of July, but he has lost none of his interest in coursing and was looking hale and hearty as ever.

THE Breeder and Sportsman says "Tommy" Hall of Merced has lately received a young greyhound by Glenkirk—Nettlefield.

Rifle

RIFLE SHOOTING

JACKSON, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Some time ago I read an article in the columns of your most excellent journal, by W. Thompson, on rifle shooting, and while some of the shots were fairly good, yet none of them were "in it," so to speak, with shots I have seen made. About ten miles from this place lives the greatest rifle shot on earth. His name is Dick Rogers and he is known by everybody as "One-Eyed Dick." Talk to Dick about a shotgun, or scattergun as he calls it, and you will see a look of disgust on his face that will put a quietus on the conversation at once. Dick has never shot anything but a rifle, and I must say is the laziest human being I ever saw. He was too lazy to shut his left eye when sighting his rifle, so had a shoemaker punch it out with a pegging awl.

Now as to some of Dick's shots. Dick never had any rifles given to him, but being a good blacksmith, made his own rifles, and a queer looking lot they are. In 1876 I first saw Dick shooting, He was then hunting for the market and shooting "moles." The ladies in this section all use moleskins to make powder puffs, and Dick for a time had a picnic. I saw him one day lying on his back, with his only eye about half closed, looking up a tall sycamore tree. Pretty soon he raised his rifle and fired. I saw nothing fall but Dick walked about a hundred yards the other side of the tree and picked up a moleskin.

"Where is the mole, Dick?" said I.

"Dunno," said he, "don't want the mole. Skin is all I want."

Before reloading he took out his knife and cut a number of notches in a ball.

"What are you doing that for?" I asked.

"To skin the mole," he replied.

So I wanted to see how it was done. Dick told me that at that season of the year the moles were cutting sycamore balls, and when they had filled up on the delicious balls they would stretch out on a limb and sun themselves and sleep. Pretty soon Dick said "lookee." I looked up the tree and saw a mole gape and heard Dick's rifle ring out and the mole disappear. Again Dick went about a hundred yards and brought a moleskin. Then I saw what he had been doing. He would notch the ball and leave the lead turned up, and when the mole gaped he would shoot it in the mouth and the notches would hang in his pelt and skin him completely, and all Dick had to do was to turn the skin fur out, stuff it with cotton and it was ready to use for a powder puff. Dick lived on a farm and raised his own hogs, and his mark was a hole in the left ear and the tail cropped off short. He was too lazy to mark them in the ordinary way, so marked them with his rifle. He would lie on the ground, pick out the hog he wanted to mark, wait until its tail and left ear were in range, then blaze away. He would cut the tail and mark the ear with the same bullet.

I saw him make a necklace, or collar, for his dog, out of rifle balls. He took twenty or twenty-five balls, bored a gimlet hole through each one, took a wheat straw and glued it on a piece of steel, then, carefully loading his rifle, would shoot with such precision that the hole in the ball would slide down the wheat straw and flatten against the piece of steel. Dick could have stood there and repeated the trick ad infinitum, I suppose, had the straw been long enough.

The most wonderful and dangerous shot I ever saw Dick make he made one cloudy day. He had a cousin with a bad cataract on his eye and had about lost the sight of that eye. He was too cowardly to have an oculist take it off. Dick concluded he was equal to the emergency and could remove it himself. One day this cousin was sitting against a beech tree and Dick thought the opportunity had arrived. He waited patiently until he could get a side shot at the bad eye. Pretty soon the chance presented itself. With a quick but steady aim Dick fired. With a yell his cousin jumped to his feet, thinking he was murdered, but soon quieted down when Dick showed him the cataract sticking to the beech tree.

Now as to Dick's rifles and how they are made. He takes four or five different sizes of gas pipe and puts the smaller inside the larger until he gets the weight he wants, then he files the rifles and makes his bullets to fit. He now earns a livelihood shooting quails for the hotels at this place. I have been, in the absence of my family, eating at the hotels and restaurants for the past month, and I have noticed none of the quails that were served had but one joint of a wing on each side. On making inquiries I found that they had been killed by "One-Eyed Dick." He made himself a double-barrel rifle, spread the two barrels about an inch apart at the muzzle and made it with only one trigger, so when it was pulled it fired both barrels, and Dick would just crop a quail's wings, one on each side, and in that way did not damage the quail. He gets fifty cents per dozen more for his birds than any other market-hunter here.

Now, Mr. Editor, you may doubt some of these shots, but I could write a volume. However, I just mention a few shots that I think for accuracy and precision cannot be beat. If you doubt me in this matter I refer to Major J. M. Taylor of New York, and Col. P. H. O'Bannon of Sperryville, Va., the latter one of the proprietors of the Blue Ridge Kennels, as to my veracity.

JNO. D. KING.

NOTES

THE Winchester Repeating Arms Co., it is said, recently received an order from South America for 3,000,000 cartridges for the Manser army rifle, which is a .30-caliber. This is the largest single order for cartridges the company ever received, and it will probably take from sixty to ninety days to fill it.

RIFLE CONTEST

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—One of the most interesting indoor rifle contests ever held in this city closed at Lincoln Turnvereiu Hall, after having continued ten days, on the evening of January 1, at 9 o'clock p. m. LADIES' CONTEST

In this contest Miss Emma Genzel scored 46 points, Mrs. W. C. Niehoff 45, Miss Agnes Brown 44.

The prizes for the ladies were as follows: First, a beautiful and costly combination toilet and manicure set; second, a valuable imported lace tidy; third, a fine hand embroidered silk lace apron.

The scores as given are as the contestants stood after shooting off the ties, with the exception of Messrs. Haukle and McBean, who agreed to divide first and second moneys

The hall was crowded to its utmost and a great many rifle experts and amateurs took part. The targets used were the Standard, ¾-inch black, distance 50 feet, open sights, off hand. The hall was well lighted and comfortably heated, and all enjoyed the shooting very much, especially the ladies, who contested to the bitter end for supremacy. As the scores show they did remarkably well.

Too much credit cannot be given to the committee, Mr. M. O. Ladewig, chairman; Max Schmidt, secretary; H. Peppler, treasurer, and M. Markert, shooting master, who did their utmost to please one and all, and at the same time make the shoot a grand success. I am requested to state that next year this society will give a similar shoot with a larger number and more valuable prizes.

The committee desires to thank all the shooters who took part in making this shoot interesting to all and a success for the Lincoln Turnvereln.

C. A. HANKLE.

CINCINNATI, O.—The Losantiville Shooting Association held its regular practice shoot at Central Shooting Park, Dayton, Ky., on December 23. Conditions: 200 yards, off hand, standard American target; open sights, three pounds trigger pull; sighting shots and unfinished scores not allowed.

MR. BROWN REPLIES TO DR. CARVER

BURTON, TEX.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—It seems from the reply of Dr. Carver, published in a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD, that I must have touched him in a tender point when I, in a former issue, expressed the opinion that Mr. Elliott would defeat them all at Chicago. Well, I was so led to believe by a series of matches which Dr. Carver shot with Mr. Elliott, in which the Doctor came out second best.

The article which the Doctor refers to was one in which I expressed my surprise that such men as Carver, Elliott and others did not occasionally shoot at pairs of live birds instead of always shooting at singles. I see nothing absurd about that, yet I may not know what I am talking about. If not, I will not ask the Doctor to enlighten me. I think, however, I can see the "negro under the woodpile." The Doctor wants to get my ire up and provoke me into a match with him, but I have too high an opinion of the Doctor's ability to allow any such thing; especially so when I would be bucking against a great big syndicate. Probably the Doctor will give me odds. If such an inducement was offered I might try him.

Now I hope Dr. Carver will not get offended, but come right along to our next state shoot at San Antonio and I assure him he will be royally welcomed and meet as jolly a set of boys as he ever met; some good live bird shots, too, without the syndicate though.

ACCEPTS DR. CARVER'S CHALLENGE

CHICAGO, January 1, 1895.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I hereby accept Dr. W. F. Carver's challenge for a match for the American championship medal, and name January 24 and John Watson's shooting park at Burnside, at 1 o'clock p. m., as the time and place for the contest to take place. I inclose herewith $50, my part of the forfeit money.

GEORGE KLEINMAN.

[The $50 received.—ED.]

NOTES

AFTER all that has been said in the daily papers about those who would go abroad to represent this Carlo, Mr. Fred Hoey is the only one who has sa York on the Majestic, Wednesday, January 2. It Geo. Work and Mr. Lon Thompson will join hi est single prize at the Monte Carlo shoot Casino. Four prizes are offered in this event winner, a handsome silver trophy and 20,000 fra prize, 4,000 francs and 25 per cent. of all entrance money, which runs up into thousands of francs; third prize, 2,000 francs and 25 per cent. of all entrance money; fourth prize, 1,000 francs and 15 per cent. of the entrance money. The remaining 10 per cent. of the entrance money is awarded to the winner of the first prize. From each competitor is exacted an entrance fee of 200 francs. The total money, therefore, is 20,000 francs. Mr. Hoey will compete also in the Supplementary Handicap, the Grand Poule d'Essai, the Prix d'Ouverture, the Prize de Monte Carlo Handicap, and Grand Prix de Cloture, these being the main events.

THE Kewanee Gun Club announces as special attractions at its tournament which is to be held at Kewanee, Ill., on January 10, 11 and 12, a live bird match between Dr. Carver and Thos. A. Marshall, of Keithsburg, 100 birds per man for a purse of $200, a live bird and a target match between Mr. W. T. Irwin and E. E. Detterline, each for a purse of $100, and a team shoot at 25 live birds per man for a purse of $50, between Messrs. Snow and Studley of Neponset vs. Orsin and Baker of Kewanee. If the club succeeds in bringing about the matches announced and then shoots its program out each day, it will have a tournament worth attending and one that will speak well for the enterprise of its members.

MR. GEO. KLEINMAN accepts Dr. Carver's challenge for the American championship medal and $100 a side, 100 live birds per man, and names January 24, at Watson's park, Burnside, at 1 o'clock p. m., as the time and place for the match to be shot. If Mr. Kleinman is usually well (he is not a strong man) that day, those who are fortunate enough to be at Watson's grounds will probably see a race worth looking at, for both men are crack shots at live pigeons and the match will be for blood from the crack of the first gun until the winner is determined. It is said that the harder and faster the birds the better will both men shoot, and Watson can supply good birds if they are wanted.

JUDGING from the number of inquiries I have received, a great many sportsmen are under the impression that the $1,000 guaranteed by the Interstate Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association in the Grand American Handicap will be divided so as to cover the three days of the tournament. For the benefit of all who are of this opinion, I will state that the Interstate Association guarantees that the one event, viz., the Grand American Handicap, will be worth $1,000, or more, which will make first money not less than $500; second money not less than $300, third money not less than $200.

ELMER E. SHANER,
Pittsburg, Pa. Manager I. M. & D. A.

THE result of the year's shooting in the Union Gun Club for 1894 is given below. In order for a member to qualify for the prizes in Classes A, B and C, he has to shoot every month of the year at 30 targets thrown from three traps, unknown angles; targets to be thrown as swiftly as possible; the six best scores to count. The winners in the scores in Class A were Enoch Miller, first prize, score 160; W. N. Drake, second, 156; A. A. Sickly, third, 147. Class B, R. S. Williams, first, 146; Wm. Sopher, second, 140; Joseph Bryant, third, 138. Dr Jackson was the only one to qualify in Class C. His score was 136.

A CALL has been issued, signed by sixteen representatives of sportsmen's clubs, for a convention of those interested in the welfare of trap shooting, to be held at the Astor House, New York, on Thursday, January 24, at 2 o'clock p. m. The purpose of the meeting will be the organization of a governing body for the trap shooters of the United States and to discuss the best methods of combating and correcting existing evils. The movement is to be commended, and should have the earnest support of every trap shooter who shoots for the love of the sport instead of the money to be got out of it.

AT Lakewood, N. J., on December 31, there was some shooting between Mr. Geo. Gould, Count Castellane and Mr. J. Seaver Page. The shooting was a match at each of the following rises: 24, 28, 30 and 32 yards. In the first match, 24 yards rise, Count Castellane killed all of his 10 birds, Mr. Page 9, Mr. Gould 8. At 28 yards rise, Mr. Gould led with 10, Mr. Page 9, Count Castellane 6. At 30 yards rise, two events were shot of 10 birds each. Mr. Page winning both events with a total of 20, Mr. Gould scored 16, Count Castellane 10. At 32 yards rise the scores were as follows: Page 9, Gould 9, Castellane 7.

MR. W. C. LA TOURETTE of McCook, Neb., made a pleasant call at the office of the AMERICAN FIELD last week Wednesday. Speaking of game prospects in his vicinity, he said quails were fairly plentiful last Fall, but that the goose and duck shooting was unusually poor. Mr. La Tourette is quite a trap shot as well as a good shot in the field, and while in Chicago tried his hand on some of John Watson's birds, making a very good score for one who was not accustomed to the grounds or to shooting over five unknown ground traps.

THE Herron Hill Gun Club and the North Side Gun Club, two of the largest trap shooting organizations in the vicinity of Pittsburg, Pa., have announced that they will amend their by-laws making dropping a bird for place punishable by expulsion, from the club, and any visiting marksman at the club shoots found guilty of this offense will be at once ruled out and forever barred from taking part in other contests.

THE Henry (Ill.) Shooting Club will hold a two days' tournament on January 16 and 17, ten events at targets and live birds each day. Arrangements have been made for special hotel rates for visiting shooters. The shooting will commence at 9 a. m. each day. Four moneys in all target events and three moneys in live bird events. American Shooting Association rules will govern.

THE event of the week of January 7, in New York, will be the big shoot on the grounds of the Larchmont Yacht Club, in which the entrance is $100, each man to shoot at 100 live birds. If eight or more entries, the club will add a cup of the value of $250. It is expected that enough entries will be made to take two days, January 11 and 12, to finish the event.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for a series of five shoots between the Passaic City and Boiling Springs gun clubs, each man to shoot at 25 Empire targets, twelve men to each team. The first match of the series will be shot on January 12, at the grounds of the Boiling Springs club.

Rutherford, N. J. WM. H. HUCK.

MR. S. GLOVER, of Northern New York, and Capt. Brewer are matched to shoot a race at 100 birds each, 30 yards rise, for $100 a side, the match to be shot at the Rochester Driving Park, Rochester, N. Y., on Monday, January 14. Mr. Brown is to shoot a 12-gauge gun and Mr. Glover is to use his 10 gauge gun.

ON New Year's Day Mr. John C. Jones, treasurer of the Rivertou Gun Club, won the "New Year's Cup" with a straight score and a shoot off of a tie with Mr. Sterling, each killing 15 straight. Mr. Sterling lost in the shoot off. The inferior shots were given a bird allowance.

MR. JOHN W. CONNER of the Knoxville (Tenn.) Gun Club won first prize in his club for the best average for the year 1894. He and Mr. Roger Van Gilder were a tie for the prize, each having the same score, and in the shoot off Mr. Conner won.

MR. J. C. READ'S challenge to shoot any man in the state of Nebraska has been accepted by Mr. Nicolia of Sutton, Neb., and the match will take place on February 7.

Omaha, Neb.

THE Galesburg Shooting Club will hold a tournament burg, Ill., on April 23, 24, 25 and 26. Both live bird and targets will be used and no one will be barred.

MR. A. W. ADAMS, a member of the Eureka Gun Club of Chicago, left on Thursday of last week for San Antonio, Tex., where he will remain until settled weather in the Spring.

[illegible] Club will hold a live bird tournament at Erb's [illegible] on Thursday, January 24.

[illegible] SIDE GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

The [illegible] New Year's Day shoot of the South Side Gun Club, of Newark, N. J., was the usual success of this club. The regular program of twelve events was shot through, as well as elght extras and one match race. Empire targets were used exclusively and were thrown to the satisfaction of all. The shooters gathered early and were coming and going througnout the day. Some, not accustomed to meeting such hot company, left early. At noon a good lunch, without charge, as is the custom of this club, was served to all. Mr. Hobart, with other members of the club, kept the ball rolling without delay to the shooters, and this always pleases. Many well-known faces were in the crowd, including Van Dyke, Smith, Drake, Uncle Asa Whitehead, Maj. Breintnall, Enoch Miller, "Tee Kay" (no shoot complete without him), Geoffroy, Yeomans, Thomas, "U. M. C." Thomas, Schortemeier, Creveling (good shots all), as well as a number of others whose names appear in the scores

Van Dyke, Drake, Schortemeler and Warren Smith, with Geoffroy, Yeomans and others, shot in good form. Enoch Miller appeared with a Winchester and handled it well. Dr. Jackson appeared well—always in good humor—and he shot, as he always does, better than on his home grounds. The day was agreeably spent by all who were present, and many went home satisfied with the scores with which they began the new year. Following are the scores:

THE FLUSHING SHOOTING CLUB

The scores given below comprise the events shot on Christmas Day, New Year's Day, and the final cup shoot of the above club. The first were not received in time to be given in our last issue The members on ticipated in the Christmas Day events in larger numbers than on any day of the season. On New Year's Day the attendance was not so great, but the enthusiasm equal. Each day the birds were good, but on New Year's Day the light was trying on account of the snow, and white birds were difficult to get onto. Added to this was a fair breeze which gave additional trouble to some.

On January 3, what proved to be the last Invitation Cup shoot was held, and for the third successive time the trophy was won by Mr. "Davenport," and it is now his property. His winning scores out of 25 birds were 25, 20, 21 in the three competitions. The entries in the cup shoots were not what they should have been. No effort was spared by the Secretary, Mr. Wilcox, to get an attendance worthy the cup races, and although he was assured by letter of a good attendance each time it always failed. The club will now attempt some other [illegible] ements and await results. At the [illegible] "Davenport" received the congratulations [illegible] thoroughly satisfied with the result of his [illegible] match is on between them for [illegible] side, Mr. "Davenport" allowing [illegible] shoot at 80 more, while Mr. "Davenport" shoots at 100. This in reality is giving Mr. "Roberts" only a bird or two, as Mr. "Davenport" at most will not make over two misses in his first twenty, and possibly none. This is the easiest match for Mr. "Davenport" that he has had for a long time. For convenience these events are here numbered one, two, three, etc., as they were shot. Scores:

THE WILMERDING GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

WILMERDING, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Inclosed I hand you the scores made at the tournament of the above named club, January 1. The forenoon was very cold, the thermometer showing 8° below zero; still, even this severe weather did not prevent some of the live bird shooters from making pretty good scores. Mr. S. S. Bishop, for instance, surprised the boys by scoring ten straight and winning first money, Mr. D. Boyd with only one miss won second, and Messrs. O. Riech, F. McIntosh and Sharrard, each with eight out of ten, divided third. The birds were a very good lot but the falling snow made them slow to take wing.

After the live bird event was concluded the rest of the day was spent in smashing Blue Rock targets. The attendance was only fair, yet all seemed to enjoy themselves. First to arrive were Elmer E. Shaner and "Old Hoss," both jolly good fellows, and they were closely followed by Mr. Bessemer, who is not only a fine trap shot but a man respected far and wide. These, with others, "kept the pot a-biliin'" all day and made the occasion one that will not soon be forgotten. The scores are appended.

A. A. MACKERT.

KRUEGER—ERTTER

YORK, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Not long since one of our daily papers published a challenge in which a gentleman from Gettysburg, Pa., challenged any man in Adams or York counties to a 100 live bird match for $100 a side, American Shooting Association rules to govern. The challenge was accepted by Mr. A. C Krueger, of Wrightsville, this county, who probably under his shooting nom de plume of "Blackbird" is known to the shooting world as one of the best target shots of the state, and who on several occasions has held his own with the best shots in the country.

He and the gentleman from Gettysburg met and arranged a series of five 100-bird matches, one being shot in each of the following places: York, Gettysburg, Lancaster, Columbia and Harrisburg. Quite an interest has been manifested in these matches, as Krueger, although having a reputation as a target shot, is known to have done but little live bird shooting, whereas Ertter has the reputation of being a very good live bird shot.

The first match of the series was shot on the Fair Grounds, at York, on New Year's Day. The weather was cold and unpleasant, the ground covered with a blanket of snow which, with its glaring surface, made the shooting very difficult. The birds were an excellent lot; duffers were the exception; most of them were very good and quite a good percentage were "corkers." As will be seen from the scores given below, Krueger made the excellent run of 34 straight in the beginning of the match, and on the best birds of the match at that. He made this run with his new L. C. Smith ejector gun, shooting it for the first time. Apropos this gun is a dandy, with crown steel barrels and as handsome a stock as ever was put on a gun, its racy outlines, its perfect hang and balance and its wonderful shooting qualities. It is a most worthy representation of American ingenuity and superiority. The way this gun collapsed birds with the second barrel, anywhere within the 50-yards boundary, was proof of its wonderful shooting powers. This gun was ½ inch longer in stock than any Krueger has shot heretofore, and not being accustomed to this, the gun punished him and he was obliged, after shooting at 35 birds, to change guns, which undoubtedly was the cause of his losing the match. His load was 48 grains of American E. C. powder in U. M. C. Trap shells with a strong 1⅛ ounces of No. 7 chilled shot in both barrels. Mr. Ertter also shot a Smith ejector, the property of a gentleman of this place. This gun also proved a magnificent shooter. Ertter used No. 7 shot in the first barrel and No. 6 in the second. He is a very deliberate shot and makes some beautiful kills. Krueger is quick and snappy in all his movements, and when shooting his best does some brilliant work.

The second match is to take place at Gettysburg, the home of Mr. Ertter, within a week or ten days. The date has not yet been set, but the AMERICAN FIELD will be furnished with the scores. The following are the scores of the first match. Being two birds short, only 99 were shot at by each man:

CICERO GUN CLUB'S NEW YEAR'S DAY SHOOT

OAK PARK, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—We had all preparations made for a glorious shoot at live birds on New Year's Day, when we were notified by the Cicero town board that until further notice no live bird shooting would be permitted by any club in the town. This action was taken upon complaint of a number of "cranks" who reason like an Indian cigar sign, nine out of every ten of them having never seen any pigeon shooting; the one that did witness the shooting on Christmas Day saying that he went away with his "heart bleeding for the innocent birds."

The Cicero Gun Club will fight the matter and if beaten will remove to a convenient place close by where its members can shoot "buzzards or bullfrogs," and then the "cranks" can come and let their hearts bleed a few more verses. However, we put in the day at target shooting, making the following scores. All events were at unknown angles, rapid fire, ties divided.

WILMINGTON VS. CHARLESTOWN

WILMINGTON, DEL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Inclosed please find scores of a team race, between the Wilmington Rod and Gun Club vs. Riverside Gun Club, of Charlestown, Md. We were to shoot fifteen men to a team, but on account of bad weather only ten of our men went to Charlestown. Not to disappoint the shooters we accepted five members of the Riverside club as substitutes for the five of our club that did not attend, and yet, even under these conditions, we came out of the contest with colors flying. The last five men on our team were the substitutes. Each man shot at 25 single targets and scored as follows.

THE WESTMINSTER CLUB

The attendance on New Year's Day at the grounds of the above named club was not up to that usually seen there, but the attractions at all the principal grounds around New York for the day were such as to divide the attendance. After a little diversion in a one-hand match between Messrs. "Davenport" and Geo. De Forrest Grant, in which Mr. "Davenport" won by a score of four birds to two, a regular system of handicap sweepstakes was inaugurated and continued for the day. Aside from the shooting the day was an enjoyable one. The birds were the usual good ones always expected and furnished at these grounds:

EVENT No. 1.—Handicap sweepstake, 5 birds, $5 entrance: B. R. Kittredge, 28 yards, 2; G. B. Magoun, 23 yards, 3; G. W. Ewing, 27 yards, 5; L. T. "Davenport," 30 yards, 5. The ties on five straight divided the purse.

EVENT No 2.—Same as preceding, same handicap: Kittredge 4, Magoun 4, Ewing 3, "Davenport" 3. Ties on four divided the purse.

EVENT No. 3.—Team contest between Kittredge and Magoun vs. Ewing and "Davenport," the first team to shoot at 19 birds and the second at 17 birds $10 per corner entrance.

THE COUNTRY CLUB

There was a good attendance on the grounds of the Country Club, at Westchester, N. Y., on New Year's Day, when the visitors and members were entertained by exciting contests, particularly the one for a silver cup donated by one of its members. Veterans were pitted against amateurs, the latter being given liberal allowances in the handicap rise. The result in a miss and out was narrowed down to the veteran, J. Seaver Page, and the amateur, Mr. J. B. Harriman, after ten others were shot out, most of them dropping out on exceedingly hard birds, particularly so in the case of Mr. Reynal, who had one of the hardest birds that has left the traps in twelve months past.

It was 3 o'clock when the shooting began, the snow-covered ground making difficult shooting on light colored and white birds The birds were a good lot, many of them going at a clipping gait. The scores:

THE TERRY—BATSCH MATCH NOT SHOT

The match arranged to be shot at the Climax Gun Club's grounds, near Fanwood, N. J., on New Year's Day, between Mr. Batsch, of Elizabeth, and Mr. Terry, of Plainfield, was not shot, Mr. Batsch failing to appear, seeming to prefer losing his forfeit of $25. The match was arranged for 100 birds each, $100 a side. A large crowd was on hand to see the contest and they manifested much disappointment at their failure to see it. Those who had guns or could borrow indulged in some shooting at live birds and targets, making the following scores:

MR. E. C. EATON'S RECORD

PINCKNEYVILLE, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I hand you herewith my record at the trap for the year 1891, and would suggest that if other trap shooters will do as I have done, keep a record of their work at the trap each year and send it to the AMERICAN FIELD for publication, it would prove interesting to a great many lovers of the sport.

My shooting was mostly at known angles, but with different loads and different powders. The powders used were E. C and American Wood, principally the latter, and I used shells having the No. 2 primer. The gun used was the Improved Eaton-Lefever. I am 50 years old and wear glasses when shooting at the trap. My record is as follows, I averaging four times at the trap each month:

	Targets shot at	No broke	Per cent
January	280	230	82 1/7
February	190	161	84 2/3
March	212	161	76

ROTHACKER VS. MORFEY

The match between John Rothacker, of Philadelphia, and T. W. Morfey, of Paterson, N. H. Wolstencroft, J. L. David, C. Worrell, Jas. Wolstencroft, N. Swope, W. Wilson, Geo. E. Beck, W. H. Wolstencroft Jr., Walter Sterling, Robt. Welch, R. Provost, H. Eileuberg, J. H. Wolstencroft, V. Pack, A J. Rust, Henry Wolf, J. Dean and J. H. Davis. Mr. Thos. H. Keller made an acceptable referee, Mr. "Henry" pulling the traps. The birds were a mixed lot, the majority being good. The conditions were Morfey 100 birds, Rothacker 106; American Shooting Association rules. Mr. Morfey had to kill his last 32 birds to win and did it in good style.

NEWPOINT VS. GREENSBURG

NEWPOINT, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I forward you herewith the scores made in the first of a series of three matches between a team of seven men from the Greensburg Gun Club and a team of like number from the Newpoint Gun Club, each man shooting at 20 single Blue Rock targets from five expert traps, known traps, unknown angles. The scores are somewhat lower than they otherwise would have been on account of the weather being cold and disagreeable, and unfitted for work of this kind. The participants are all amateurs, the clubs having been organized only about a year.

NEW UTRECHT ROD AND GUN CLUB

Despite the Winter weather, the New Utrecht Rod and Gun Club's regular weekly shoot at live birds took place at Woodlawn Park, Gravesend, on Saturday, December 29. The field was covered with snow and ice, and a strong wind carried many of the birds out of bounds. The summary of the shoot: S. W. Carlston, Class B, 9; C. A. Sykes, Class B, 8; Peet, Class B, 8; C. Ferguson Jr., Class A, 8; W. F. Sykes, Class B, 7; Capt. A. W. Money, Class A, 6; C. Pennington, Class C, 5. Capt. Money won the first sweep with 5, Ferguson the second with 5; Money the third with 3, and C. Ferguson Jr., the fourth with 3.

NEWARK, N. J.—Please find inclosed scores made at the Walsrode Gun Club's grounds at the shoot on December 25 in the afternoon, and on January 1. The members had an enjoyable time. Carl Von Lengerke visited the club on New Year's Day. Since this club started its grounds have become quite a shooting center. On January 17 there will be an interesting match shot at 50 Empire targets for $25 a side, between Messrs. T. Leuthaeuser and T. Neigert vs. H. Reiboldt and H. A. Winters.

The scores made on dates above mentioned, each event except the last on January 1, which was at 5 pairs, being at 10 singles.

HENRY REINHARDT, Manager.

ESSEXVILLE, MICH.—Members of the Bay City Gun Club had a live pigeon shoot at this place on New Year's Day. The birds were a splendid lot, most of them leaving the traps the instant they were released. A majority of the birds were fast drivers and right and left quarterers; very few incomers. The shooting was from five ground traps, 28 yards rise for 12-bore guns, and 30 yards rise for 10-bore guns, 50 yards boundary. The birds were retrieved by Chas. A. Eddy's setter, who did his work like John Watson's Cyclone. Following are the scores:

All shooting was at targets from three unknown traps, unknown angles, one man up. The scores made on Christmas Day were not up to the average of the club, owing to a strong wind.

KENNEL

W. F. B., Kansas City, Mo.—I have a valuable pointer dog, two and one-half years old, that I have had considerable trouble with. He weighs sixty-five pounds and is a hearty eater. Wheo ah ut one year old he was afflicted with eczema and you prescribed for him witb gratifying results. This Summer he had a repetition of the disease and a prescription from the AMERICAN FIELD cured him; but litt e red spots, formed on his legs aod feet, still remained. After his body became smooth again, last June, he had caoker of tbe ear. I washed his ears daily and used three bottles of Glover's Ear Wash, or Canker Wash, but he is not well yet; he has been apparently cured several times but after a week his ears will be filled with a brown discharge, accompanied by shaking of the head, and we will have to do something for him. While on an outing after quails, on Dceember 20, I noticed that after he had several passages he passed blood. Please prescribe. I feed him twice daily; very little in the morning and a full meal at night. Ans.—The passage of blood is somewhat indicative of intestinal parasites, we, therefore, advise you to follow directions given in this issue to C. F. W., Eau Claire, Wis. For the red spots, take equal parts of vinegar and water and apply twice daily.

C. F. W., Eau Claire, Wis.—(1) Please prescribe for my Gordon setter dog, sixteen months old. Symptoms are a dry hacking cough after exercising, then gags and vomits thick, white frothy slime; nose hot and dry; foul breath; when in repose, a thick, stringy, transparent slime hangs from his mouth; eyes bright and clear, no discharge; good appetite. Have been treating him for husk; have treated him for worms, with santonine and castor-oil, but saw no signs. (2) But I did find evidence in my English setter bitch different from anything I ever saw. After treating the bitch for worms, I noticed in the feces a large number of small, flesh-colored worms about one-half inch in length, of peculiar formation, being the shape or nearly so of the common bloodsucker. She keeps poor, but eats like a horse. I saw the same evidence in one of my puppies. I had him out for a run and the wheel of the rig ran over his hindleg, and while examining him at home he licked my hand, and I found one of those bloodsucker looking worms on my hand. What are they? And what will I do for the outfit? Ans.—(1) Tapeworm. After a fast of eighteen hours give one and one-half grains of powdered areca nut to each pound weight of the dog, following in one hour with two ounces of castor-oil. (2) The same treatment.

A. T. W., Jacksonville, Fla.—What can I do for my pointer puppy eight months old? He has been suffering with some stomach or bowel trouble for two months. When first attacked the disease was much like dysentery, discharges bloody and a good deal of mucus, then they changed to a very dark color, and again to a light brown; discharges are still quite frequent and seem to give him some pain; appetite good, no fever, and his coat feels natural but his gums are colorless, showing some serious disorder, and he is very thin and weak. I treated him for worms just before this trouble appeared, with areca nut and also santonine, and believe these medicines must have upset his digestive organs. I have been feeding him twice a day since this trouble began, giving bread with a little beef broth and a very little meat, and he seems to relish his food. I have been giving him Ashmont's remedy for dysentery for three weeks, but it does not seem to benefit him. Ans.—Indigestion. Until the bowels regain their normal tone feed milk and raw eggs, and after each meal give seven grains of goldenscale pepsin, also give three grains of the citrate of iron and quinine and thirty drops of the fluid extract of goldenseal three times daily.

H. H. C., Montclair, N. J.—Kindly advise me about my setter dog, two years old, weight forty-nine pounds. For the last year his passages when starting out for exercise would be apparently healthy, but in a short time they become very loose and quite frequent, and the color quite yellow; his eyes are bright and clear; coat good, and he is always ready for his meals. He is fed once a day, at night, on table scraps, vegetables (turnips, cabbage or onions), especially cooked for him, rice, cornmeal mush, made from beef soup, well cooked, and Spratts dog cakes. I try to give him as great a variety as possible. He is inclined to bolt his food. The frequent evacuations do not seem to weaken him, yet he does not take on as much flesh as he should with the moderate exercise he receives. Ans.—We cannot see any reason to dope your animal with drugs, consequently advise you to let well enough alone.

F. A. O., Owego, N. Y.—What is the matter with my setter dog? He is so lame in one hindleg he will not touch his foot to the ground; it has been most thoroughly examined; no reasonable amount of pinching or twisting will make him flinch. It came on rather gradually; after each hunt he would be more lame and then improve with rest, but now it has become chronic; he will scratch himself with that foot as vigorously as with the other. Is it weakness, paralysis or rheumatism? Please prescribe. Ans.—Rheumatism. For six consecutive mornings give one ounce of castor-oil and thirty drops of cascara segrada; also five grains of salol three times daily; rub the lame leg with soap liniment twice daily; avoid the use of starchy food; feed turnips and cabbage, with milk and soups.

DR. G. H. Q., Trenton, N. J.—(1) At what age should an Irish setter bitch come in heat the first time? (2) My Llewellin setter puppies, four months old, are fed on boiled rice and oatmeal, mixed with boiled liver and mutton ground. I have given areca nut, followed by castor-oil, yet I find lumbricoidal and other worms in the fecal discharges (some of them six inches long). What more shall I do? Puppies are otherwise in good health, but if I powder up some bones and give them at night I always find these bones voided along with worms of various kinds next morning; there seems to no end to the worms. Ans.—(1) From eight months up to two years. (2) For six consecutive mornings give twenty drops of the fluid extract of pinkroot and senna.

C. H. S., Yorkville, S. C.—I have a setter dog, about two and one-half or three years old, that is a fine hunter, but after hunting one or two hours he gets weak in the hindlegs and the small of the back, and can hardly get along. He had distemper last year. After a rest, the next day after exercise, he seems to be all right and he does not have any pain. What is the matter with the dog and what will strengthen his back? His appetite is good all the time, and he is in good order. Ans.—We think it is the result of a hypernitrogenized condition of the blood, from overfeeding and lack of sufficient daily exercise; feed but once daily, then at night. For five consecutive mornings give one ounce of castor-oil and thirty drops of cascara segrada.

J. W. N., Whitwell, Tenn.—Please prescribe for my foxhound puppies about a week old. They break out in little yellow blisters, which soon form sores and spread all over their legs and bellies; from which cause or some other, they soon die. I have lost several litters of fine puppies from the same cause, at the age of three to six weeks old. This litter is beginning to be affected like all the others were in the past, and I want to begin in time to remedy the evil if possible. Ans.—Give the mother, for four or five consecutive mornings, two ounces of castor-oil. Take twelve grains of the permanganate of potash, and four ounces of distilled water; mix and apply to the sores twice daily.

J. E. M., McComb, O.—Please prescribe for my pointer dog nine months old. About three weeks ago he was taken with a cough; his eyes very red; weak, especially in his hind parts from the middle of his body back; when he stands still his back or body seems to incline to the left side; he is very poor; has no appetite; discharges water slightly from the eyes; nose always wet or moist but does not discharge. I have given him your remedy for worms but found none. I notice he sometimes vomits undigested food. Will eat nothing except milk and raw beef and that very sparingly. What is the trouble? Ans.—Possibly distemper; give three grains of quinine four times daily.

H. A. G. [illegible] Please prescribe for my setter dog [illegible] the distemper when he was three [illegible] with a nervous twitching in the neck, [illegible]ed. Ans.—Chorea, and from the [illegible]g it is very improbable that treat- [illegible] effect of Fowler's Solution; give [illegible] days, then increase the dose one drop daily until thirty drops are given at each and every dose, then decrease in the same ratio.

C. A. G., Wahpeton, N. D.—What is the matter with my English setter dog, five months old? He does not eat much and is thin; he has spells of jerking, when asleep, and often when standing his hindlegs will tremble; he constantly has his tail between his legs, and in his eyes some matter gathers. I think he has worms as his breath is bad. Please prescribe. Ans.—For six consecutive mornings give twenty-five drops of the fluid extract of pinkroot and senna.

E. V. W., Irwin, Pa.—My English setter puppy, about one year old, has had inflamed eyes, with a discharge of matter from them, for the past four months; his coat is very coarse and falling out continually; he is a good feeder and very lively. Please prescribe. Ans.—Perhaps you are overfeeding. For the eyes take sulphate of zinc ten grains, fluid extract of goldenseal one-half ounce, rose-water sufficient to make four ounces; mix and apply twice daily.

ROYAL, Winnipeg, Man.—Ans.—(1) We do not find Atlanta in the Stud Book. (2) Sheena Van's number is 4562. (3) Sam Roy's is 5058. (4 Queen Bess' is 3808. (5) Spark (Carlowitz—Magnet) was not registered. (6) Donna J's is 1954. (7) Carlowitz's is 45. (8) Magnet's (dam of Spark) is 5111. (9) Belton's is 13. (10) Bramble (dam of Donna J) was not registered, but was by Duke—Belle.

E. E. T., New Bethlehem, Pa.—Ans.—(1) Either would do if properly trained to the work; but, to tell you the truth, very few of the field and cocker spaniels found at shows know anything about work afield. We don't quite understand why you want the grouse "treed;" don't you shoot them on the wing? (2) They are, of course, really imported, though not referred to as such.

G. E. H., Chewton, Pa.—My Irish setter dog has had the distemper, but is now apparently well in every way except that when he exercises he heaves. Please prescribe. Ans.—After a fast of eighteen hours give one and one-half grains of powdered areca nut to the pound weight of the dog, and one hour after give two ounces of castor-oil.

J. L. M., Jamestown, N. Y.—Please prescribe for my pointer puppy seven months old. He has a growth in the corner of his left eye, that is white and seems to be firmly attached to the eyeball; it is still growing and has reached the dark of the eye at one point. Ans.—Your better plan is to consult a local veterinarian.

S. B. C., Pittsburg, Pa.—Ans.—(1) Imported Viscount (21571) is by Moss out of Nora III (21570); Moss, by Count Wind'em (Count Dick—Phantom) out of Novel (Dan—Nellie). (2) Nellie E (23821) is by Luminator out of Polly Rockwell (17121); Luminator, by Bob Gates (7127) out of Belle of Staoton (4802).

J. E. O., Columbus, O.—I have an English setter puppy, and there has been some dispute among breeders as to his breeding. He is grandsired on both sides by Roderigo. Kindly answer in your next issue of the AMERICAN FIELD as to your opinion and oblige. Ans.—Opinion on what?

H. T. B., Linneus, Mo.—Ans.—Write to the Secretary of the American Kennel Club, 44 Broadway, New York, for registration blanks, fill one out as directed, and remit fee of $1.

C. S. H., St. Louis, Mich.—Are puppies from a registered English setter and a registered pointer eligible for registration? Ans.—Why, no. What could they be registered as?

T. E. M., Cedar Rapids, Ia.—Ans.—We cannot make out what you mean. Repeat your question in a different form, and please be more explicit.

G. W. C., Milwaukee, Wis.—Ans.—We do not know Lady Gladis; probably you mean the imported bitch Lady Gladys (21454).

J. McD. S., Peoria, Ill.—Ans.—We never heard of anyone keeping a Chesapeake as a house dog solely, so could not say.

J. J. W., Kansas City, Mo.—Ans.—As you do not state what breed she is we cannot give her pedigree.

J. E., Columbus, O.—Ans.—Secretary of the A. K. C., 44 and 46 Broadway, New York.

C. H. S., New Haven, Conn.—Ans.—(1) Bracket (7835). (2) Reme (8061).

TRAP

W. S. L., Stroudsburg, Pa.—(1) Do Messrs. Elliott, Brewer and Carver when shooting live pigeons, and Budd, Grimm and Heikes when shooting targets, keep both eyes open? (2) Do they shoot with the gun at the shoulder or do they hold it well down? (3) Is the left arm of these men shorter than the right, or do they bend the elbow? (4) Does Lancaster's book advertised by the AMERICAN FIELD treat of target shooting? If not, where can I get a work that does? Ans.—(1) We cannot say. Many excellent trap shots shoot with both eyes open. (2) Most of them hold the butt of the gun close to the shoulder until they call "pull," and then place it against the shoulder firmly and fire as quick as they get aim. (3) Their arms appear to be of equal length, and like other men they bend the left slightly at the elbow in bringing the gun into position to fire. (4) It does not, and we do not know of a work that to any extent does.

J. S. D., Greenfield, Ill.—(1) Where can I get the rules governing trap shooting? (2) How many different rules are there in use in the United States? (3) What rules are regarded the standard and used mostly? Ans.—(1) You fail to state what rules you wish, therefore we cannot direct you. (2) A difficult question to answer, as not only nearly every state sportsmen's association has a set of rules governing trap shooting, but many clubs have rules that differ from the state rules. (3) The American Shooting Association rules.

GAME AND SHOOTING

READER, Milwaukee, Wis.—What is the law in this state as regards the use of hounds for hunting rabbits, and how long is it in force? (2) ——? (3) How long is the present law in force? Ans.—(1) The law forbids shooting rabbits with hounds when it is lawful to hunt deer, which is from October 1 to November 1 of each year. (2) So far as we are informed the law is silent on the point in question. (3) Until repealed or amended by the state Legislature.

H. W. M., Port Huron, Mich.—How many states now prohibit the sale of game? Ans.—Very few, if any, of the states prohibit the sale of all kinds of all kinds of game during the open season, but quite a number of states, perhaps a majority, prohibit the exportation of game, and certain ones stipulate how much and in what manner game may be taken outside the state by non-resident hunters.

COURSING

F. B. C., Huron, S. D.—Ans.—(1) She did not run during the 1893-94 season; the previous season she ran occasionally in the south of Wales, but without winning or running-up for any stakes; in November, 1891, she ran at a small meeting (the Sully Club's) and was put out in the first round of the Cogan Hall Stakes. We do not know whether she ran during the season of 1890-91, or the previous season as a puppy. (2) We cannot find that she has been exhibited in this country. (3) Yes, she was registered as "Slender, by Lamping—My Cleopatra;" she was whelped in July, 1888, and was bred by Mr. I. B. Bolster. Very much obliged to you for the names and addresses; have ordered sample copies sent.

MISCELLANEOUS

J. C. F., Nashville, Tenn.—(1) Is 320 and 330 pellets of No. 8 shot in a 30-inch circle at 40 yards considered a good pattern when only 1⅛ ounces of shot are used? (2) Are the Ligowsky clay pigeons still manufactured? Ans.—(1) Yes, so far as number is concerned, though it might be a bad one as regards evenness of distribution. (2) No, not so far as we know.

RIFLE

W. H. D., Chicago.—I would like to make a test of my hunting rifle, and also practise occasionally at the target up to 200 yards. Can you tell me of any place in or near this city where I would be able to do this? Ans.—If you will call on or address Mr. John Macauley, No. 448 North Park Avenue, he can probably give you the information you wish.

Information Wanted

WE receive frequently letters with the request to forward them to the parties for whom they are intended, which have not been stamped. All such letters must be stamped; if not stamped they will not be forwarded.

I HAVE for a few days been using U. M. C. Nitro Club shells primed with black powder and loaded with E. C. powder, and have had any number of misfires. Has any other reader of the AMERICAN FIELD been bothered with this particular make of shell? The ones I had were bought loaded. A day or so ago I got a box of empty cases of same make and I find the brass heads of these considerably thicker. I loaded seveoty-five of them and shot them and didn't have a misfire, so I thought that perhaps the company at first turned out a lot for trial with a thinner brass head than they now make them as I found that when the firing pin drove down it seemed to just dent them in in the center without exploding the primer. The mainspring in my gun is extra strong.

Buffalo, N. Y. G. Y. P.

CAN any brother sportsman tell me through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD a good waterproof mixture for leather boots; the composition and proportions?

Milwaukee, Wis. READER.

Amusements

SCHILLER THEATER.—The Warde-James engagement, the last occasion when these two distinguished actors will be seen together in Chicago as associate stars in one company, concludes this week with the performances of "Julius Cæsar" Friday evening and at the Saturday matinee, and "Richard III" Saturday night. Merriment, genuine rollicking fun in the very best sort of successful farce-comedy, is the next welcome attraction. The favorite comedian, Charles Dickson, returns for a week, commencing next Sunday evening, in his familiar character, "Tom Stanhope," in the irresistibly funny "Incog." Dickson made a popular hit at the Schiller a short time ago in his new play, "A Jolly Good Fellow," but there are a great many of his Chicago admirers who much desire to see him once more in "Incog," the play in which he has won his reputation as one of the most amusing and accomplished comedians of the day, so the return engagement with "Incog" for next week was arranged. This farce-comedy has made a record of one uninterrupted success before the public. It ran one hundred nights in New York, and has been given for more than fifty nights to delighted audiences in Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago, and, therefore, Charles Dickson's representation of it will be welcome to the fun-loving public.

HAYMARKET THEATER.—Robert Hilliard, in "The Nominee." Next week, Mr. Jacob Litt's powerful naval melodrama, "The Ensign," which deals with history in a historical manner in that time, place, character and personages in the drama are in strict keeping with fact, and the time is of such recent date, i. e.—the recent internecine strife—that the youngest student of the nation's life can verify the truthfulness of the main incidents of the play. Mr. Jacob Litt, within a very few years, has come to be looked upon as one of the few reliable producing managers of America, and in "The Ensign" patrons of the theater may look for that invariable high form that distinguishes all of the productions that tour the country under his business-like management.

CHICAGO OPERA HOUSE.—The return of the ever welcome Primrose and West's Mammoth Minstrels to Chicago marks an era in minstrelsy. The novel feature of two troupes combined, one of genuine negroes and one of white performers, is a departure which seems to have hit the taste of lovers of this style of amusement. An old time troupe of negroes gives a very fine "first part," consisting of choice negro melodies which bring out all the sweetness of the voices. The old Primrose and West company then comes on the scene, in the foreground, and the mammoth new troupe renders an entertaining program of ballads, with a fine chorus of seventy voices.

ROYAL ENGLISH WINTER CIRCUS AND GERMAN WATER CARNIVAL.—Two big shows daily. Unapproachable list of European and American artists in a program of unparalleled excellence. Rosa Meers, the greatest of all lady riders this week; Wm. De Motte, champion bareback rider of the world; Braatz Bros., two clowns and twenty-five leapers.

McVICKER'S THEATER.—Eugene Tompkins ballet spectacle, "The New Black Crook," and the Athos family. More magnificent, extravagant and splendid than ever. Usual matinees. Next week—the same.

LYCEUM THEATER.—"Gotham High Rollers, or Who Struck My Wife's Husband." Introducing the female Sandow Mme. Yucca.

COLUMBIA THEATER.—Last week of "Shenandoah." Next week, first time here, Mr. E. E. Rice's historical extravaganza, "1492."

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—Hoyt's "A Temperance Town." Every night and usual matinees. Next wek, the same.

THE LINCOLN.—Bronson Howard's "Young Mrs. Winthrop." Next week—Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Byron.

MADISON STREET OPERA HOUSE.—City Club Burlesque Co. Two big shows daily.

HAVLIN'S THEATER.—"The Kid."

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel beadings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under "Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. TITUS, Waverly, Clay Co., Miss. 42-18-tf

WE are located in one of the finest training grounds in the United States and have first-class kennels. We are now prepared to take four more dogs to train for next Fall shooting; keep our own saddle horses and hunting wagon; our patrons are always welcome. Can also board some more dogs and work on game. Write for pamphlet and full information. C. W. TWAY, Michigan City, Miss. 3

BY HERBERT A. WEEKS

A noisy brook pours its cold waters into the stream, close to where we camp, forming a deep pool which seems to be alive with trout. Never have I seen such ferocious fish; it is quite unnecessary to choose a fly; they rise to almost anything we throw into the water.

The day following the killing of our first moose is Sunday, so we rest quietly in camp, content with catching a few large trout. Next morning we push on, as we are eager to reach our unknown lake. Three times we camp, and it is hard to estimate our progress, rendered very slow by the many rapids. We are somewhat surprised by the apparent absence of game, for we are in the heart of the game country and ought certainly to obtain meat every day, but, with the exception of an occasional partridge, we have to be contented with salt pork. We are at last rewarded for our hard work, however, for just as the sun is setting the stream, which proves to be the outlet of the lake, takes a sharp turn and there, in all its primeval grandeur, is the object of our search. It scarcely seems credible that this lovely expanse of sparkling water, the grand old trees in all their beauty skirting the shore with a luxuriant undergrowth, interspersed with many hued flowers, whose fragrance attracts bees and butterflies in countless swarms, could be that forbidding mass of ice and snow on which our snowshoes left a trail less than nine months ago, in the chill dreariness of that Winter waste. Summer seems an impossibility.

These thoughts pass like a flash through our brain, for game is once more in sight; a herd of no less than five red deer are peacefully browsing on a little grassy knoll close to the entrance to the lake. The only possibility of approach is by stalking, for the wind is unfavorable and it will be necessary to make a wide detour in the bush and approach from a different direction from where we are. No one can conceive, without actual experience, what it means to travel through thick bush. Forty yards from where I leave the canoes the compass is my only guide, but the bearings have been taken correctly. After at least half an hour of severe climbing and crawling I have the satisfaction of seeing what looks like a white plume flicking in the bushes ahead. I cannot fail to be impressed with the wonderful provision of Nature in adapting the color of wild animals to their surroundings. I am not more than seventy-five yards from the nearest deer, and yet the color of its hide so closely resembles the surrounding bush that if it was not for the bobbing of the white tail I could not discern the body at all, nor can I tell whether it is buck or doe, but as we have been without meat for three days I cannot risk any closer investigation. The crack of my rifle is so great a surprise to them that after the first short rush their loud snorting can be heard for several minutes before they decide which way to run. Even if I wanted to kill more than one the bush is too thick to allow of a second shot. My victim proves to be a young doe in good condition; the bullet has struck fairly behind the shoulder, death being instantaneous.

We choose for our camp a little grassy clump where the deer have been feeding close to the water, and during all our long stay at that lonely lake not one single trace, recent or old, of man's presence do we discover, and for me it has all the strong fascination of an untrodden wilderness. The lake is about six miles long and perhaps two broad at its widest point, tapering at either end. We desire to locate a permanent camp where we can remain and hunt for ten or fifteen days, and therefore push on next morning to explore the upper end. Paddling along leisurely, we watch closely for "sign," but it is the hour near midday when bird and beast seek the cool recesses of the forest. At last our eyes are gladdened by a long strip of sandy beach flanked by an enormous growth of white birch, through which flows silently the stream which gives life to the lake. It is an ideal camping ground. The birch to an Indian is like the palm tree to the African; they can make almost anything from a frying-pan to a house out of the bark, and as soon as they have unloaded the canoes they commence to strip bark for their "teepee."

Sleeping night after night in a 7x4 tent, shoulder to shoulder with two Indians, may seem very romantic, but we view it solely in a practical light and anticipate much greater comfort in having the tent to ourselves. While they labor at their wigwam we wander along the sandy beach, and great is our delight to find among the countless deer and caribou tracks the huge imprints of a mighty moose. We summon our warriors and make a careful survey. We decide that the tracks were made on the previous night by a bull of large dimensions; that he had entered the lake to drink and probably returned to his forest haunts before daylight, as we trace his track back again into the bush. Pipes are put away and the use of the ax forbidden, for when no wind is blowing sound will travel a long way. While the Indians make a fire from what deadwood they can pick up and prepare a solid dinner, we take a plunge in the cool water, and, much refreshed, dine on venison and most delicious cakes made in the ashes.

At about three o'clock in the afternoon, the lot having fallen to me to hunt up stream, the chief and myself start out in the largest canoe, prepared for an all night hunt. We carry nothing but what we have actual and immediate use for: rifle, paddles, jack and a chunk of cold meat. The jack is made from a piece of hemlock bark set on a semicircular board with a hole in it to hold a candle, this primitive lantern being supported on a stick made fast in the bow of the canoe. Old-fashioned it may be, but it serves every purpose for those who know how to use it. Oil lamps may do for deer, but after you have tried them a few times on moose you will conclude that the candle is the best. As we glide along through the dead water, the scenery is simply grand; the banks of the stream are entirely different from where we have been journeying; the undergrowth is not nearly so thick, the trees farther apart, and in places there are wide, level meadows of swamp grass and rushes.

We hardly leave the camp before we start a red deer. The temptation to take a flying shot is strong, but we are after nobler game; and for all we know a moose may be within earshot. To our great satisfaction the dead water seems endless, and by sunset we are probably six or seven miles from camp. The silence has been unbroken, when suddenly we hear a sharp cry followed by "too hoo! too hoo!"

"He glad he got meat for supper," is the chief's laconic comment. An owl has killed some small animal and what we hear are the mingled cries of triumph and despair.

We have everything in our favor for a perfect hunting night; quite warm, without a breath of wind stirring, and very dark; some instinct seems to tell us both that we are going to meet a moose. The darkness is so intense that it is with the utmost difficulty that we are able to follow the winding of the stream. Presently we bang into a log and disturb the slumbers of a large heron whose discordant cries awake the echoes of the forest. Again a deathlike stillness. What was that? Afar off it sounds like a load of gravel dumped into the water from an elevation. Again and again it is repeated, louder and louder, as we decrease our distance from it. There is but one animal that can make such a commotion: a moose taking his evening bath. We cannot see the length of the canoe ahead, but judging from the sound he is standing pretty well out in the stream, every few minutes plunging his head down and bringing it up with a jerk that sends the water in every direction. I realize that we are almost on top of him and want to warn the chief to cease paddling and steady the canoe for a shot, but there is an ominous silence which betokens that the huge brute suspects something, and one word from me would start him. As quickly as I can I light a sulphur match on my knee and hold it to the candle wick which is damp and will not light. I can still feel the motion of the canoe, and know instinctively that there is going to be trouble. The next match lights the candle, and for one brief instant the light of the jack shines on the largest moose I ever saw; the prow of the canoe almost touches him, and before I can even raise my rifle he makes a wild rush, actually grazing the canoe as he passes. With one mighty stroke the Indian tries to turn, careening the canoe till the water pours over the port side, to right her. I lean far over on the starboard side, not realizing that the chief will do the same. It is too much for the frail craft and over she turns, ducking us both. It is difficult to give the details of such an incident, for it all seems to take place in a second. My one thought is, can I hang onto my rifle and swim to shore in time to get at least one shot? What is my unspeakable joy to find that I can stand on bottom. I can see nothing at all, but my ears tell me that the moose is trying to climb the other bank. Three times I fire in the direction of the sound, then I hear him swimming back across the stream, it does not seem more than twenty feet away. Four times more I shoot, and bless the man who invented waterproof cartridges, but the breaking of the brush and the sound of retreating hoofs prove that none of the shots have been effective. When the chief got his feet on bottom he held onto the canoe. Without a word we drag it ashore, dump the water out. Cold, wet and disgusted we resume our silent paddling. Long acquaintance with the old Indian makes me realize that his professional pride is keenly hurt by the blunder he has made. I feel in no mood to discuss the question with him, and therefore hold my peace. Two hours later when we have almost reached camp, he breaks the silence in his own quaint way: "Anyhow, moose he's happy."

Our camp on the lake is certainly an ideal one, for we never lack for venison, caribou and trout, and by penetrating the bush for five hundred yards we can always bag a few partridges with the shotgun.

Early morning and late afternoon one canoe hunts up the deadwater of the stream, the other at the outlet of the lake. One morning we kill a fine bull caribou which has come down to the lake within two hundred yards of our camp to drink, and while the Indians are skinning him and preparing the meat, we take one of the canoes and paddle up stream to catch some trout. Passing a thick clump of bush close to the bank we hear snarling and growling which plainly indicates the presence of a she bear and her cubs. Old hunters are puzzled to tell you how bears conceal themselves. We thrash the bush in every direction with as much unconcern as if we were hunting woodchucks. The growling continues close at hand from an almost impenetrable thicket, but not a black hair can we see, and much disappointed we have finally to give it up.

Returning to camp we decide to go up the deadwater for eight or ten miles, camp one night, and hunt in the early morning on the upper stream. It is just about dusk as we locate our camp, and the Indians are cooking our supper, when we hear "quack! quack! quack!" and a flock of about thirty widgeons light in the stream within easy gunshot. To avoid all possibility of scaring large game we have not even cut wood for our fire, but have picked up dead branches to serve instead, and here are these fat, tender, saucy birds, seemingly daring us to shoot. The temptation is too great. The "bang! bang!" of the shotgun wakes the echoes and two loads of No. 4 shot are scattered among them. Do not ask how many we killed. We have a roast duck apiece for supper, anyhow. And now the strange part of the story comes. We have every reason to believe that the loud report of the shotgun on that calm night will scare every living thing away, and in consequence have quite given up all idea of hunting, although the moon is rising and everything favors a hunt.

After a hearty supper we are lazily smoking our pipes when we detect a noise in the water. Instantly we are as silent as the dead, when the sound is repeated up [illegible] "Splosh, splosh, splosh!" In less time than it takes to write it I am in the bow of the largest canoe, my [illegible] ish, the chief in the stern, and our three [illegible] forcing the canoe along the quiet stream. Our moccasined feet have made no noise, and we are fairly proficient with the paddle, but the great brute is much nearer than we suppose. The moon is shining brightly through the trees, but the shadow is very deep near shore, and when the bulk of that huge moose looms up out of the darkness he truly seems as big as an elephant to my excited imagination. "Crack!" The big express behind me has opened fire and a sheet of flame the length of the canoe shoots by my head, while my ears are deafened by the report. I know who is shooting, as cool a hand as ever held a rifle, and I am not alarmed, but with the smoke and the darkness and the motion of the canoe, I can only hope to take effect with a chance shot. Six times the rifles ring out, and then at last we see a huge, black object in the moon's blaze, swimming the stream. This is our chance, and four shots more follow in rapid succession. The brute climbs the bank, but the slow crashing of the bushes and the labored breathing indicate a mortal wound. We go ashore and try to follow in, but this is impossible in the darkness and we reluctantly have to wait till morning. As soon as it is light enough to see we are on the trail, and about a thousand yards from the stream we find a huge cow moose, stone dead. One bullet only has been fatal, but two more have struck her.

And now let me say right here, before my brother sportsmen hold up in their hands in horror, that a cow moose is sacred in our eyes and safe from our bullets, no matter what the temptation may be. But in this particular instance we did not actually know what we had shot at, and if in place of this dead moose we had found an elephant, I, for one, would not have been much surprised, judging by what I thought I saw and heard.

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE—"A YOUNG DOE IN GOOD CONDITION"

"What do you find to eat in that wild region, and what sort of cooking can those wonderful Indians accomplish?" I hear some epicure ask.

It is a reasonable question and should not be scorned. If one man will follow a moose trail for three days, sleeping where night f[illegible]s him, with only a few pieces of hard- [illegible] from starvation, he is undoubtedly a [illegible] but where does the glory come in? I [illegible] ations from my zeal in the chase, [illegible] have more forethought. The In- [illegible] do, very well, provided they are given time and material; but if you want solid comfort you must have one to hunt with you and a second one to cook and have your meal in readiness when you return to camp. Old sportsmen do not need any description of the bush menu, but it may interest those who are not accustomed to camping to know what sort of fare they can expect.

It is hardly necessary to state that "you must first catch your rabbit." If you do not kill game you must depend upon fish and salt pork. The following items are not only possible, but probable, with any degree of luck: Moose, caribou and venison, roast, boiled, stewed or steak; moose muffler, moose and caribou tongue boiled, marrow bones, wild ducks and partridges roasted, brook trout broiled, trout chowder. Your regular supplies can furnish soups of various kinds, potatoes and onions, boiled or fried, canned corn, tomatoes, condensed milk, plum pudding, pancakes, maple sirup, soda biscuit, butter, tea, coffee, etc. I do not enjoy salt pork, hardtack, or dough biscuits, although if necessity compels me I can live on that kind of fare; but I maintain that with a little forethought and a trifling additional expense the sportsman can have much more comfort than is usually provided.

One more incident before we start on our homeward journey. We return to the camp at the head of the lake and occupy the next few days in tanning and dressing the moose and caribou hides. The morning we are to start for the club house dawns cloudy and there is a heavy fog on the lake. The canoes are loaded and ready and we are just embarking when our chief calls our attention to a big black object seemingly crossing the lake. It looks far too large for a moose, as it is a long way off, but what other animal could it be? I have never seen anything like it, and can hardly credit my vision, but when our two Indians haul one canoe out of the water and unceremoniously dump the contents, we do not stop to argue but are quickly flying down the lake as fast as four paddles can propel us. The moose is fairly in the middle of the lake at least a mile from the nearest shore, and we judge about two miles from us. We certainly can make three feet to his one. How we pray it may be a bull. The canoe jumps with every stroke, for noise does not matter now; brute strength is what we want. In some unaccountable way he seems to gain on us, for after we have traversed at least a mile he seems no nearer.

Suddenly the sun struggles through the clouds, scattering the mist and fog on the lake; our great moose curves his long, black neck in the air, flaps his great white wings, exposing his snowy bosom and utters the most contemptuous, sarcastic laugh that ever a loon was guilty of. Our bullets do not bother him a bit. He just wags his head and dodges them, continuing his shrill defiance.

Conversation lags about that time, but I guess the thought is mutual that if our eyes can be so hopelessly deceived by the mirage of an old crazy loon we had better start for home.

THE BUSH IN WINTER

A very small portion of those who love the woods in Summer and Fall have any conception of the Winter attractions; and with the exception of a few sportsmen whose experience has taught them better, the belief prevails that one must be as hard as a nail, as tough as a pine knot, and as strong as a football player to endure the hardships and discomforts of a Winter hunt. All this is erroneous and has arisen partly from misconception as to the conditions and partly, no doubt, from the talk of reckless hunters who think to enhance their own prestige by wild tales of privations and dangers endured.

Will the reader accompany us once more and from our actual experience judge for himself? You will need your small caliber rifle, .44 or .45, warm clothing, with several extra heavy pairs of woolen socks; but you need not go in training a month before we start, nor get your life insured, as we agree to bring you back sound and well.

The dry, clear cold of Montreal is such a revelation that we can hardly credit a temperature of zero. Our rooms with open fire at the Windsor are so delightful that we linger a whole day just to try the novelty of the toboggan slides and enjoy the superb sleighing. Quebec is even more attractive with its little low-roofed houses, each one supporting a solid story of snow; and here we linger long enough to provide ourselves with fur coats and caps, which are very important for our long sledge ride from the railroad station to the club house. We have always been able to hire these buffalo hide coats in Quebec. They are a great protection from the wind, but are altogether too heavy for walking. Although in the Summer or Fall we can make the journey in a single day, in Winter we take two days for it, stopping one night at one of the several villages on the route, as the roads are generally too heavy for fast traveling.

A night spent in a "habitant's" hut is certainly not a luxurious experience, as very few of them are more than twenty feet square, with perhaps a partition dividing the house into two rooms. Some have but the one room, in which the man and his wife and family, Indians, drivers and hunters must all find lodging together. Some of the huts are neat and clean, and we always select one, if possible, where there are no children.

One of the peculiarities of this sledge journey is the fact that one track, beaten hard by the one-horse sledges, constitutes the road, and owing to the depth of the snow it does not always follow the route laid out by the surveyors, but meanders off across fields, evergreen boughs stuck in the snow at intervals, like so many channel buoys, marking the course.

The very natural query, "Suppose we should meet someone?" is bound to be answered sooner or later, and if you are fortunate enough to understand "habitant" French, you will not lack for amusement.

As our hardy moose hunters, even in Winter, must have their creature comforts, it requires from four to six sledges, with their drivers, to carry the camp impedimenta, and the announcement by our chief to the approaching, bewildered "Kanuck," that the Czar of all the Russias with his suite has the right of way, has the desired effect; the caravan stops. With unceasing verbal accompaniment, but perfect good nature, Mr. Habitant's horse is unhooked from his sledge, led from the track, and plunges at once up to his shoulders in the snow. The sledge follows suit, and if it happens to be a family party, grandmother, wife and children, they perch as they best can on what remains visible of the sledge, their eyes starting from their heads, while papa, almost up to his neck, makes profound obeisance as we get in motion once more with the loud cracking of the whips and cries of the drivers. When we have passed all lend a hand to assist in getting our friend and his belongings back on the snow track, and we proceed merrily.

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE—"THE JACK SHINES ON THE LARGEST MOOSE I EVER SAW"

Some of the hills are very steep, and, relieved of our heavy coats, we gladly warm ourselves by walking. The road is a continuous but gradual ascent broken at intervals by valleys and streams, and at the crest of a hill we pause to admire the magnificence of the mighty ice-bound river stretching away as far as the eye can reach, backed by the somber snow-capped mountains. However, the keen air has given us rare appetites and we do not linger to sentimentalize, but, mounting our sledges, away we go on the down grade and through a patch of woods, discerning in the distance the spire of the little church which marks the last village, after leaving which the road soon plunges into the bush, and if you are able to stay on the sledge, which is very doubtful, you have the topography of that road distinctly stamped upon your yielding body. The driver seems to be utterly oblivious to the presence of a good sized tree, lying athwart the track; the horse climbs over somehow, then it's merely a question of whip and traces. By this time you have been tumbled off with loosened teeth, but, as no one expresses surprise, you conclude that this must be the way roads are made in this part of the country.

The road prepares you for the club house, which is nothing but a good-sized log cabin, stoutly built, comfortable and warm. Perhaps you were not prepared for such simplicity, but then you reflect that sawmills are unknown and that hunters are always supposed to live in log cabins. However, everything is neat and clean and the cook soon prepares supper. Jack, our faithful Newfoundland, views his sledge with unconcealed disdain, for he pictures to himself many a heavy load he will have to draw. Sadly he obeys the melancholy command: "Marche au coucher." Sleep comes easily to man and beast, and to one at least of the former visions of vast herds of moose and caribou.

We must now depend on snowshoes, compass, and the instinctive knowledge of our guides. Tent, stove, blankets, provisions, etc., are soon stowed on dog sledge and three toboggans, which are hauled by the Indians. We carry our rifles only, the Indians no weapons except their knives and axes. Fresh caribou and deer tracks are plentiful everywhere, but we do not stop to follow them. At about four o'clock in the afternoon we select a camping place near a stream, where we cut through the ice for water. Beating down the snow with our snowshoes, we pitch our tent between two small trees, set up our stove, with the feet on two broad logs, cover the snow a foot thick with sappan boughs, spread our blankets, cut wood and are ready for the night.

We are fortunate in having clear weather, with a hard crust on the snow, so our progress is comparatively rapid. On the third day, having tracked and killed a caribou, we determine to camp, and send out our Indians in different directions in search of a moose yard. That night one reports having found moose tracks and "browsings," so at dawn of the following day, leaving the cook in charge of camp, we strike the trail. Following a moose trail is not the easiest work imaginable, but oh! the exultation and excitement when that massive hoof-print is ever leading you on, and every sign shows that you are gaining! All else is forgotten. Your legs take on new energy; your rifle becomes a straw in weight; your blood tingles and courses through your veins; in a atmosphere where the mercury is far below zero the sweat is pouring from every portion of your body as you skim and jump and run, dodging fallen trees and snow swirls, climbing steep hills, and again plunging down into valleys, till at last, through the blackened stumps of a "brule" or burned track, you see a huge, brown object, with widespread antlers glinting in the sunlight, lumbering along, impeded by the snow, but making you strain every nerve to gain a foot! 'Tis a race for life, and the poor brute knows it!

One more dash and you will try a flying shot, when your snowshoe catches in a stump and down you go head first into the snow. The strain and twist have thrown the thong of one of your shoes out of place, which requires several minutes to adjust. Meanwhile the bull has gained at least five hundred yards and is out of sight. Loosening your sash you strip off your buckskin coat, for in such a race every pound tells! The trail leads through a tangled swamp. The old fellow is making for the stream. Sure enough, there are his hoofprints down the bank and onto the ice. Oh! if we had only tried a shot at that first glimpse!

No man could overtake a moose on the ice, but he may get rattled and take the bush again. We can see him now making three yards to our one, but a flying shot diverts him and again he struggles up the bank. He is thoroughly blown, as the white froth on his hide and the steam from his nostrils indicate; but we have scarcely any breath left and cannot stand this killing pace another half mile!

Snowshoes can travel on the hard crust of a stream if there's a moose in sight, and we are abreast of him before he gets out of range. Away go the mittens, the rifle rings out, and the bullet has stopped him. One more shot at close range and the noble old fellow breathes his last.

Without coat or mittens we must keep moving or freeze to death, so we start back to get our coat before skinning the moose, and although we ordered our Indian to keep far behind, he is only human, and it spite of our injunction is close at hand. With a wild, triumphant war whoop he hands us our coat remarking: "Sacristi," a big one!

SECOND ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL GAME, BIRD AND FISH PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION

The second annual meeting of the National Game, Bird and Fish Protective Association was held January 9 and 10, in the Sherman House, Chicago, President M. R. Bortree in the chair. Secretary F. E. Pond being ill Mr. W. H. Thomson, of Wauzeka, Wis., was elected secretary pro tem. Among those present were A. L. Lakey, Kalamazoo, Mich.; I. Walter Sharp, Indianapolis, Ind.; H. F. Bosworth, Milwaukee, Wis.; Game and Fish Warden L. K. Buntain, Dayton, O.; C. F. Bates, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Wm. Bigsby, Kalamazoo, Mich.; and T. P. Hicks, S. F. Baird, Dr. C. W. Lichtenberg, H. B. Tefft, Chas. Eseman, E. K. Adams, E. Hough, Leonard Goodwin, R L. Mott, H. L. Goodman, Dr. F. A. Hodson, Game Warden Chas. H. Blow and Geo. W. Strell, of Chicago.

The minutes of the first annual meeting were read and approved.

The following were elected members of the association: Leonard Goodwin, Chicago; Wm. Bigsby, Kalamazoo, Mich.; Tim Donoghue, La Salle, Ill.; Chas. C. Sidler, Milwaukee; Adam Wolf, Judge James Adams, Chicago, and J. J. Smith, Evanston, Ill.

Letters were received from the following members, with regrets that they could not be present but assuring the association of their hearty support: H. C. [illegible], Capt. John Fowler, Louisville, Ky.; Geo. A. [illegible] town, S. D.; W. F. Dennis, Richmond, I[illegible] goon, Muskegon, Mich.; J. A. Helfens[illegible] Minn.; W. A. Story, Portland, Ore.; L. H[illegible] and, Ill.; G. E. Delavan, Estherville, Ia[illegible] Washington, D. C.; J. P. Barnum, Prairie du Chien, Wis.; Sam Northcott, McGregor, Ia.; C. E. Robbins, Fargo, N. D.; H. F. Chase, Amesbury, Mass.; W. H. Morris, Batavia, Ill.; W. S. Metcalf, Lawrence, Kan.; W. Holberton,

IN THE LAND OF THE MOOSE—"ALL ELSE IS FORGOTTEN"

Hackensack, N. J.; J. F. Forbrich, Chicago; C. L. Helleary, Cairo, Ill.; E. M. Blanding, Bangor, Me.; G. A. Johnson, Detroit, Mich.; A. J. Klofanda, Eau Claire, Wis. Each had suggestions to offer and some wrote very interesting letters which will appear in our columns later.

Treasurer T. P. Hicks read his report, which showed that $234 had been received from individual membership fees, $50 from state association memberships, $86.35 from the sale of association badges (gold-plated stars), and $5 from 1895 dues, a total of $375 35. The disbursements footed up $329.71, leaving a balance on hand of $45.64. The report was accepted.

Secretary F. E. Pond's report was read, in which he stated that the association had made great progress during its first year, its influence was felt in all proposed legislation, its branches in the different states had a deterring effect on illegal and wholesale killing of game, and its membership was increasing rapidly. He declined to fill the office again, believing, as the office was one which demanded a great deal of time and hard work, that rotation should be the rule. The report was accepted.

Mr. Tefft moved that a committee of three be appointed to draft recommendations or suggestions outlining work for the association during the coming year. Seconded and carried. The chair appointed Messrs. George W. Strell, A. L. Lakey and H. B. Tefft.

Mr. Lakey moved that the chair appoint a committee, in the near future, on national and state legislation. Seconded and carried.

The reports of standing and special committees were ordered read at the second session, Thursday night, and the association resolved to listen to individual experiences and opinions anent the introduction and propagation of Mongolian pheasants, and matters of general interest.

Mr. H. F. Bosworth gave an interesting account of his attempts to raise pheasants. He stated that he began by hatching the eggs under common barnyard fowls, and that now he has over a hundred hardy pheasants. He claimed that they will withstand cold weather as well if not better than the ruffed grouse, being hardy after six months of age, and in habits they are the same as this last named game bird, feeding on grain, insects and bugs of all kinds. A hen pheasant will raise one brood in Wisconsin, and in Oregon two broods, where, as a matter of fact, they became so plentiful six years after being introduced that Oregon farmers complained of them as a menace to their crops. Mongolian pheasants cost about five dollars each, and Mr. Bosworth said in raising them great care must be exercised during the first six months. He has raised sixteen in one brood, and feeds them on dry maggots, which he procures by hanging a piece of meat over their coop into which the maggots drop as fast as nature allows them. Slaughter house maggots will scour and kill the birds. Pheasants do not mate in the wild state.

Mr. L. K. Buntain, chief game and fish warden [illegible] Ohio, related the experience of the Ohio game commission in introducing pheasants into that state, which, while a failure at first, now promises to be most successful. In 1888 they imported thirteen old birds and purchased [illegible] hundred eggs. The attempt to propagate failed, as after the eggs were hatched the old and young birds disappeared into space, apparently. His experience proved that coops should have a fine wire mesh running down into the ground at least eighteen inches, and boarded up three feet and lattice extended much higher. As pheasants are great burrowers the wire screen must be well [illegible] ground, otherwise every bird will dig out and [illegible] for over. The Ohio commission has leased Rattlesnake Island and will stock it with pheasants and protect them there for all time if necessary. The island is quite large, and they hope to accomplish much with five hundred to two thousand birds. As the state has taken a deep interest in game and fish propagation as well as protection, Mr. Buntain believes his state will be teeming with pheasants in a few years.

Mr. Bosworth here stated that all coops should have board partitions to separate the cocks, as they are fierce fighters and will get at each other to the death where wire partitions only separate them. The pit game cock is from a cross between the cock pheasant and the common cock. Pheasants will lay from forty to sixty eggs from the middle of April to the first of July.

W. H. Thomson of Wauzeka, Wis., stated he had been raising them and was quite successful. Coops should be twenty-four feet square. Unless great caution is taken to keep the pheasants within an inclosure they will dig out or get over a fence, and then will make a run for their lives, running faster than any dog and disappearing in the densest thickets. Mr. Thomson said he turned loose three pairs, and later one cock and a hen. He is going to Oregon again soon and will get more pheasants.

Mr. Bosworth stated that thousands of two-inch bass were being taken for bait, from Wakesha County waters, instead of minnows, and called the attention of the state government to the open violation of the law, which protects bass under one pound in weight. Many sportsmen ignorantly purchase these small bass for minnows.

The hour being late the meeting adjourned to 8 p. m., Thursday.

The second night's session was called to order at 8:30, President Bortree in the chair; W. H. Thomson, secretary pro tem.

The reports of special committees was called. The committee on recommendations, appointed the previous evening, sent in the following:

MR. PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL GAME BIRD AND FISH PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

Your committee on recommendations respectfully submits the following for your consideration, and believes if each recommendation is carried out your association will have much to felicitate itself on at the next annual meeting:

(1) Advocate the appointment of a salaried chief game and fish warden in every state.

(2) Advocate the licensing of all shooters for the privilege of shooting—each state to issue license for such state, said license fee to be paid into a fund to be known as the State Game and Fish Protective Fund.

(3) Advocate a non-export law in every state.

(4) Advocate fixed salaries for chief and deputy wardens. (Fines as fees alone operate adversely.)

(5) Advocate a uniform opening for all game birds. Each state to determine opening date in such state.

(6) Advocate the establishment of state hatcheries for game as well as for fish.

(7) Advocate a national game hatchery as well as national fish hatchery.

(8) Advocate amendment to interstate commerce law to prohibit shipping game and fish contrary to any state law.

(9) Advocate a national law to protect breeding grounds in the far north, to save the millions of eggs of wild fowl, and prevent the disturbing of fowl during the breeding season.

(10) Advocate a national law protecting game on the waters adjacent to any state having game and fish protective laws.

(11) Advocate a national law forbidding the excessive destruction of waterfowl along, around and in gulf and ocean waters adjacent to the United States.

Committee. { Geo. W. STRELL. A. L. LAKEY. H. B. TEFFT.

The report, after considerable discussion, was adopted.

It was moved and carried that the executive committee be instructed to take such steps as they may deem advisable to cause Congress to be memorialized to pass such laws as may be necessary to carry into effect the recommendations of the committee in reference to national legislation

President M. R. Bortree then read his annual address, as follows:

TO THE OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL GAME, BIRD AND FISH PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

Gentlemen:—One year has passed since this association was created. The need of some central association national in its scope has been felt for a long time. And frequent suggestions and appeals have appeared in our sportsmen's magazines for some united action to bring about reforms in matters pertaining to better laws, better enforcement, and more game protection. The lack of uniformity in the game laws of the different states and territories, the defective laws, and the reckless disregard and contempt that has been shown for the game and fish laws of nearly every state in the Union, have awakened serious questions in the minds of many noble and good men, as to whether anything can be done to change this deplorable condition of things. The name of our association suggests a large field for work, a herculean task, and also awakens in the individual mind great expectations of glorious results. To begin a plan of work without prestige or money and only a few workers has been very embarrassing, nevertheless the officers have felt their way along, and, reports will show, have at least made a beginning. The following declaration of purposes or principles, adopted one year ago, we believe will do for us to retain as our platform.

The objects are as follows: "This association is formed for the purpose of coöperative work among state sportsmen's associations, game wardens and individuals in protecting game and fish during the close season; to obtain harmonious legislation by and between the several states, territories and districts in their game laws; to discourage the reckless killing of any and all kinds of game, for pleasure or for pecuniary profit; prevent the destruction of forests, and the killing of insectivorous and song birds; encourage a general adoption of the game warden system; extend the number of state and national parks by proper legislation; foster the introduction and protection of new species of game; ascertain, defend and protect the rights of sportsmen: and promote the affiliation of all worthy members of the fraternity throughout the United States."

Our mission, however, must necessarily be more advisory than combative. One of the first great things to be accomplished is to arouse to active interest the tens of thousands of men in the United States, who love to hunt and fish, who have always been ready to deplete but have done very little to replenish. We sincerely wish that we might make all persons see how near we are to the border edge of the extermination of our game birds and animals. It requires only a little study to see that in all the past the trend of things has been one way. We have perhaps all been oblivious of what we are doing, or where we are about to laud. The literature most carefully read by the average sportsmen found in all weekly and monthly papers are pleasing hunting stories, names and descriptions of localities where game is plentiful, detailed accounts of large parties in their hunting expeditions, their successes, and the delightful times enjoyed. Pages devoted to dogs, hunting boats of every kind, wonderful guns, advertised; wonderful [illegible] accounts of experiments with the [illegible] gratitude expressed by [illegible] knowledge gained as to which load [illegible] advertisements of quail dogs, partridge dogs and [illegible] dogs. Pages of information how to capture the [illegible] the wild turkey, to call the moose, etc. [illegible] almost a thousand devices how to [illegible] fall, he goes after Mr. Fish with a light [illegible] him out. The sportsman of forty years ago had a heavy muzzle loading rifle, now magazine repeater, explosive bullets, which kill a mile; then flint or cap lock shotguns, muzzle loaders, now a hammerless ejector, smokeless shells and nitro powder. Great factories in Europe and America are working night and day to make implements and material for game destruction. What are we doing to resist and save? Never has there been so much money expended by men for fishing and shooting outfits and trips in search of something as at present, and never so many who return empty-handed. A Chicago sportsman recently advertised three four-hundred dollar shotguns for sale, for the reason that he had purchased one which he liked better.

Many persons view with unconcern game and fish destruction, pretending to believe that there will always be enough left. In 1882 I was up at Sparta, Wis., for four days; there was a wild pigeon nesting there, said to be eighteen miles long and four miles wide There seemed to be millions of these birds. Trappers from all over the country were there by scores and hundreds, all busy; no law forbade them to trap. When the young birds were ready to leave their nest, a certain man, said to be an ex-member of the Legislature, employed men, boys and Indians, and captured the squabs by the wagon load, and shipped them to Chicago and Eastern markets, literally destroying all the young bred that season, and this was the beginning of the extermination of these beautiful birds; the next year or second year after the work of annihilation was accomplished in Missouri, and now uninformed persons are inquiring, "Where are the wild pigeons?" Last Spring as the wild ducks were making their northward flight along the Mississippi River, they were met by a blinding blizzard, and driven helplessly into every nook and corner of the stream, where they were killed by tens of thousands and put on the markets, and in most cases sold for almost nothing; no law restrained, no one interfered. Last Fall scarcely any ducks made their southern flight along the Mississippi, for the reason that the great body of birds that had been in the habit of taking this route had been killed in the Spring. This is liable to occur again with even more disastrous consequences. The awful destruction of deer last Fall in Minnesota and Wisconsin that were driven into small sections of country by the great forest fires where they were easily captured, and several hundred sent to this market in direct violation of the laws of these two states, was one of the boldest and most defiant insults ever offered to these two commonwealths, and as far as I know, the shippers and railroad companies have escaped prosecution. The destruction of deer and elk in the far West as shown by correspondence our attorney Mr. F. S. Baird has had with Mr. Webster and others should be stopped immediately by acts of Congress. The eggs of game birds shipped from Alaska as shown by letter from Mr. W. A. Storey, our secretary for Oregon, should also be prohibited at once by national legislation.

The song birds are also having a hard struggle for existence against all their foes, the worst one being the small boy, who has become very numerous in all parts of the country, and in too many cases he is furnished by fond and indulgent parents with a cheap gun. Throngs of men and boys leave the cities every Sunday with guns and scour the country for miles in every direction, in search of something to kill. Our present game warden and his assistant during the past year have arrested many of these violators, and prosecuted them vigorously. These are appalling facts. Can anything ever be done to put a stop to this fiendish work, that has been carried on these many years? We answer hopefully we believe there can be.

Legislators in framing laws will do well to follow as nearly as possible the laws of states on this subject which have been passed upon by the Supreme Courts and affirmed. Further suggestions I would offer as follows: That every state must have a game warden system (Maine, Minnesota and New York have good laws worth close examination). All efforts to enforce the laws without wardens will prove failures as years of experience have shown the rapid increase of game and fish in Maine during the past few years has been remarkable. The Maine Sportsman in a recent issue stated that the sportsmen visited the state in 1894 and brought into the state at least three millions of dollars. At present there are thirty-six states which have fish wardens or commissioners, nine states have game wardens or commissioners. The result of restocking streams and lakes with fish during the past years has been a wonderful success.

It is highly important to save and increase the game birds of this country, that the sale of game should be prohibited everywhere. If this be done the farmer will get more for his poultry, as the game dealer can sell more poultry if he does not keep game. There is hardly a time during the open season here in Chicago, when our market is not overstocked with game. It is high time that the occupation of the market-hunter be ended, because he takes for himself that which belongs to the people. Stopping the sale of game stops the inducement to kill large numbers of game, and if this could be done more than half of the game and birds now killed every year would be saved. Someone may say that the poor man would be deprived of his privileges if the suggestions herein offered were carried into effect. Is it not a fact that the poor men in this country in the past have killed nearly all the game and thus far have paid nothing for it? The closing positively of all markets (if there must be markets for game) on January 1 each year should be the law everywhere. This suggestion applies directly to New York, Philadelphia and Boston, where game is so late in the Spring.

Nearly all the game sold in this market has been sent here in violation of the laws of some state as may be shown: First nearly all quail and many prairie chickens are trapped; about every state forbids this. The following states forbid shipment of game birds and animals out of the state: Nebraska, Michigan, North and South Dakota, Oklahoma Territory, Arkansas, Iowa. Illinois forbids the sale of squirrels, quails, prairie chickens and pheasants. Make the season for killing and selling game shorter everywhere for a few years.

Sunday hunting and fishing should also be forbidden in all states; game should have one day of rest from pursuit and alarm. Sunday fishing is unlawful in Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Canada. Sunday hunting is unlawful in Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee and Canada.

Delaware has a license fee of $5.00 for hunting and fishing issued by Delaware Game Protection Association. The great question how to raise money for game law enforcement should be met; my own views are that it can be easily done. I would recommend that states amend their revenue laws, so as to place a tax upon all guns owned by sportsmen, $1.00 each. The gun destroys the game, and why should it not be made to protect and propagate it? All the western states should have laws to license outside hunters; all the provinces of Canada have such laws, running from $5.00 to $100.00 for each hunter, good for one year. Just think of the army of men singly and in carloads, who rush into Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and the Dakotas every year, and hunt and kill to their hearts' content, and do not pay those states one cent for privilege or even return thanks as they depart. Any state can have a sufficient fund from these sources in two years to last a long time. The dog tax of Chicago collected in 1893, was $70,384. From May 1, 1894, to December 24, 1894, $67,850. The town of Cicero received from dog tax in 1892, $972; 1893, $792; 1894, $1,323. I give these figures to show how easily money can be raised by a small tax on small things.

The success that persons are having in raising the Mongolian pheasants in many parts of the country is a very promising indication that this beautiful newly imported game bird may soon be added to our forests and game preserves. There are, however, many localities where this bird would no doubt rapidly increase in a wild state if introduced, for instance in Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri and Arkansas. I hope that we may soon learn of some enterprising sportsmen in those states who will interest themselves in distributing these birds in proper localities. In conclusion I desire to say that the outlook has never been so encouraging for the increase of fish and game as at present. The National Fish Commission, the State Fish Hatcheries, and the present system of fish protection being put in force in every state, and the increasing appropriation of money to carry on this great work show that the people are beginning to realize the value and importance of this subject. Every state is also manifesting more interest than ever before in more stringent legislation and more heroic measures for game protection.

Public sentiment is with the men who are pushing this work. The press favors it, and the highest courts of our land have given their opinion in favor of the game and fish laws.

Every member of our organization should be alive and active in behalf of its objects, and true to the motto on our badge, "We protect." Any case of violation brought to the knowledge of a member should be prosecuted by himself, or made known to the proper state officials, or to our secretary, or, in other words, every member should be an active, honorary deputy fish and game warden. We also desire that all members secure as many new members as possible, among persons who will be true to our principles.

A great help to the general work that we are endeavoring to do lies with our sportsmen's journals (the educators of the people in game matters), and we also earnestly solicit their coöperation I sincerely hope that the sportsmen of the country, as far as possible, will subscribe for one or more of the leading papers, and thus much good will be mutually accomplished.

My own time has been very much occupied in answering scores of letters from nearly every state in the Union, in reference to the game matters; I had two thousand (2,000) posters printed containing game laws of North Dakota and South Dakota; sent them to county seats and other places in these two states, to be distributed for information and warning.

I have assisted in prosecuting all cases of violations in this vicinity brought to my notice, to wit: Case of illegal selling of fish, fined twenty-five dollars and costs; case tried for illegal seining of fish in Calumet River, defendants escaped by having a jury of neighbors. Examined the drainage canal on complaint that large quantities of fish were being hemmed in to perish. I assisted our game warden, case of State Street restaurant selling quail out of season; case of Richelieu Hotel serving quail out of season. Restaurant case twenty dollars fine, Richelieu Hotel case fifty dollars fine and appealed. I desire that our association may be in close touch with our state sportsmen's association in all its work along our line. I desire to express my admiration and approval of the noble work by Mr. Charles H. Blow, our excellent game warden.

The man to whom we are most indebted is its originator, the ceaseless, systematic worker of our association, our much beloved Mr. Fred E. Pond, Secretary.

After the reading of the President's and Attorney's reports, (the latter's will appear next week in conjunction with other letters) it was moved and carried that the reading of all further reports be dispensed with, and that the entire proceedings be published in pamphlet form and distributed to all members. Discussion developed the fact that the condition of the association's funds would not warrant the outlay, as all the cash would be needed to advance the work of game and fish protection. This led to a running discussion as to the best means of getting the proceedings before the members of the association, and the more the question was discussed the more remote became the possibility of a "book of the proceedings." At this juncture Mr. Geo. W. Strell, managing editor of the AMERICAN FIELD, stated that inasmuch as the AMERICAN FIELD circulated in every part of the world where the English language is spoken, and that, as a matter of interest to its readers, it would publish the proceedings anyway, every member would learn from its columns what was being done by the association for the protection of game and fish in a national sense. A vote of thanks was tendered the AMERICAN FIELD for its efforts in behalf of the sportsmen of America.

Chas. H. Blow, State Game Warden of Illinois, then addressed the meeting. He advocated the principles as laid down by the committee on recommendations, and gave a detailed account of how he had worked to subserve the interests of the sportsmen and the people in general in protecting the game since he became state game warden. He stated that the time and place to stop violations was in the field before the game was shot, to arrest violators before the damage was done, as dead game could not be brought to life again to replenish our fields and forests. He showed why a paid warden system would be more effective in protecting the game than the fee-from-fines system As an instance he related how three arrested violators took continuances, necessitating a ten-day hotel bill for the warden, and then, when the trial was had, how the local justice let one go free and committed the other two to jail. Result, no fines, no fees and a goodly hotel bill to pay. By licensing all shooters a fund would be created sufficiently large to not only pay a chief warden and deputies, but also to purchase game birds and animals and propagate the same in a state preserve. He believed each state should have a non-export law and should protect and propagate game. If these things were done game would be plentiful in each state, there would be no occasion to restrict its sale, every citizen would be able to afford a game meal at least once a year if not oftener, and sportsmen would be happier in that they could go afield at small expense as compared with the present time. Mr. Blow was thanked for his remarks and suggestions.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, M. R. Bortree, Chicago; vice-president, Joseph H. Hunter, Washington, D. C.; treasurer, W. H. Thomson, Wauzeka, Wis.; secretary, A. L. Lakey, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Moved and carried that the President, Secretary and Treasurer name the vice-presidents and secretaries for the different states of the Union, also that they be empowered to select the place for the next annual meeting.

Mr. F. S. Baird moved that a vote of thanks be extended to the retiring secretary, Mr. F. E. Pond, whose indefatigable labors in behalf of the association had done so much to build it up and bring it to its present great state of usefulness. It was carried unanimously.

A vote of thanks was tendered all retiring officers and, on motion, the meeting adjourned.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NEW YORK STATE ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROTECTION OF FISHES AND GAME

The thirty-seventh annual meeting of this association was held at Syracuse, January 10, at the Yates House. The strong and growing interest in all that pertains to the propagation and preservation of fishes and game was amply evidenced by the large attendance. Few sportsmen's clubs of the state were unrepresented by delegates, and the Chief Game Protector of the state, Major J. W. Pond, was present with twenty-five assistants comprising his staff.

The sincerity of the sportsmen of New York regarding more stringent protection for the fishes and game of the state was manifested by the character of the delegates sent by them to this important convention, for it was remarked by those familiar with the history of game protection in New York that never before had so large a number of highly intelligent men met and devoted their energies to the cause in that state.

The various organizations represented and the names of their delegates are as follows:

Anglers' Association of the St. Lawrence River—Messrs. G. M. Skinner, R. Grant, H. C. Cornwall, W. H. Thompson.

Anglers' Association of Onondaga County—Gen. D. H. Bruce, Messrs. C. S. Smith, R. A. Molyneux, L. S. Morgan, Amos Padgham, Henry Loftie, Charles H. Mowry.

Black River Fish and Game Protective Association—Messrs. W. E Wolcott, G. G. Chassell.

Caledonia Fishing Club—Mr. James Annin Jr.

Canandaigua Rod and Gun Club—Messrs. Charles B. Lapham, Charles T. Mitchell.

Central New York Game and Fish Protective Association—Messrs. H. C. Carr, J. D. Alden, W. S. Gavitt, S. S. Granger, E. J. Gould, Dr. Seaman.

Chautauqua County Association for the Protection of Fish and Game—Mr. F. H. Garfield.

Franklin County Fish and Game Protective Association—Messrs. Morton S. Parmelee, H. C. Skinner.

Genesee Valley Fish and Bird Protective Association—Messrs. F. J. Armsden, F. W. France, H. S. Wadsworth, H. H. Widemer.

Honest Fisherman Club—Dr. F. G. Seaman, Ernest G. Gould.

Honeoye Falls Anglers' Association—Mr. A. Mather.

Morehouse Lake Club—Mr. W. W. Mosher.

New York Association for the Protection of Fish and Game—Messrs. John G. Heckscher, Robert B. Lawrence.

Niagara County Anglers' Association of Lockport—Messrs. William H. Case, F. K. Sweet.

Onondaga County Sportsmen's Club—Messrs. Andrew S. White, A. R. King, Myron Weidman, Nathan Ayers, William Prettie.

Rochester Rod and Gun Club—Mr. H. D. McVean:

Steuben County Fish and Gun Club—Mr. L. S. Parker.

Precisely at 10 a. m., President Dwight M. Bruce took the chair and called the convention to order. The most important matter discussed was the present law regulating the duck shooting season. Under the existing law, below the Troy dam ducks may be shot until May 1, whereas duck shooting must cease after March 1 in the state north and west of that line. Some old shooters, notably Andrew S. White, A. R. King and others, strongly advocated Spring shooting, claiming that to be the only season during which duck shooting is available. This sentiment evoked considerable opposition, but the feeling was general that the open season should be uniform in all parts of the state. When the Fish and Game Committee of the Legislature is in session, the Syracuse advocates of Spring shooting will make a great effort to embody their desires in the enactments of the Legislature, to make the open season from May 1 to September 1. On motion by Mr. Robert V. Lawrence, of Flushing, the convention adopted a resolution making the close season from March 1 to September 1.

Resolutions were adopted which recommend legislation as follows:

Limiting the open season for deer from October 10 to October 20, inclusive. Not more than two deer to be killed by one person during one season.

Allowing the shooting of black and gray squirrels from September 1 to December 1, excepting in Cattaraugus County and Long Island.

Making the season for shooting rabbits the same as that for birds and for woodcock, meadowlark, partridge and the like from August 15 to December 31.

Close season for duck to be from March 1 to September 1.

Opening the season for black bass on May 30. The length to remain at eight inches.

Prohibiting jack shooting and allowing does to be killed only from September 10 to October 11.

About 2:30 p. m. the afternoon session was opened. Mr. H. S. Wadsworth, second vice-president of the Genesee Valley Fish and Game Association, was loudly applauded when he criticised the action of the Canadian Government in charging American fishermen high licenses for fishing in the waters of the Dominion. He offered a resolution, which was adopted, urging the State Fish Commissioners to retaliate upon Canadian sportsmen, as follows:

Resolved, That the Board of Fish Commissioners be authorized to fix conditions under which Canadians may be permitted to fish in American waters and hunt in American fields, such as shall fairly accord with similar provisions of the Canadian officials.

It was stated there is a rumor that the Canadians purpose raising the license fee from five dollars to fifty dollars, and the convention thought equally heavy restrictions should be imposed upon Canadians coming into the United States for sport. Upon this subject, Mr. W. H. Case, of Lockport, stated he is a member of a club which controls a preserve upon the Detroit River, and the club is compelled to pay twenty-five dollars annually for shooting over their property, besides every American pays a tax to the Dominion for the use of his gun.

Mr. Case is the president of the Niagara County Anglers' Association of Lockport, and he offered a resolution asking an amendment of the fish law which will compel netters to go out three miles from the mouth of Niagara River to use their nets. He stated the netters had captured, last year, some fifteen thousand pounds of small-mouthed bass, mainly about one mile from the mouth of the river where these fishes congregate in vast numbers upon sandbars caused by the mighty wash of the great current. His motion was unanimously adopted.

Mr. H. B. Hallock, of Rochester, offered a resolution, seconded by Mr. C. H. Mowry, of Syracuse, to strike out from Section 141 the words "suckers, bullheads, eels and dogfish may be caught by hooking or spearing in any waters of this state." This would prohibit spearing and save many game fishes, Mr. F. H. Garfield, of Jamestown, saying many mascalonge were speared every year in Chautauqua County.

George B. Wood of the Onondaga County Anglers' Association, proposed to reduce the length of minnow seines from forty feet to twenty feet, and to prohibit the seining of bass, pike and wall-eyed pike for bait. His amendment was adopted and Mr. Amos Padgham offered an additional clause restricting the depth of minnow seines to four feet, which was also carried.

Mr. C. H. Mowry then offered a resolution, which was adopted with enthusiasm, to prohibit all net fishing in the inland waters of the state.

Mr. Charles B. Lapham, president of the Canandaigua Rod and Gun Club, then attacked the manner in which permits had been given out to net whitefish in inland waters, and he offered a resolution, which the convention adopted, to be presented to the Legislature should Mr. Mowry's recommendation fail. Mr. Lapham's amendment requires a license for netting whitefish and that whenever practicable a state fish commissioner shall supervise the netting.

Mr. Robert W. Lawrence, of the New York Society for the Protection of Game and Fish, offered a resolution providing for the issuance, by the State Fish and Game Commissioners, of licenses to all persons wishing to deal in live birds and fishes, minnows excepted. His resolution was carried.

Mr. H. B. Hallock offered a resolution grading the punishments of all persons convicted of violations of the game laws; first offense a fine, amount in the discretion of the Justice of the Peace; second offense, a fine, not less than fifty dollars; subsequent offense imprisonment, without fine.

An important measure, to secure uniformity of the game laws, was adopted, in a petition to the Legislature to repeal all legislation by county authorities, except Suffolk County, and to prohibit future jurisdiction in game laws on the part of county boards.

On the motion of Mr. W. H. Case a measure prevailed to increase the meshes of nets used in Lakes Erie and Ontario to one and one-half inches, the present size being one and one-eighth inches.

A committee to nominate officers for the ensuing year, consisting of Messrs. W. S. Gavitt, Lyons; A. C. Cornwall, Alexandria Bay; and James Annin Jr., Caledonia, was appointed and retired.

Resolutions of regret and condolence were passed regarding the death of the late Mr. J. N. Babcock, who was a most valued member of the association.

The Chautauqua County Club of Jamestown, the Franklin County Club of Malone, and the Morehouse Lake Club of Middleville were proposed and admitted to membership in the association.

The names of Messrs. Cornelius W. Smith, Syracuse; J. S. Van Kilef, Poughkeepsie; H. H. Widemer, Rochester; C. B. Lapham, Canandalgua; and Dr. J. S. Parker, Bath, were presented as a committee upon legislation and their appointment urged.

Mr. C. W. Smith introduced a resolution to compel the owners of game preserves to publish their boundaries in a paper issued in the county where such grounds are situated at least once a week for three weeks during the season.

Mr. W. E. Wolcott, of Utica, introduced the following resolutions, which were carried:

Resolved, That the thanks of this association be and they are hereby tendered to Attorney General T. E. Hancock, State Engineer Adams, Secretary of State Palmer, State Treasurer Colvin and Judge Williams of this judicial district for the deep interest they have manifested in the subject of forest protection, and to the state officials mentioned especially for the action they have taken as members of the state land board in opposing the sale of lands in the forest preserve and discouraging efforts looking toward additional railroad construction in the Adirondack region.

Resolved, That we place on record our unqualified approval of Section 7 of the revised constitution of the state which prohibits the sale of state lands within the forest preserve and the cutting or sale of timber therein.

Resolved, That we earnestly request our State Senators and Members of Assembly to supplement the action of the electors of this state on November 6 last, when they gave a majority of 82,000 in favor of the revised constitution containing the section just referred to, by prompt and vigorous legislation looking toward the early acquisition by the state of the entire Adirondack wilderness.

Resolved, That we express our firm convictions that public interests require that no one who owns timber lands in the forest preserve or is engaged in the manufacture or sale of lumber or wood pulp, or who is in any manner interested in such business, shall be a member of the state forest commission.

Resolved, That the secretary of this association be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to his excellency Gov. Morton and to the Assembly and Senate, with the request that they be read in both houses.

The nominating committee handed in the following selection of officers for the ensuing year: President, F. J. Amsden, Rochester; vice-president, Robert B. Lawrence, Flushing; secretary and treasurer, John B. Sage, Buffalo. The nominations were unanimously ratified.

A vote of thanks was voted Chief Game Protector Pond, and Deputy Protectors Chas. Repson, H. C. Carr and H. Hawn for their work in game protection.

An able address upon game topics, and relation of facts concerning game protection in Central New York, was made by Mr. J. S. Parker, of Bath, and the meeting adjourned.

THE CHOICE OF A GUN

PORTLAND, ORE.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The choice of a gun! How much has been written upon this most entertaining subject. How the different writers have enlarged on the beauty and fine shooting qualities of their favorite fowling pieces. I think I can say it to their credit that they have in their communications said but little in disparagement of the manufacturers of guns other than their own.

The writer has had some little experience with shotguns and thinks he knows a well-made weapon when it comes to his observation. Some time since I received a personal letter from a friend who resides at some little distance from the city, in which it was requested that I go to a certain gun store and examine a certain gun. Wishing to oblige a friend, and being nothing loath to visit a gun store at any time, I betook myself in that direction. Well when the gun was produced I found it to be one of those twelve or fourteen dollar rattle-traps, poor fitting, illy fitted, poorly constructed of poor material, and not a suitable arm for any shooter. My friend had explained that the proposed gun was for his young son, and as the boy was an inexperienced shooter he did not care to invest too heavily. Well, I looked the gun over and also examined several of slightly increased value. They were all, with the single exception of the price item, expensive weapons. Anyone at all acquainted with guns could see by the poor workmanship and poor material that the piece would not stand much usage and exist in a state of repair.

I went home and wrote a letter to my friend in which I gave him some advice. I told him that as he was a man not cramped for want of means he was foolish to endanger the life of his son by buying a pot-metal gun, and that the addition of a few dollars to the purchase price would procure something that would be a safe and good investment in more ways than one. I advised him to buy a cheap grade gun of any of the manufacturers advertised in the AMERICAN FIELD, and told him he would be surprised at the grade of gun a few dollars would purchase. I advised him particularly as to certain manufacturer whose name I will not mention, as I think the guns produced at present are cheap for anyone. I am shooting the cheapest gun made by a certain firm of well-known American gunmakers and I have used it for nearly, if not quite, ten years. It has twist barrels and is devoid of elaborate ornamentation, but despite hard shooting it is to-day nearly as good as new. Were the finest hair inserted in the breech and the barrels locked into the stock the hair could not be pulled forth intact. As to shooting qualities and stanchness they may be tersely summed up in the assertion that it is all right. I believe there are guns manufactured by half a dozen other American manufacturers which are just as cheap and just as good. They are supplied, as a rule, with what are known as twist barrels. While not so expensive as the Damascus barrels, I believe there is but little difference in the strength, and no difference in the results to be obtained by discharging them. These guns are good enough for anyone, and I am so well pleased with my old favorite that I fear to make a change.

My advice to the young man who wants a good, cheap gun is, to not invest in the ten, twelve and fifteen dollar kind of double guns, but to add a few dollars to the amount and get an arm that will last him many years if given proper care, and produce results as good as any gun. A sportsman friend who is "up to date" will greatly assist you in the selection of a suitable arm. Of course those who can afford it can put more money in the investment and get a beauty, but it will shoot no better than the cheaper grades of the standard makes.

Speaking of beauties in the shotgun line tempts me to mention a gun that I recently had the pleasure of examining. It belongs to my shooting partner, Mr. Wm. Todd, and it was produced at the factory of Parker Bros., Meriden, Conn. It is the very highest type of gun produced by those people, and one can easily believe it. Talk about your high-grade European-made guns. The man who says America cannot show shotguns up to the highest English standard is not up to date. Perfect in fitting, tight as a wedge, and with that indescribable and deceptive balance so highly desired, it is truly a triumph of American skill and workmanship. The designing and engraving are very beautiful, and as to finish, I never saw anything that surpassed it. The barrels, of which there are two sets, are the most beautiful I ever saw, and, as someone remarked to the owner's wife, the weapon is fine enough to be decked with ribbons and displayed in the parlor. He who wants a strictly high-grade gun, one that will shoot as well as any, and at the same time be a thing of exquisite beauty, need no longer search Europe, for they are producing them right here in this America of ours, and at several different factories.

LINING FOR COOTS

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Judging from the description of duck shooting trips as published from time to time in the AMERICAN FIELD, and from the writings of Mr. Leffingwell and others on the same subject, it would seem that methods in the West differ materially from ours in the East; therefore, a brief description of one of the most common sports on our coast may be of interest to many of your readers who have never tasted salt water.

Much of our coast is indented by bays which furnish a feeding ground for multitudes of ducks of all kinds, black and gray coots being by far the most numerous, and while these are not especially esteemed as an article of food, it is oftener the fault of the cook than of the bird. Be this as it may they furnish great sport, as they are among the first of the duck family to arrive in the Fall, and the last to leave. The usual method of hunting them is by forming a line of boats anchored at suitable intervals, say sixty to eighty yards apart, in the line of flight and at right angles to it, so that the birds must pass within gunshot of somebody, if the line is long enough. This they will generally do, not flying too high, especially in windy weather.

As much of this shooting must be done in open water a mile or two from land, and as one is liable to get caught out in rough weather, the boats employed must be thoroughly seaworthy. None of the ordinary sneak boxes, nor the spoonbill, round-bottomed Barnegat sneak boats will do. My boat, which might advantageously be larger for a larger man, is about twelve feet long, three feet nine inches wide, flat bottomed, with turtle-back deck of the regular sneak boat type, with cock pit twenty inches by forty-eight inches, and she will ride in a gale like a fishing bank "dory."

The best time for shooting coots, as for all other kinds of ducks, is early in the morning, though on a blowery day, especially when oyster dredges and other boats are at work to keep the birds moving, they will fly all day. The work connected with this kind of shooting is of the hardest. After a row of perhaps several miles before daylight, in rough weather, you arrive on the shooting grounds. The first man out on the line selects what he considers the best place, the next the second [illegible] and so on The boats are generally anchored in from [illegible]ty to fifty feet of water, the cable being [illegible] an empty powder keg, so that it can be easily [illegible] picking up the dead birds. The guns used by the most experienced coot shooters are usually heavy 10-bores, the old Parker hammer gun, one of the honestest, hardest shooting guns ever built, being the favorite. Heavy charges of good powder and coarse shot are necessary as the coot is the hardest bird to kill that flies. In fact the shooting is so hard that it is an expert who will average one bird for every ten shells fired. I have seen an old white-winged coot coming down the wind like a cannon ball fairly collapse in the air, but, carried by his great momentum, skip from wave to wave much as a cannon ball would do till, just as his momentum was exhausted, he would pull himself together with a dazed "where am I at" sort of expression, dive and never be seen again. No coot is your meat till you have him in the boat and not always then.

The chief danger of this sport, apart from the risk of being filled with BB shot by a reckless and misguided neighbor, is that you are liable to remain out too long after a storm sets in. Nobody is willing to be the first to give up, especially as the shooting is generally the best then, and you have a tough time getting home in a rough sea against a rising wind and head tide and possibly a snowstorm too. In view of all the difficulties, hard work, exposure and uncertain results, it may be asked wherein the undoubted charm of this sort of sport lies. I think that one or all of the following may contribute to a solution of the question. There is a fixed etiquette on the line which is seldom violated, and never without retribution. Anyone who attempts any hoggishness is sat upon with a delightful unanimity. Then the sport is thoroughly democratic. No one is any better than anyone else, unless he can prove himself so by force of arms in a sportsmanlike manner, and the best man generally wins

CENTRAL NEW YORK GAME NOTES

ITHACA, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The season on ruffed grouse closed on the 30th day of November last, and assurances are given me by shooting men from various sections of the country, to the effect that a good supply was left for breeding purposes. The season afforded some fine phases of sport on this magnificent class of game birds, and the abbreviated open season—the shortest I remember of in years, prior to the last two—if continued, gives bright promise of a substantial increase in the supply. A certain class of grouse shooters do not begin to hunt until after December 1, when, usually, there is snow enough on the ground to impel the birds to tree readily; and we all know what havoc a persistent pot-hunter is able to create in a supply of birds mildly submitting to be slaughtered in convenient treetops. Hence the value of the law which shuts this particular branch of the shooting fraternity out of its favorite method of gunning. This grouse season is good enough to be allowed to stand on the statute books, and it is beneficial enough in its results to be applied in the other six counties embraced within the jurisdiction of the Central New York Game and Fish Association.

It would prove a wonderfully helpful act if the annual tinkering of the game law—and, perhaps, the fish law should be also included—could cease for a term of years at least. Give us a wise, efficient and thoroughly protective law on game and fish, making its application, so far as possible, uniform throughout the state, and then hands off!

Central New York papers have lately been giving voice to a class of wild fowl shooters in Seneca, Cayuga, Wayne and Tompkins counties, who, in vociferous tenor, want the open season on ducks extended beyond March 1, as at present. This is simply another manifestation of the quiet and subdued activity of the Spring shooter who would fain slaughter the ill-fed, lean and weary duck family entire, as it wings its way to its nesting grounds in the far North. Let the Spring shooter chortle his stanza of song, and twang the organs of speech in vain, but touch not one precious line of the provision which, after March 1, grants to the ducks immunity from the Spring shooter's deadly fire. That enactment is sound and shapely enough, and of sufficiently good report to do just what the enemies of wild fowl conservation do not want it to do. Because of this, it should not be hacked or disfigured in any way, despite the wail of the wideawake gun wielders from grim visaged Cayuga and its environing uplands.

The December cold wave drove the ducks, scattered about in the [illegible] streams and bodies of water hereabouts in large [illegible]es, and as a result local gunners [illegible]nced some satisfactory shooting of late. Red-[illegible]drake and spoonbills are the varieties most [illegible]son in Tompkins County closed December 31. A four-months open season on Bunny is an altogether desirable one to beagle owners, as it insures good sport right along. A long extended season with the permissible use of ferrets means a scarcity of the rabbit crop.

The reports of the state game and fish protectors for the month of December, just at hand, show that a grand total of 12,349 miles have been traveled by the protectors; and yet there are people narrow-minded enough to insinuate that the game and fish protectors are not vigilant and strictly up to date. A brighter or livelier set of officials than those looking after the interests of game and fish of the Empire State is not easily found. Success and long life to them!

James McMillan of the sixteenth district says that in the southern Catskills quails have been more numerous than ever before known. Ruffed grouse were very plentiful, as were also woodcock. All in all last season was a great game season.

NEW JERSEY SPORTSMEN'S MEETING

FLEMINGTON, N. J.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In pursuance of the resolution and election of delegates in a convention of the sportsmen of the state of New Jersey, held at New Brunswick on Saturday, December 15, 1894, for the purpose of offering suggestions to the fish and game commission of the state, said delegates met at the American House, Trenton, on January 4, 1895.

The meeting was called to order and W. R. Hobart, of Newark, N. J., elected chairman and Harry L. Stout of Flemington, secretary.

The list of delegates was read and the following counties found to be represented: Atlantic, R. C. Griscom; Essex, W. R. Hobart; Sussex, R. T. Johnson; Warren, J. L. Smith; Somerset, E. R. Dickey; Mercer, A. H. Phillips; Passaic, John Jelleman; Middlesex, Wm. S. Gummere; Hunterdon, H. L. Stout.

The game and fish laws which had been operative from 1804 to 1894 inclusive were then read by the secretary, by section. At the conclusion of the reading it was deemed advisable to repeal all laws enacted from 1804 to 1894 inclusive, and to recommend to the fish and game commission that the following changes would be for the best interests of the sportsmen throughout the state and a better protection for the game within its borders:

1. That the season for the killing of quails, rabbits, squirrels, ruffed grouse, woodcocks, male European pheasants, and pinnated grouse open on October 15 and close on November 31 each year.

2. That the open season for the killing of Wilson snipes, railbirds, reedbirds, marsh hen, and woodducks begin September 1 and close on November 31 each year.

3. That it shall be lawful to kill grass or upland plovers and doves during the months of August and September of each year.

4. That the season for the killing of wild deer open on October 15 and close on October 25 each year.

5. That the open season for the killing of wild geese, ducks, brants or other web-footed wildfowl—except woodducks—begin on October 1 and close on March 1 on the following year.

Mr. R. T. Johnson called the attention of the delegates, principally farmers, to persons using ferrets in Sussex County, who stated that some fifty ferrets were used both in and out of season by persons living in that county, and the failure of the game warden to prosecute the offenders. The delegates then, by resolution, recommended to the commissioners that a law be drafted requiring the owners of ferrets to have the same registered and pay a registration fee, and in case of failure to so register the owner to be subject to a fine and the ferret to be killed by the authorities.

On motion, the delegates were authorized to submit the above recommendations for the proposed changes in the game laws to the commission on the following day.

On January 5 the delegates appeared before the commission at the statehouse. The meeting was called to order by President Piper of the commission, who briefly stated the object of the call by the sportsmen of the state; also that every county in the state was represented by at least three delegates.

The secretary of the commission, Mr. Frothingham, suggested that all recommendations to the proposed fish and game laws, suggested in the convention of the previous day, be read by Mr. Stout, the secretary.

At the conclusion of the reading of said recommendations, which were heartily approved by the delegates as well as the commissioners, the convention adjourned, the members being convinced that the passage of the proposed bill by the Legislature of the state would give general satisfaction and increase interest on the part of the devotees of the rod and gun.

THE PROPOSED INDIANA GAME LAW

FAIR OAKS, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I saw in a former issue of the AMERICAN FIELD an article written by Mr. Hyatt L. Frost, of Connersville, Ind. Regarding our game law, I can say for one of the few true sportsmen of our state, that we need protection. I live in a great prairie chicken country if we had laws to properly protect our game. During the months of July and August, 1894, our birds were killed and shipped to Chicago markets by local hunters, or game-hogs, as I call them. Such hunters live in small villages, near by, and do nothing but hunt and trap as long as there is a bird to be found. I have been trying to educate the so-called sportsmen up to a higher aim than slaughter, but I have failed, as the slaughter goes on. It is hard to prosecute without having authority backed by law. It only gets your would-be neighbors down on you and I do not care to have the natives clamoring for my scalp.

However, if there was a game warden for each county where game is to be found, and I was such an officer, I would arrest my brother, if need be, and bring him to justice. We can have no protection for the fast-disappearing prairie chickens unless we have a state game warden with a salary sufficient to warrant him in giving his whole time to his duties and have the authority to arrest his man when found violating the game law. To find a man shooting illegally, then be compelled to go and hunt up some country justice, swear out a warrant, it gives the violator time to be twenty miles from the place where you saw him commit the crime, hence you have all your trouble for nothing.

I went so far as to write Governor Matthews asking him what could be done, and I inclose herewith his reply so that the AMERICAN FIELD and others may see whether we have a game law sufficient to protect our game. I think if our sportsmen were to give this matter attention there might be a law framed to stop illegal shooting. They shall have my money and support to this end. Governor Matthews' reply was as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

MR. J. G. LIGGET, Fair Oaks, Ind.

Dear Sir:—In reply to yours of 7th inst., will say that we have no such official as game warden, either for the state or Jasper County. I know of no way that the destruction of chickens and game in your county can be suppressed save by the vigorous enforcement of the game laws of the state. It certainly is the privilege, as well as the duty, of citizens to give this their serious consideration. It is to be regretted that in so many counties and localities citizens permit outsiders to come among them and destroy their game and willfully violate our laws. If in no other way, the farmers could associate themselves together to prevent this, and a few vigorous prosecutions of offenders would stop it.

Very truly yours,

CLAUDE MATTHEWS.

J. G. LIGGET.

THE GAME LAWS OF PENNSYLVANIA

EASTON, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I am glad to know that attempts will be made to influence the Legislature of this state to make some changes in the game laws. I am circulating a petition in which I have tried to embody the following ideas:

First—That the nests of game birds must not be molested and the eggs must not be taken from them even for scientific purposes. That the terms "for scientific purposes" be stricken from the laws.

Second—That no game be sold to parties outside of the state of Pennsylvania.

Third—That doves be protected by law, and that they may not be killed before August 15.

I wish that these three items might be added to the petitions already in circulation in different parts of the state. I should like to hear from sportsmen of the Keystone State as to how they are impressed with these propositions. I should be glad to receive suggestions how best these propositions could be brought to the notice of the legislators so as to claim their immediate attention. If the nests of game birds are not more jealously guarded than they have been in the past, and if those who call themselves scientific people are granted the privilege of securing the eggs for almost any pretext whatsoever, the day will soon be at hand when sport in the forest and field can only be had by reading printed accounts of it.

NOTES

A MEETING of the members of the State Forestry Association and the Game and Fish Protective Association of Colorado was recently held at Denver for the purpose of devising a bill to be presented to the state Legislature for the better protection of the game and forests of that state. The bill as proposed by the meeting provides that a commissioner be appointed who shall have charge of the entire game and forestry interests of the state. The commissioner is to be assisted by forest wardens and deputy wardens and the state is to be divided into four forestry districts, embracing the mountain region. The idea is to have the game and forestry interests kept separate from the fish commission, the work of which at present consists largely of propagation and distribution, and with the increase in the amount of water in the streams as a result of the increase in the forests at the headwaters, this branch will be benefited. By combining the game and forestry interests it is thought that an additional interest will be taken in the matter by sportsmen as well as the general public. A committee consisting of Messrs. Pardee, France, Williams, Grimes, Bradbury and Parsons was appointed to draw up a new bill embracing the features as agreed upon and report the same at an adjourned meeting to be called by the chairman.

MR. PARK DAVIS of Sioux Falls, S. D., has drafted a new law for the protection of game and fish in his state which he will soon present to the Legislature and urge its passage. The bill changes the open season on prairie chickens from September 1 to August 15 and imposes a severe penalty upon those who slaughter game for markets, outside of the state. This latter clause is a desirable one, for thousands of prairie chickens are killed in the Dakotas every year by market-hunters, for Eastern markets and often those markets are so flooded with birds that hundreds of them go to waste. Mr. Geo. W. Abbott, a resident of South Dakota, who but recently returned home from Boston, said to a reporter that while in Boston he was told by a member of the firm of Wm. Reed & Sons, one of the largest gun houses in the United States, that last Fall prairie chickens from Dakota were heaped onto the Boston market in such quantities that the market could not absorb them and the game simply spoiled.

OVER fifty delegates, representing all parts of the upper peninsula of Michigan, met at Marquette, Mich., on January 10, and organized the Upper Peninsula Game and Fish Protective Association. Mr. N. M. Kaufman, of Marquette, was chosen presidest of the association, and George A. Newett, of Ishpeming, secretary. Some of the amendments to the game law suggested are to make the deer season the same all over the state and from October 15 to November 15; to prohibit the shipment of deer unless accompanied by the owner and then only one carcass to each first-class ticket. This provision is taken from the New York law and is relied on to cut off the market-hunter. It is also proposed to make the penalty $100 fine or sixty days in jail for any violation of the law, one-half the fine to go to the informer and the other half to the county.

THE Indians from the Warm Spring agency have been creating such widespread devastation among the deer in the Cascade Mountains, that a petition has been circulated and numerously signed asking the Legislature of Oregon to take the necessary steps to cause Indian hunters to confine their hunting to their own territory. An Indian camp was recently discovered in the mountains east of Eugene where thousands of doe and fawn skins were being dried. Mr. T. C. Baker of Benton County, Ore., who drew up and circulated the petition, says if the terrible and unwarranted slaughter is not arrested, it will soon end in the extermination of Oregon's finest game species.

MR. T. M. GILMORE and Dr. Seymour, of Louisville, Ky., recently spent a week or ten days at Redfoot Lake, Tenn., shooting ducks. That they had the finest of shooting and met with good success is evidenced from the fact that they sent home a good many birds, besides bringing a large number with them on their return. Their shooting was mainly on mallards, and if the game laws of the land were what they should be, this once famous resort for wild fowl would again become the sportsman's paradise for goose and duck shooting.

THE Outagamie Fish and Game Protective Association was organized at Appleton, Wis., on January 3. Nearly forty members enrolled their names on the night of the organization and as many more are expected to join at once. The officers of the association for the ensuing year are: President, G. F. Peabody; vice-president, H. D. Fox; secretary, Sam J. Ryan; treasurer, H. G. Freeman. Directors, C. H. Bates, Geo. M. Miller, Dr. W. L. Conkey and Jas. E. McCabe.

DEPUTY GAME WARDEN FULLERTON, of Duluth, Minn., recently captured five moose heads in one lot that had been sent to a taxidermist for mounting. He believes the moose were killed in Minnesota, and if he succeeds in proving this those heads will come rather high to the ones who did the killing. These, with two others that he has taken, make seven heads in all that he has obtained very recently. Somebody in Minnesota is evidently doing some illegal moose killing.

A DEALER in game at Milwaukee was recently prosecuted for offering game for sale out of season, the prosecutor testifying that he had bought game of the defendant when it was illegal to have it on sale; but because th prosecution failed to establish the fact that the defendant was proprietor of the store where the game was sold, the judge who tried the case acquitted him. Milwaukee sportsmen should see that that judge is not reelected.

A MEMBER of the Pontiac (Mich.) Shooting Club suggests that the game laws of his state be changed so as to do away with duck shooting in the Spring; that the open season on woodcocks and other game birds should begin on October 1; that non-residents pay a license of $25 for hunting in the state, and that no hunter be allowed to kill more than six deer in any one season.

AN ejectment suit has been brought by the Spring Lake Hunting and Fishing Club of Pekin, Ill., against Henry and William Schwartz, Edward and Harry Bailey, Henry Clay, Wesley Wiemers and A. L. Champion, to recover possession of certain lands claimed by the club and to which the gentlemen above mentioned also lay claim.

A DISPATCH from Waukegan, Ill., states that Mr. G. L. Stewart has been appointed receiver for the Mineola Club of Chicago, a club composed of prominent Board of Trade men which owns a club house and grounds at Fox Lake valued at $30,000. Internal dissensons are said to be the cause for this action. The property will now be sold and the affairs of the club settled up.

As a whole, quail shooting has not been up to the average here this season. Snipe hunters are having pretty good sport. The birds are quite plentiful and in good condition. Ducks, as usual, are to be seen in great flocks almost everywhere, and bags of fifty and sixty are looked upon only as a fair day's sport.

San Francisco, Cal. B. B.

AT a recent meeting of the county board of Washburn County, Wis., a resolution was passed to appoint a committee to go before the state Legislature and ask the repeal of all state game and fish laws. It was a foolish thing to do, but it would be still more foolish for the Legislature to pay any attention to such a request.

IN Elk County, Pa., is a game preserve of about 700 acres which is inclosed with a high board fence. Six years ago ten deer were put into this preserve, and now the herd numbers about eighty head in addition to what have been killed off each year by the owners of the preserve and their guests.

A BILL has been introduced in the House of the Michigan Legislature making the open season for deer in the upper peninsula from October 25 to November 25, and requiring a license fee of $25 from non-resident and 50 cents from resident deer hunters, the licenses to be issued by county clerks.

THE membership roster of the famous Jekyl Island Club, Brunswick, Ga., has recently added the name of Mr. George J. Gould, the New York millionaire. It is said that genial gentleman and sportsman will pass a part of the Winter at the club house, with his family.

THE sportsmen of Omaha, Neb., are also alive on the subject of game protection, and, as evidenced at a meeting recently held at Parmelee's gun store, are going to see that better laws for the preservation of the game of their state are enacted.

GAME AND FISH WARDEN RILEY of Newark, N. J., has been making it rather unpleasant for marketmen in his city who continued to sell game after it became illegal to do so. He had three men fined $40 each, one $60 and one $20.

IT is said that during the past ten years the state of Maine has spent over $127,000 in the restoration, encouragement and protection of her fish and game.

A FISHING and outing club was recently organized in the tenth ward in Cincinnati, the membership the first night numbering forty.

1895 Outlook

Straws show which way the wind blows and the number of large orders already placed for sundries indicates that the production of wheels next year will be fully as large as anticipated by the most sanguine. Cushman & Denison, who make oilers for the leading manufacturers and jobbers, are very much rushed on their 1895 orders and will make a larger stock than ever before. The "Perfect" Pocket Oiler is being made even better than at present. In spite of the reduced price of wheels and the consequent tendency to use cheaper material, the "Perfect" Oiler will be used with almost all the really high-grade wheels. They will also make large quantities of medium grade oilers as well as oiler holders and pump holders.

BRUNSWICK FUR CLUB'S WINTER MEET

(Special Report.)

The annual meeting of the Brunswick Fur Club was held in the parlors of Hotel Barre, Barre, Mass., on the evening of January 7, Vice-president L. O. Dennison in the chair and a large number of members present.

Mr. Dennison, in opening the meeting, urged the members to increased interest in the trials, spoke of the necessity of revising the running rules, and congratulated the club on the large attendance at the present meet.

The reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were read and accepted. The latter showed the club to be in excellent condition financially, with a balance of $225 in the treasury.

The election of officers for 1895 resulted as follows: President, Dr. A. C. Heffenger, Portsmouth, N. H.; vice-presidents, L. O. Dennison, Waltham, Mass., O. F. Joslin, Oxford, Mass., H. J. Given, Brunswick, Me.; master of hounds, R. D. Perry, Portland, Me.; secretary, Bradford S. Turpin, Roxbury, Mass.; treasurer, W. B. Stone, Waltham, Mass.; executive committee, A. B. F. Kinney of Worcester, Mass., R. Seely of Portsmouth, N. H., A. McDonald of Rockland, Me., and L. E. Conant of Waltham, Mass.

The following gentlemen were elected to active membership: Hon. J. R. Thayer, Worcester, Mass.; Pitt F. Holden, Charlestown, Mass.; Geo. E. Carr, Hollliston, Mass.; Marshall Parks, Bradford, N. H.; Geo. B. Appleby, Oxford, Mass.; Wm. H. Perkins, Ware, Mass.

The honorary members elected were W. S. and A. K. Walker of Point Leavell, Ky., F. M. Whipple of Pasedena, Cal., and Dr W. Miller of Lexington, Ky.

Dr. A. C. Heffenger, R. D. Perry and Bradford S. Turpin were appointed a committee to revise the running rules and constitution.

Vice-president Dennison then called upon a number of gentlemen for speeches. Hon. J. R. Thayer, president of the Worcester Fur Company, made a witty address and wound up by inviting all who were present to take part in the annual snow hunt of the Worcester company, to be held on the Purgatory grounds in Sutton on January 23.

Mr. W. S. Walker was then introduced and was listened to with close attention. He spoke of the different hunting conditions which governed the sport in Kentucky and New England, and stated that foxes were so scarce in his state that if shooting were practised there soon would be no foxes to hunt. In breeding his hounds the first quality sought is endurance and then speed. He said he hunts from thirty to fifty hounds in a pack and does not average more than one catch in thirty starts, more foxes being caught in February and March than at any other time of the year. Most of the hunting is done at night as the foxes do not lead off so far then as they do in the day. In conclusion Mr. Walker expressed his pleasure at being present with the Brunswick Fur Club, and the hearty applause which greeted him showed that the pleasure was mutual.

A. B. F. Kinney spoke briefly of his experience at the National Fox-Hunters' Association's meet and especially of the courtesy which he received and which made his trip so pleasant.

At a late hour the meeting was adjourned to Wednesday evening. All soon turned in and were quickly lulled to slumber by "Cap's" melodious carols.

TUESDAY

When the horn sounded before daybreak a thick fog covered the country and the steady drip, drip, from the eaves showed that the snow was still melting. The sky was covered with heavy clouds and a light breeze blew from the northwest. The thermometer marked 45° and everything was favorable for a good day's sport. Breakfast was served at six o'clock, but it was an hour later before a long open sleigh and a nondescript barge, each drawn by three stout horses and filled to repletion with eager hounds and enthusiastic hunters, left the hotel. The snow had melted rapidly during the night and great patches of bare ground showed themselves on the open fields and hills, while in the woods the snow still was deep and covered with a crust which was strong enough to bear a fox but would not sustain a hound. The hunters were carried a couple of miles from the village on the Hamilton road. The party that made the trip in the sleigh cast off Rock, Tempest, Pepper, Diamond K, Joe Carr, Towser, Flirt, Zack, Duke, Sunmaid, Rattler and Sanc in a strip of pines south of the road. The barge party went half a mile further north and then loosed Duff, Thayer's Dick, Ben, Jack and Backtrack Dime in an open country bounded by woods. Bonnie and Dan meantime were thrown off in thick pines further west. All the hounds were anxious to hunt and lost no time in seeking a fresh track. They covered their ground well but it was some time before a drag was found. Dan, Ben, Jack and their mates were the first to find a trail and they carefully picked out the cold track through a strip of woods to a thick swamp. Here rabbits were plentiful and some of the youngsters could not resist the temptation to drive the game at hand instead of seeking the fox which was far away. They made such a racket [illegible] pack, Rock, Joe Carr and others, harked [illegible] soon both packs were together. The old [illegible] were wasted no time with the hares, but led [illegible] fox tracks, which gradually became warmer, [illegible] Williamsville they carried it along at racing speed [illegible] beyond the village, in a thick covert, they jumped the game and the chase was on. The fox was a racer. Someone said he lived in Canada and was bound for his home; however that may be, certain it is that he led off to the north and with scarcely a turn made for "thousand-acre swamp," an almost impenetrable covert five miles long. Here he made one or two turns and again started northward, running the length of the swamp, the hounds meantime never giving him an instant of rest and driving like mad. The music was a magnet which drew all fox-hunters within hearing, and soon all the runways were lined with sportsmen and, had the fox come back, he would surely have nad a warm reception. But he did not return, and a few of the more enthusiastic hunters who followed the chase to Phillipston, eight miles from Barre, reported that the fox was still leading the pack to the north. Some reported that the first fox was driven to earth and a second jumped which continued to draw the hounds in the same direction. It was dusk before the last hunters returned to headquarters well tired out and white with the snow which had begun to fall late in the afternoon.

While the main pack was trailing to the north, a fox was thrown out of some thick pine cover. He crossed the open fields in the rear of some of the hunters without attracting their attention, but his track was discovered and a vain attempt was made to drive him with the aid of Pepper and Diamond K; but these puppies lacked experience and their efforts were useless. Not long after a single hound was seen to drive another fox through the Williamsville valley, but no one was lucky enough to be near enough to recognize the hound. Bonnie, in the meantime, was reported to have driven a fox southward, but there were no hunters there and he had the sport to himself; he did not return to the hotel till Tuesday morning.

While all this was going on a small party of sportsmen with Billy, Peter, Gyp, Rover and Stone's Dick had set out from the hotel on foot. They followed the Petersham road and were rewarded with the best sport of the day. Hardly had they gone a mile from headquarters when the hounds gave tongue in covert and rapidly picked out the cold trail for a mile, when success rewarded their efforts and the fox was jumped. The trailing conditions were perfect, the hounds packed well, there was not enough wind to prevent the hunters from hearing every bit of the music, and to crown it all the fox played beautifully. For two hours he dodged the hounds, now in covert and now in the open. Each of the party saw him repeatedly and was on tiptoe with excitement, constantly expecting an opportunity to shoot and as often being disappointed. For two hours this sport continued. Then the fox led away to the South and for a few minutes was out of hearing. But back he came, and while amusing himself by running a wall came within gunshot of L. Smith. As bad luck would have it a tree most inconveniently separated Mr. Smith from the game. However, he did the best he could to shoot around the corner, but the attempt was unsuccessful and Reynard led away to a neighboring swamp. Here the crust bothered the hounds and for some time the driving was not as sharp as it had been, but after a time the pack was again on running terms with the quarry and till late in the afternoon the hounds pressed him hard. For seven hours the chase continued, and then the fox went to earth and put an end to the best hunt of the day.

It was a jolly crowd that filled the hotel parlors in the evening and made the house ring with lively choruses under the lead of Messers. Dennison, Snow and R. D. Perry.

WEDNESDAY

Another perfect hunting day. When we turned out at six o'clock the ground was evenly covered with two inches of new snow, there was no breeze, heavy clouds hid the sky, and a better day for sport could not have been made to order. It was with high hopes of a great hunt that the sportsmen left the hotel at seven o'clock, and they were not disappointed.

A small party with Big Steve, Alice, Logan and Fly went in a barge to the grounds that were hunted yesterday. The rest of the hunters started toward the hills east of the village, some on foot and some in sleighs. Fox tracks were abundant, and as fast as promising trails were discovered the hounds were laid on in small detachments. This method of hunting proved to be a great success, and before we had been absent from the hotel half an hour foxes were running in all directions pursued by packs of from two to a dozen hounds. The air was full of music and the excitement was at fever heat, but it is quite impossible to give a connected account of the day's sport. At some moments as many as five distinct packs could be heard, and many foxes were seen which were thrown out of the coverts and escaped without being pursued by any of the hounds. Never within the recollection of the writer has the club hunted in a region so full of game. From one strip of woods four foxes were driven by the hounds and two others were seen to sneak away unpursued. There were so many foxes that the hounds were constantly shifting from one to another, and it is impossible to tell how many foxes were started during the day. A moderate estimate of the number seen was fifteen, and many thought that as many as twenty-five were jumped in the course of the hunt.

With hounds in full cry running here, there and everywhere, and with stray foxes sneaking from one cover to another, a hunter needed more than one pair of eyes to see all that transpired. One sportsman, gun in hand and nerves strung to the highest tension, kept his mind so entirely concentrated on what was going on in front of him [illegible] two foxes that trotted sedately [illegible] within easy gunshot. It was [illegible] a hunter on which side of a wall [illegible] screened from the game, and on [illegible] he found himself at the critical [illegible] side of the fence. The sportsman [illegible] see [illegible] during the day was the exception [illegible]. Mr. Luther saw four foxes in a short time. Mr. Dennison, without leaving his stand, saw three and succeeded in getting a shot at one of them; he knocked him down with the first barrel but failed to kill. Mr. Carr also saw three. One of them peered at him between the rails of a fence close at hand, but dodged back before the hunter could shoot and then escaped altogether, as Mr. Carr tripped and fell in a snowdrift before he could get into a position to shoot. Another gentleman remarked that he had not seen a fox during the day, but that a fox had seen him which was the next thing to it though not so satisfactory as he lost a good shot. Mr. Smith, who got a shot in Tuesday's hunt, was so lucky as to have another chance, but failed to score with a long shot. Capt. Berry, too, failed to add a tally to his score, though he shot both barrels at a fox which very nearly ran over him. Mr. Jones tried his luck with a shotgun but did not bring home a pelt for his trouble, and Mr. Stone had the same experience. Mr. McGregor, after narrowly escaping a collision with a running fox, kept better watch and killed the first fox of the day at 8:40. A second fox was killed by a local hunter, C. B. Caldwell of Coldbrook, later in the day ahead of the Brunswick trials winner Logan. These were the only foxes brought to bag in this great day's sport, but a number of shots were fired which are not recorded here, as those who made the shots forgot to mention the matter when they returned to headquarters at night.

From early morning till after sunset the driving was continuous. Of course many of the hounds were thrown out or quit, but some were running after dark. Among these were Duff and Fly; the former came to the horn, but the latter refused to obey and was away all night. All present were enthusiastic over the day's fun, and many counted it as the best hunt in which they had ever taken part.

In the evening the adjourned meeting of the club was called to order in the hotel parlors at 8:30 p. m. President Heffenger presided. In opening the meeting he said:

"It is with a sense of deep appreciation that I have to thank you for the third time electing me to the presidency of the Brunswick Fur Club. In accepting the position I feel sure that such an honor must carry with it the confidence and esteem of those who have conferred it and be an earnest of their belief that in my hands the affairs of the club will be conducted with that vigor and integrity which have placed the Brunswick Fur Club in its enviable position in the hunting world and enabled it to maintain the high standard of its trials.

"Our Winter meets are most enjoyable and perpetuate the characteristic manner of hunting the fox so dear to the heart of the New England hunter, but it is in the trials that the club's vital spark exists and it is through them that we hold a unique position among the hunting clubs of the country. It is in these trials that we truly test the merits of our hounds, and every effort should be made to have them judiciously conducted. In this matter the club needs the help of every member, and each one should feel that it is his duty to attend and do all in his power to make them a brilliant success. As the majority of our members live in Maine it is proper that one of the yearly meets should be held in that state, and, as the snows there are too deep as a rule for the annual January meet, I would suggest that that meet be held in Massachusetts and that the trials be held in Maine, and occasionally in New Hampshire as half-way ground."

President Heffenger withdrew from the committee on the revision of the constitution and by-laws, and appointed Mr. Dennison in his place.

It was voted that the Secretary should request the A. K. C. to appoint a committee from the B. F. C. to examine foxhound pedigrees offered for registration, and Messrs. Heffenberger, Kinney and Perry were suggested as that committee. Mr. O. F. Joslin was chosen delegate to the A. K. C.

It was voted to make an exhibit of the club's foxhounds at the show of the New England Kennel Club in Boston in April.

The week of October 28 was selected for the trials, and R. D. Perry, N. Q. Pope, R. Seely, H. J. Given and A. McDonald were appointed a committee to select grounds. Bradford S. Turpin, Stephen Decatur and S. Knight Jr. were appointed a committee to secure three or more judges. A. B. F. Kinney, H. A. P. Smith and A. G. Hall were made the committee on membership. Adjourned.

THURSDAY

The club having enjoyed the best of hunting weather for two days could hardly expect a continuation of such favorable conditions throughout a week in midwinter, and it was more in disappointment than surprise that the early risers found that a complete change had taken place during the night. The sky was covered with heavy black clouds that foretold the coming storm. The wind was rising rapidly and blew straight from the northeast, laden with that pecularly disagreeable chill which makes one shiver and shake even when the thermometer does not fall below 30°. The prospect for sport was bad, but nevertheless the hunters were early astir. There were no laggards, and by seven o'clock breakfast was finished and the line of men and hounds was on the way to the hunting grounds north and east of the village. As the wind was already blowing half a gale and it would be almost impossible to hear a hound a quarter of a mile to leeward the hunters went out in small detachments by different roads, hoping that some would be fortunate enough to be in the hunt, though the majority might be thrown out and unable to locate the hounds. Before the sportsmen were a mile from the village the storm began—a fine snow that found its way into every crevice of the hunting coats, that sifted down one's neck and filled one's pockets, began to fall and enveloped everything as in a fog. The wind, which was constantly rising, carried it before the gale with such fierceness that it was impossible to look to windward. By the time the hunting grounds were reached the drifting snow had filled all the tracks which were in the open, and it was some time before any promising drags were discovered. Search in the swamps and pines where there was but little snow on the crust was rewarded, and small detachments of hounds were cast off in different places. Ben, Jack and Sanc were laid on a fresh track, and after some pretty trailing were able to jump their game and drive it at a lively clip far into the distance. Clinker and Trailer also started a fox in the same region; and Dick Turpin, not far away, soon added his voice and a third fox to the sport. Steve and Duke were cast off further east but did not make a start. The three foxes just mentioned were all in the vicinity of Sherman Hill, and near that well-known hunting ground most of the hunters were assembled. The game was unwilling to take to the open, and most of the running was made in the heavy pines where the crust supported the foxes and let the hounds through. Hunting in a gale of wind is usually unsatisfactory work. and the sport to-day was no exception. Standing in the shelter of some huge bowlder, or in the lee of a giant pine, a hunter would occasionally hear the cry of a hound. Then for a few minutes the discomforts of the storm would be forgotten. Every sense would be alert to catch a glimpse of the fleeing game. In a few moments the hounds would go out of hearing, and again the hunter would control his impatience as best he could, constantly listening for the hounds. A number of good chances to shoot were lost because the hounds could not be heard in the gale and the quarry passed the sportsman entirely unseen or unnoticed till too late. Most of the hunters were in poor luck. Hearing a hound only for a moment every hour or two was disheartening, and it was not long before most of the party decided that home and a hot dinner were preferable to hunger and the lee side of a pine tree. Consequently they headed for the hospitable roof of the hotel and for the first time during the meet there was a large attendance at dinner.

C. H. Howe, however, played in great luck. He had been on the grounds but a short time when Dick Turpin drove a fox to his gun and he promptly brought it to bag. Hardly had this been accomplished when Clinker brought a second fox to him, but he did not secure a shot. Almost any hunter would have been satisfied with this record on such a day, but Mr. Howe belongs to the old guard; he never surrenders to anything but darkness, so he kept on, and in the afternoon had the great good fortune to capture his second pelt for the day, and again Dick was the driving hound.

While this hunt was progressing at Sherman Hill Sport, Major, Rover, Dick, Gyp and Peter were cast off west of the village. They immediately trailed into a swamp and jumped their fox. He disliked to take to the open and made several turns in the coverts. There were a number of hunters in the party and soon every promising runway was guarded. The fox in making a turn came up behind W. B. Stone and winded the hunter. Instantly he turned sharply away and ran onto that veteran sportsman Paul Wheeler. The underbrush was thick and the hunter only crippled the fox. Major was not far behind and soon overtook the game. Instantly Reynard grabbed the hound by the throat and things began to look a little hazy for Major. Mr. Wheeler hurried as fast as the bushes would permit to the aid of his favorite hound, and without hesitation seized the fox by one of its legs. Reynard then turned his attention from the hound to its master, and getting a good hold on Mr. Wheeler's hand held on like a bulldog. It was no easy matter to break his hold, and before it was accomplished the hunter's fingers were bitten through and through. Finally, however, the fox was dispatched and the party returned to the hotel, where Dr. Heffenger, the president, dressed the wound. The walk back to headquarters was a particularly disagreeable one. The snow had turned to hail, and driven before the gale cut like a sandblast. The afternoon was passed in the hotel office before a roaring open fire, and some of the most wonderful stories in the history of fox-hunting were spun to an admiring, if unbelieving, audience.

In the evening W. B. Stone presented to Mr. Wheeler the pool which had been made up for the man who killed the first fox. The recipient received the prize in a short speech which put his audience in good humor and excited their applause. Mr. McGregor, who shot a fox on Wednesday, was not in the pool, having been absent when it was made up. The remainder of the evening was passed in singing and story telling. Then to bed to be ready for the last day of the meet.

FRIDAY

There was a change in the weather during the night. The thermometer rose rapidly, the snow turned to rain, froze wherever it fell, and at sunrise everything was covered with a coating of ice. A fog too thick to be cut with an ordinary knife shrouded the country in gloom, and rain threatened to fall every moment. The chances for sport seemed slight. A number of sportsmen and hounds started for home on the early trains, many others took sleighs and scoured the country for lost hounds, and consequently the party which started for the hunting grounds was not as large as usual. Contrary to expectations the sport which they enjoyed was of the best, and there were no prettier runs during the meet than occurred in the course of the day.

The hounds were cast off west of the village at about half-past seven. Dick Turpin was put down in a long swamp, while Clinker and Ben Butler II were cast off further north. Gyp, Billy and Bonnie were loosed in another section of the grounds, and Sport, Jack and Major nearer the village. The fog was so thick that it was impossible to see more than a few yards, and picking out runways in an unfamiliar country under these conditions was no easy task. Most of the hunters stayed in the roads and trusted to luck to bring them a fox.

Hardly had Dick disappeared in the fog before he cried a fox and jumped it almost immediately. About the same time Ben Butler started another; and not long after Jack, Sport and Major found a fresh track which they trailed to a start. With three foxes running the air was full of music in all directions. The other hounds harked to those that were driving, and the sport was fast and furious for hours. The foxes were all in the same section, and no sooner did the cry of one pack grow dim in the distance than others were heard approaching; and this kept all the hunters on their tip toes in expectation of a shot.

Charlie Howe was the first to score. He shot a fox ahead of Dick Turpin, and thus made a record of three in two days. Half an hour later E. T. Whittaker bagged the second fox of the day, driven by Dick and Ben Butler. A little later Alvin Fisher knocked over one ahead of Sport and Major. Meantime another fox had been started and was making a beautiful run, driven by Clinker, Gyp, Bonnie and Ben Butler. This fox was a small one, but his endurance was great and nothing could frighten him enough to drive him into the ground. Back and forth over the hills and through the valleys he led the pack; he never seemed to be in a hurry, and had the most remarkable luck in escaping the hunters. The ground fairly swarmed with sportsmen, but for an hour or two no one secured a shot. Then he came upon W. B. Stone, who had been patiently awaiting him on the crest of a hill. The fox came up to leeward, and Mr. Stone, fearing the game would scent him, fired on the instant. The first barrel missed him and the second was no more successful. The fox was confused by the racket and became undecided which way to go. The hunter gave him a third barrel, then a fourth, and finally a fifth. When the smoke of the engagement had drifted away the fox was discovered skipping over the fields apparently as fresh and unharmed as in the early morning. Mr. Stone later in the day explained that he did not want to carry home his ammunition and did not wish to spoil a good run by killing the fox, so he compromised the matter. At the hotel in the evening, however, it was generally conceded that he would have killed the fox had his ammunition held out. The chase continued till twelve o'clock, and just on the stroke of noon J. W. Jones brought this bold runner to bag. This was one of the most exciting runs of the week. The fox played well, never carried the pack out of hearing, and resolutely refused to go to earth. Just as this run was at an end another fox was jumped by some hounds further south; he escaped injury, however, and led those who tried to get into the hunt a merry chase over the hills and far away.

In the evening the adjourned meeting of the club was called to order by Vice-president Dennison. The executive committee of 1894, to whom was referred the protest entered by J. M. White, owner of Logan, regarding the awards in the trailing class at the 1894 field trials, reported: "That the committee have carefully investigated all the evidence in the case and find that Logan led the chase much of the time, and under the field trial rules—which appear to have been misunderstood by the judges—should have had a place among the winners in the trailing class."

The following gentlemen were elected to honorary membership of the club: H. F. Maxwell, East Sharon, Mass ; Lemuel Smith, Weston, Mass.; Chas. Gragg, Bedford, Mass.; Geo. M. Brooks, Concord, Mass.; Q. A. Faunce and A. A. Lincoln, Wollaston, Mass. The meeting then adjourned and the Winter meet was at an end.

It was without doubt the most successful occasion of the kind in the history of the club. The attendance of members and guests was large, the pack of hounds in number and quality has never been equaled at a New England fox-hunt, and the weather, except on Wednesday, was all that could be desired. Then, too, the country proved to be a splendid one to hunt. There are many old pastures and large bald hills, and here and there swamps and strips of woodland. The country is rolling but the hills are not so high that they cannot easily be surmounted, and it would be difficult to find a region better fitted for the sport. Foxes were very abundant and there was no difficulty experienced in making a start at any time. Hotel Barre, where the club made its headquarters, took excellent care of the party. An early breakfast and a late dinner were provided for the hunters, Mr. Bancroft, the hotel proprietor, did everything possible for our comfort, and his kindness and courtesy added not a little to the success and pleasure of the meet. In short the combination of an excellent hotel, a beautiful country abounding in game, and splendid hunting weather left little to be desired.

Mr. W. S. Walker of Kentucky, whose name is a familiar one to fox-hunters everywhere, was present at the meet and received a cordial welcome from the club. All hope to have the pleasure of greeting him at future hunts and trials, and that other western and southern fox-hunters will follow his example and become better acquainted with eastern members of the brotherhood. Mr. Walker expressed himself as pleased with his visit and stated that he saw as pretty driving on Wednesday as he had witnessed for many a day. He went to Worcester, Mass., on Friday evening as the guest of Mr. A. B. F. Kinney, having made a host of friends among the New England hunters. The Brunswick Fur Club was much concerned over the loss of Mr. Walker's favorite hound, Joe Carr; he was in Tuesday's hunt and had not been found by Friday evening. Every effort to discover his whereabouts was being made, and before this is in print it is to be hoped that he will have rejoined his master.

The sportsmen present at the meet were Dr. A. C. Heffenger and W. A. Bragdon, Portsmouth, N. H.; George K. Turner, Springfield, Mass.; A. B. F. Kinney, C. A. Weaver, Guy C. Whidden, O. M. Ball, Frank Stone, W. R. Dean, E. T. Whittaker, W. S. Perry, J. R. Thayer, E. S. Knowles, C. H. Howe and J. A. Smith, Worcester, Mass.; E. M. Snow, F. G. Andrews and H. J. Baird, Auburndale, Mass.; J. M. Jones, Needham, Mass ; C. M. Griffin, Westford, Mass.; P. F. Holden and R. B. Holden, Boston, Mass.; Bradford S. Turpin, Roxbury, Mass.

The pack consisted of the following hounds: White Oak Hill Kennel's Duke, Zack, Flirt and Sunmaid; W. B. Stone's Rover and Dick; C. L. Wellington's Gyp; L. E. Conant's Bonnie and Dan; O. F. Joslin's Juliette; R. D. Perry's Clinker and Trailer; Geo. P. Berry's Fannie; J. R. Thayer's Duff and Dick; W. R. Dean's Dime; John M. White's Diamond K, Pepper, Logan and Fly; W. H. Fish and Fishing

THE BIENNIAL REPORT OF THE STATE BOARD OF FISH COMMISSIONERS OF CALIFORNIA

The California Fish Commission—President, Joseph D. Redding, San Francisco; secretary, William C. Murdoch, San Francisco, and Mr. Hugh L. Macnell, Los Angeles—in its thirteenth biennial report, covering its work from September 1, 1892, to September 1, 1894, shows remarkable progress has been made in fish culture and fish protection, in consideration of the magnitude of the work involved in the extent of territory covered, and the inadequacy of the means appropriated for the use of the commission as compared to the appropriations of smaller states.

The report is embodied in a pamphlet of nearly 150 pages, having a full page picture of the state hatchery at Sisson as a frontispiece, and embellished with portraits of different fishes which are natives of or have been propagated in Californian waters. Some very interesting statistics are given. In the matters of the importance of the fishing industry, and of comparative appropriations, the report says:

Of the states of the Union California ranks sixth in fisheries, with products valued at $3,044,731, as against Massachusetts, which takes first rank with products valued at $7,531,194. As showing the comparative inadequacy of our appropriation for all the work of the commission, it should be borne in mind that California has an area of 158,360 square miles and is the largest state in the Union, except Texas. Massachusetts has an area of 8,315 square miles and appropriates $15,700 per annum. California, with a dozen times the area to protect, appropriates $17,500. With this amount at its disposal the commission feels that it can protect the food fish of the state. For other purposes, however, the amount is wholly inadequate. . . . . With the exception of Virginia, all of the states which outrank California in value of fish products also outrank her in appropriations per square mile of land and water area. It will be noticed that many states whose products have less value, or, comparatively speaking, no value at all, take higher rank in that particular. Unfortunately for us, perhaps, we are so situated that we do not get the benefit of the work of other states in the matter of fish propagation, as do many of the states on the Eastern coast. This is particularly true of Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey, and of New Jersey, Delaware, and Pennsylvania, where the work of shad propagation in one state is of great benefit to the adjacent states. Therefore, in making a comparison with the North Atlantic states it would not be unfair to group those states together. Comparisons made upon this basis would be of such a nature as to make us feel ashamed of the insignificant amount we spend upon our fisheries. In area, the states of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware exceed California by only 2,600 square miles, yet those states spend $146,000 per annum in the propagation and preservation of fish and game. Besides this large amount, which they themselves expend, they derive great benefit from the extensive operations of the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries in the propagation of shad, cod, lobster, etc. Thus it will be seen that in many respects a comparison of individual Eastern coast states with California results in a higher rank in appropriations for this state than the actual figures justify. Rhode Island and Delaware are fortunate in being so situated that they derive a benefit from the work of other states, and have, no doubt, come to the conclusion that it is not necessary for them to make appropriations, even in proportion to their size.

Many other comparisons are made, showing that states which have much less apparent need for large appropriations give their State Fish Commissions proportionately larger sums for fish propagation and protection than does California. Tables are given showing that California in 1892 was the sixth state in the value of her fisheries, and that it ranks seventeenth in the amount appropriated per square mile of total area, making a very strong argument in favor of a much larger appropriation from the next Legislature.

An exhaustive review is made of the work [illegible] mission in all directions. During the [illegible] more than twice the number of young fi[illegible] any former commission have been [illegible] planted in the waters of the state.

The great decrease in the total packi[illegible] noted, and the causes are reviewed; and it is shown that through intelligent activity in propagation, since 1892, the industry has shown a gratifying increase, although a much larger demand for salmon has existed in the markets.

The oyster, shad and other fisheries are reviewed, the shad having propagated until fishermen have been compelled to limit the catch to avoid overstocking the markets. The most noteworthy instance, however, of the value of the propagation of game food fishes, cited by the report, is that of the striped bass. In 1879 a lot numbering 100 were liberated. In 1882, a second lot of 350 were planted. None were caught until 1888, when a few netted brought one dollar per pound; but last year they had become so numerous that the markets were supplied at the retail price of eight cents per pound.

Much space is devoted to reviewing the success attained in the various hatcheries and the results of the protection given the fry propagated after liberation in the waters of the state. The commission sorrowfully records the fact that all efforts to find any trace of the 100,000 mascalonge fry, donated by the State Fish Commission of New York, brought to California at the expense of the United States Fish Commission, and liberated in Lake Merced, have proved futile up to the present time, the inference being that from some unknown cause none of the youthful Esox nobilior lived.

During last August, through the efforts of the Visalia Sportsmen's Club and with the assistance of Lieut. Deane, Corporal Moffitt, and Private Sholberg, of the United States Army, Mr. J. S. Johnson, secretary of that club, brought to San Francisco and delivered to the State Fish Commission thirty-six fine specimens of the famous golden trout of Mount Whitney Creek. These were immediately taken to the Sisson Hatchery and placed in a pond, where the commission expects to be able to procure spawn and to propagate these rare fishes the present season. It is to be hoped their efforts may prove entirely successful.

During the past year efforts have been made to propagate the Mongolian pheasant. In the Spring the commission procured sixty-seven birds, which were placed in the aviaries of citizens in various parts of the state, the parties receiving the birds having agreed to liberate upon public grounds all the young ones bred. Reports already received indicate a successful issue to the experiment, it being stated that the birds are doing well and increasing in numbers rapidly.

An interesting and exhaustive paper upon the salmon and trout of the Pacific coast, from the pen of that eminent scientist Dr. David Starr Jordan, President of the Leland Stanford Junior University, and descriptions of the No-Shee trout, the McCloud River trout or rainbow trout of the fish-culturists, and of the Kern River trout conclude the pamphlet and render it valuable as a work for reference. The plates giving portraits of the various species of trout described must prove of special interest to all persons devoted to piscatorial pursuits or to fish-culture, particularly to those "whose lines of life" have not fallen in sections of our country so highly favored in varieties of the Salmo family as is California.

A CHIP OF THE OLD BLOCK

The boys of our country inherit the love of field sports characterizing their fathers, and some of them are coming up fully competent to entertainingly describe their adventures, as will be seen by the accompanying composition, written by a Chicago boy, Master A. E. Manierre, which he entitled:

A PLEASANT EXPERIENCE

The most pleasant experience that I had this Summer was a fishing trip in the Adirondacks.

One evening in July as I was walking around the piazza of the Algonquin Hotel, I noticed a little group talking about something of apparent interest. I joined them and found that they were discussing the luck that they had had that day. One old fellow said that he had caught eleven pike and was going out the next day to try his luck again. Other stories followed until I became excited and decided to go out the next day and try my luck.

I engaged a guide and ordered my breakfast at five o'clock. I think I was never so sleepy as when I was called that morning. I got my breakfast and went down to the boat house, where I found my guide all ready. We trolled all day without getting a strike. My! but it was hot! The day seemed to be gotten up on purpose to roast us alive. I had a sweater on and it was very hot and uncomfortable. It was not a great deal of fun sitting on a hard seat in an Adirondack canoe and afraid to move for fear of upsetting the boat.

We were coming home and I let out my line for a last trial. I waited patiently but no fish. Suddenly my rod was jerked nearly out of my hand. It bent [illegible] The line began to run off the reel like a flash [illegible] it slacked. I began to reel in slowly. How [illegible] There was a loud splash and a large fish jump[illegible] the water with the spoon in his mouth. H[illegible] bite the spoon and try to shake it out! He did not [illegible] ceed, however. I worked him gradually up to the side of the boat within reach of the gaff. The guide struck at him but did not hook him. Away he went with about fifty feet of line. Again I got him up to the side of the boat. He was large he looked, fully as long as the paddle. Gradually I worked him up to the surface when, splash! and I was nearly blinded by the water he flirted into the boat with his tail. After some time I got him up again. The guide struck the sharp iron into him and with a heavy jerk pulled him into the boat. He flopped so that he nearly got out but I sat on him till he was quiet, then I clubbed him. It had taken nearly an hour to land him.

We then returned home, when we found that he weighed fourteen and one-half pounds. I received a good many congratulations on my success, and I was asked by many where I had caught him and if I thought there were many more.

That night I dreamed I was being tried under the water by a court composed of fish. They had decided to drown me. I was being carried off kicking when I awoke and found that I had fallen out of bed.

NOTES

In this issue we give a brief and necessarily incomplete synopsis of the pamphlet embodying the thirteenth biennial report of the State Board of Fish Commissioners of California, a copy of which we have received through the courtesy of State Fish Commissioner Hugh L. Macneil, of Los Angeles. As a practical exponent of the value to the commonwealth of public funds judiciously expended in pisciculture and fish protection, we recommend its perusal to state executives who are economical of appropriations for the use of state fish commissions; notably to the attention of Gov. J. P. Altgeld, of Illinois. In his recent message to the Illinois Legislature, he emphasizes the fact that a sum of money approximting one million dollars has been saved the people of that state by an economical administration of its public institutions. We have little doubt an unprejudiced perusal of this report by the California State Fish Commission would convince Gov. Altgeld that one-tenth, or one-twentieth, of the sum mentioned, properly used by the Illinois Fish Commission, would repay itself fourfold in the course of a few (very few) years; and that the best interests of the people whose servant he is would served by his advocating a policy for the enlargement of the work and consequent usefulness of the Illinois Fish Commission.

Not long since. I was coming down the Baltimore and Ohio with Senator Camden of West Virginia, in his private car, says a correspondent to the Chicago Evening Post, and I noticed an elegant fishing rod suspended from brackets at the side of the car. "That's my pet rod," said the Senator, following my gaze. "I gave fifty dollars for that outfit two years ago, and it is a splendid rod. I would not part with that rod for many times its price. You see, there is no state in the Union where there is finer bass fishing than in my state, and I am very fond of fishing. I have not had time to use that rod since I bought it two years ago, although I have been in and out of these mountains almost constantly." Think of it, lover of angling! One of the millionaires of his state could not find time to go fishing in two years!

At Putnam, Ill., on January 7, Constable George Williams levied upon eighteen barrels of fish belonging to Ed. Thompson, a fisherman. The latter was very much enraged and assaulted the constable, drawing a weapon and firing upon the officer. But Williams had seen the motion and divining the man's intention drew his pistol and got in a shot before the other, from the effects of which Thompson died almost instantly. Thompson was a member of a gang of illegal fishers who have given the game officers much trouble, and he was known to be a desperado; but the constable was held to await the action of the grand jury.

The last noteworthy angling episode which occurred on Cayuga Lake, before the cold weather wrapped its chill drapery about the sport, was the capture at Union Springs of a seventeen-pound mascalonge by Mr. Silsbey, of Seneca Falls. That's an encouraging indication of what ye gentle angler may expect by and by, if law and order are allowed undisputed reign on and about Central New York lakes.

Ithaca, N. Y. M. Chill.

Week before last a New Jersey fisherman at Green Pond, in that state, wrote to the Sunday Call, of Newark, that pickerel were biting briskly; that he had taken through the ice 145 pickerel that week. At Greenwood Lake the fishing was excellent, John Smith, a guide, averaging thirty pickerel per day; some of them weighed well, three going four pounds, four and one-quarter pounds and five and one-quarter pounds, respectively.

The Milwaukee and Shawano Hunting and Fishing Club, of Wisconsin, has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Fred Braum; vice-president, T. P. McGrath; secretary, Wm. Swain; treasurer, A. N. Meyer.

The Fish Commissioners of the various states favored the American Field by mailing reports to the governors of their states immediately after publication.

SOMETHING NEW REGARDING RATTLESNAKES

One of the most remarkable events recently known in natural history occurred at the menagerie in the Lincoln Park, the night of January 9, says the Chicago Tribune.

Last Spring a man named Kuhns, residing in the Everglades, Florida, captured alive a five-foot yellow rattlesnake, a female, and forwarded her to the Lincoln Park Commissioners. She was placed in a cage with anothe large rattler, from the Pacific Coast, three little garter snakes and a lot of mice, the rodents being there as food for the reptiles. The California rattler died last Summer, since which event the lady from Florida has reigned supreme in her prison.

The freak in nature perpetrated by the Crotalus from the Everlades was reported by the chief animal trainer, Cy De Vey, as follows:

"I was awakened early this by one of the subkeepers. He told me something was wrong in the snakes' cage. I was sleepy, but I got up and dressed and hurried over to the cage. I found the big rattler thrashing around the bottom of the den, while beside her lay ten little rattlers from nine to twelve inches long. They were all apparently dead, but they had evidently been born alive and I sent for Prof. Baker in a hurry, for I had never heard of such an occurrence in my life. All well regulated rattlesnakes, you know, lay eggs in the sand, from which the young are hatched after six weeks' incubation."

Prof. Baker, Curator of the Academy of Sciences, related his impressions of the wonderful event thus:

"When I got there I could hardly believe my eyes. I have never seen a case of the kind and I have handled and reared hundreds of rattlesnakes. I have also read many books on reptiles, and nowhere have I seen such a case mentioned. So far as I know the birth of these snakes is a thing entirely new to science. In the first place, I have never seen or even heard of a case where a rattler laid its eggs in captivity. In the second place, though some snakes are ovoviviparous, the rattlesnake is not. It always lays eggs and its young are not hatched for at least six weeks later. I am as much at sea as anybody can be, but shall make it my business to study the matter thoroughly. And I shall send a complete record of the facts in the case to the scientific papers. It happened Assistant Curator O. P. Hay of the Field Museum, who is one of the best reptillians in the country, called on me this morning and I took him to see our wonder. He, like myself, was dumfounded and could offer no explanation. It is probable, of course, that confinement and the change in its method of life have had some influence, but I fail to see how the paradox can be accounted for on that basis alone."

NOTES

At the thirteenth annual meeting of the American Forestry Association resolutions were passed congratulating the public upon the interest manifested in forestry, and pledging the further support of the association to every step made to push the subject; of gratification at the passage of Hon. Thos. C. McRae's bill in the House of Representatives; urging the Senate committee, in whose hands the bill now lies, to report it at an early date, and urging the Senate to take prompt action thereon; recommending legislation to establish courses of instruction in forestry in educational institutions aided with funds from the United States Treasury; and after calling attention to the fact that terrible destruction has resulted during the past year from forest fires, the various states are appealed to, in the existing necessity for more stringent protection from such national calamities, to enact and enforce legislation which will effectually obviate a possibility of such losses of life and property in future years.

An interesting and instructive illustrated lecture, entitled "Days With Our Birds," was recently delivered by Mrs. Kate Tryon, before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Boston, it being the first of a series of weekly talks upon a variety of subjects. Mrs. Tryon made a strong plea for bird life generally, appealing to gardeners and farmers with scientific facts as to the pecuniary value of birds in keeping down insect life destructive to the plants and trees through which the tillers of the soil recompense themselves for their toil. By means of stereopticon pictures, Mrs. Tryon placed before her audience a series of Spring and Summer strolls in New England scenery and among the native birds, and the lecture afforded great enjoyment to those present.

Mr. J. T. Hyde, secretary of the National Horse Show Association, is projecting a cat show, to be held in April at the Madison Square Garden, New York.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST

We shall commence next week a most graphically written series of articles, fully illustrated, descriptive of Alaska and the Pacific Coast, by Hon. A. K. Delaney, who has frequently traversed the entire route. Mr. Delaney is an attorney of national reputation, practising before federal and state courts. His pleadings are noted for their fluency, and he has injected into his articles the same grace and style which have won the closest attention of the courts, and will win that of his readers.

Starting from Chicago he takes the reader with him on his transcontinental ride to the Puget Sound country, thence to Victoria, B. C., and the famous Inland Passage, considered one of the wildest, most broken and rugged regions of North America. A sketch of Vitus Bering, and his discoveries, directed by Peter the Great of Russia, with a resume of the Russian occupation, is here given. Then the reader is taken to Sitka, the site of Fort St. Michael, founded in 1799, to the mining camps of British Columbia, the gold discoveries of Alaska, the Treadwell mine and mill, and to the seal islands; then follow descriptions of Alaska Indians, the Alaskan glaciers, the civil government and the people of Alaska, the coast line steamers, and a hundred and one highly interesting features in connection with Uncle Sam's far north possessions. The illustrations will be direct from photographs, by the halftone process, and the whole will form a most valuable and instructive series for sportsmen and tourists alike.

STORIES ALONG THE ROAD

BY DICK SWIVELER

The "Big 4," so named by our Puget Sound friends—Tucker, McMurchy, Courtney and myself—settled ourselves in the Pullman for a run of four hundred and sixteen miles over that part of the Northern Pacific Railway embraced between Tacoma and Spokane, crossing the Cascade Mountains at an altitude of 8,000 feet, where, amid an illimitable and unbroken wilderness of forests, mountain peaks and deep cañons, Nature exists in all her chaotic forms, where the sibilant wind wildly, weirdly whispers through the soughing treetops. There, amid such scenes and surroundings, the "Big 4" anticipated finding a congeniality.

It was 2 p. m. by the village clock. The train moved with precision from the wharf (it is so called in Tacoma, that hamlet being a seaport), and Mr. Tucker bit off the end of a cigar, rolling the morsel in his cheek, leaned back in his seat and gazed from the window of the now fast moving car with that languor characteristic of those born in the East, particularly in the vicinity of Narragansett Bay.

Mr. Courtney began the finishing touches on his fifth seedless orange, with a remark on the preponderating influences incident to and deduced from chromatic contrasts as applied to music. Mr. Courtney is a singer of rare merit, but selling guns has impaired that sweet voice, that indescribable something necessary to a full basso profundo. However he still clings to his art.

Mr. McMurchy began pointing pencils preparatory to finishing his ode to "The Living Molecular Forces Found in Dynamic Bodies Prior to the Extinction of the Leviathan."

Swiveler busied himself in putting together from the "Big 4" medicine chest a compound that cures anything, from a bald head to an ingrowing nail—a diffusion of roots and herbs—purely vegetable, the secret of which was learned by him during his life among the Seminole Indians.

Persons visiting Tacoma, particularly gun men, find it highly necessary to use some simple tonic or bracer for three or four days after such a visit. In truth, we may say a vitalizer should be administered for at least twenty-four hours prior to the visit. It is not that the climate of the city by the sound is enervating, that drug stores flourish that M. D.'s grow rich, with swelling bank accounts contributed by patients who have permanent residence there and are made ill thereby! No, not this, for it is an established fact that Tacoma is particularly blessed with a fine climate. There the sunlight streams, the roses bloom, the hop gets in its best work, dissociated with beer, vulgar beer, and climbs those poles with a rapidity that is marvelous to contemplate. No, Tacoma is a cheerful place; too cheerful. That, maybe, is the reason it is necessary to look after one's physical welfare after a visit to Tacoma.

The city by the sound had been left many miles astern, the evening shades were gathering, the round red sun had disappeared behind the distant mountain tops, when a man entered the car and took a seat opposite the section occupied by the Big 4. There was nothing peculiar in this. A man may do such a thing and do it every day for years, and attract no attention. This man did it once and soon attracted attention. He was of slim build, of ordinary height, rather broad shouldered, and had small hands and feet; his face was bronzed by exposure to the weather, his eyes were black and piercing. It was these eyes that caused Tucker to lean over and whisper, hoarsely:

"'Pears to me that black-eyed man is strangely interested in me, no, our party. I don't like his general tout ensemble; I'd as lief take him for a road agent as anything else."

"Road agent!" That startled us, and for an instant four pairs of eyes were fastened on the stranger, who, feeling their magnetic power, slowly turned his head and gazed out of the window.

"What makes you think he is a road agent?" said McMurchy.

"Well, you see, although I've traveled in these Western wilds for many years, and have never been held up on a stage or train, still this man's appearance tallies with Mr. Gaines' (you know Gaines) description of a road agent whom he read about in a book. You see, Gaines went to Boston once, and while there he bought this book, and he had it in his pocket when he went to look at the Bunker Hill Monument. Everyone makes a visit to the Bunker Hill Monument who visits Boston; it's a tacit understanding between the visitor and the town authorities. If a man, I say, if a man, or a woman either, visits Boston and does not visit 'the Monument' and go to the top, too, they are liable to arrest."

"You don't say!" said Courtney, turning pale.

"Fact!" said Tucker.

"My, I've been to Boston three hundred and twenty-seven times; visited the monument once, but didn't even go into the eloquent shaft," said Courtney.

"You have? Why, great heavens, man, think of what you have to do to even things up, so to speak, with the Boston authorities, and thus insure your freedom from durance vile; for, if you ever go to Boston again, and keep going, you will have to climb to the top of that monument three hundred and twenty-seven times; yes, three hundred and twenty-eight, including your next visit!"

Courtney turned whiter; he trembled at the idea of such a feat; he gazed at himself and contemplated his two hundred and ninety-eight pounds avoirdupois.

"I am sorry for you," Tucker continued. "It is particularly hard on a man of your magnificent physique. Now, the monument is about two hundred feet high; you weigh two hundred and ninety-eight pounds; you go to the top of the monument three hundred and twenty-eight times, causing your feet to carry and lift a total weight of ninety-seven thousand seven hundred and forty-four pounds, including atmospheric pressure of about two thousand pounds to the square inch."

"That is, foot pounds," said McMurchy, eyeing Courtney's feet; "yes, foot pounds. Now each foot must sustain one-half of ninety-seven thousand seven hundred and forty-four pounds, or forty-eight thousand eight hundred and seventy-two pounds; provided, of course, your feet are of equal physical strength, if not, so much the worse for the weak foot."

"Well, I'll have to come down as many times as I go up, won't I? Then there would not be so much of a lift coming down as going up; 'pears to me the town authorities ought to allow some sort of a discount or rebate on that," said Courtney, with a triumphant ring to his rich bass voice, but, nevertheless, a resigned expression.

"Why don't you quit business, Courtney? Sell your eastern holdings; move out west and settle on your Mount Shasta property. I understand you and Swiveler have bought a few hundred acres of realty on Mount Shasta, above the snowline, with the idea of opening a sort of Summer Sanitarium. Nice cool place, snow all Summer long, natural toboggan slides and ice-houses, no extra charge for cold drinks, unrivaled scenery—magnificent vistas of mountain peaks, stupendous cañons, purplish valleys—and skies of that tender azure that we read of, cannot describe, but find only in the great dome that is above Mount Shasta." As McMurchy finished he gazed with envy at Courtney and myself.

"We'd have carried out the scheme and left the 'effete East' long ago, only we are waiting for old woman Shasta to sign papers that will give us a clear title to the property; we want our holdings to go to the top, clear up to the sixteen-thousand-foot level or peak, so we can advertise: 'Glacial parties guaranteed to have genuine glaciers the year round; alpen stocks, blue goggles, snowshoes and general glacial outfits constantly on hand. An assortment of glaciers to suit all tastes and ideas. We have them at all altitudes at which a glacier will live, and moving from one foot four inches to two feet eleven inches per year. Toboggan slides galore, from 1,000 to 10,000 feet long, at any degree of pitch to the plane of the horizon.' There's millions in it, and if we can get Mrs. Shasta to think our way I will never climb the Bunker Hill Monument," said Courtney.

"You were speaking of Gaines and his book," said I to Tucker.

"Who is Gaines?" said McMurchy, while Courtney looked the inquiry.

"Gaines? You don't know Gaines?" and Tucker looked out of the window in contemptuous silence; then, turning his head and shaking it sadly, he continued: "Lived all these years in this beautiful world, and don't know Gaines, why, gentlemen, I am astonished! Well, Gaines went to the Bunker Hill Monument, and had this book telling all about road agents and wild Western life in the woods, on the mountains and obviouses."

"What is the obviouses?" asked McMurchy.

"Why the plains, to be sure; ain't obvious plain, don't it mean plain? To say 'out on the plains' is a stilted pression. Down East, people use the term 'obvious' now."

"Ah," said McMurchy.

"I see," mused Courtney; "but," continued the latter, "how high up is the expression when connected with the plains? You say it is 'stilted.' How high are the stilts?"

Tucker did not notice this remark but continued:

"Well, as I was saying, Gaines went to the Bunker Hill Monument, and carefully examined the great shaft from the outside; then he went in and ascended (here Courtney moved uneasily and sighed) to the top. After fully enjoying the really fine view he took a seat on one of the easy chairs (Courtney brightened up a little), and after resting a little he thought of the book. He produced it and began to read. The day was Saturday, the hour 3:20 p. m. Gaines became much interested, and the further he read the more interested he was. Oblivious of time, oblivious of passing events, deaf to the rumble and roar of traffic beneath him, Gaines continued to read. The electric lights came on; the bell in the Old South Church struck eight, then ten and finally tolled the hour of midnight, still Gaines remained buried in that book.

"The gray light of a new day was stealing athwart the spires of the old town, and a little later the rosy light of Aurora came blushing in the east. The man that owns the monument, or has charge of it, was making his first morning rounds of inspection. When nearly to the top he paused and listened, went up a dozen steps and listened with bated breath, listened painfully and with fright. Then he turned and fled, for the sounds he heard were calculated to shake the nerviest nerve and make strong men quail. There were Indian war-whoops, cowboy yells, cries of wounded, pleadings for mercy and to spare life. Well there were no cowboys and no Indians there; it was Gaines. He had fallen asleep, full of the adventures in that book, and they had so worked upon him that he dreamed of Indian fights, road agents and hold-ups, and was howling and thrashing around up there enough to scare any man, particularly a timid New Englander.

"Gaines awoke; he gazed around on the granite walls—good Quincy granite—and thought he was a prisoner in some noisome, underground cell. Presently he recognized his surroundings and became cognizant of a murmur far beneath him, accompanied by the ringing of bells. He looked out of one of those windows and was amazed to see a mob of people, a mass of upturned faces,—there were probably ten thousand people looking up at the top of that monument—and when Gaines appeared at the window they groaned and waved their arms. Gaines took off his silk hat and bowed to the audience, but in doing so he lost the hat, and as it floated away and down a tremendous yell went up from the throng.

"The cause of all this excitement was the man who owns or has charge of the monument. He had spread the report that a madman was in the top of the monument intending to jump from there into Boston harbor. A general alarm had been sent to all police stations, the fire department turned out to a man, all the bells of Boston were rung, the school and receiving ships in the harbor cleared decks for action, the town council had met on Boston Common to discuss means of defense, Faneuil Hall was jammed with excited patriots, each one eager to take an initial step to do something, and—and—an—er—Paul Revere was once more in the saddle, speeding away.

"Now, if a cool man, like Gaines, can get so worked up and create such excitement by the simple reading in a monument of wild Western scenes and adventures, what, what, gentlemen, must the reality be?" and Tucker leaned back in his seat and clenched his hands.

"It's terrible," said McMurchy.

"It's awful," whispered Courtney.

"Let's get our guns out and ready, examine our heavy ammunition and proportion it out, there's no telling but this train may be attacked before morning," said I.

The warlike preparations were soon made, and then the "Big 4" breathed a little easier and decided not to go to bed that night.

The black-eyed man watched with interest this getting ready to fight. He, too, had been greatly interested in Tucker's narration so far as he could hear. At any time he would catch the words "road agent" it appeared to startle him and brought a flush to his cheeks, an additional sparkle to his eyes.

WHICH IS BEST? A TRIAL PROPOSED

New York

Editor American Field:—Here I am in New York, sitting up and watching these dog men quarreling, and laughing at their bragging and offering to bet each other this and that on Kent Elgin, Lad of Rush and Strideaway. How amusing it all is. It takes one back to the times when the Campbells and the Brysons made things smoke with their talk and their back talk about Joe and Gladstone, and Buck and Buck Jr.

It has been many a day, too, since I wet my pen for the American Field. As time wears on, and business increases, and cares accumulate, a fellow does not have the time to write Plover articles as he did sixteen years ago. I begin to feel like the old darky who was twitted about not going 'possum hunting any more. He rubbed his rheumatic knees and said:

"Well, I lubs 'possum huntin' jes as much as I ebber did; but, somehow 'nuther, I don't think about it ez often ez I did."

I think about it as often, nay, oftener, but it does no good. About ten days every year is the most I can get in the way of hunting, and for the rest I have to take it out in thinking and watching and trying to breed a few more pointers; and whether they suit anybody else makes mighty little difference to me.

It so happens that I have as pretty and well bred a little pointer as I ever owned. It is my ambition to breed her to the best field dog in America, and all this racket between Avent, Adams and Damon about Lad of Rush and Kent Elgin and Strideaway has made me buckle down to study of their work and their breeding, in order to decide in my own mind and for my own satisfaction which is the best dog. It makes no difference to anybody else, I presume, what conclusion I come to, and giving you the reasoning and conclusions is probably a bit of vanity. But to satisfy myself on the question of the breeding of these three dogs I took the Stud Book and ran out the pedigrees of all three of them to the fourth generation and I knew [illegible] every dog in all their pedigrees, and upon my knowledge of their ancestory formed my [illegible] Before taking up the question of br[illegible] I will consider their performance. All [illegible] are young dogs, the oldest not yet four years Lad of Rush will be four in March, Kent Elgin four in May, and Strideaway three in February. There is no doubt about it that all of them must be good dogs to have made as fine records as they have.

What I say is not to belittle any of them, but is the necessary reasoning of one comparing them in the effort to conclude which is best. I do not blame Mr. Damon if he has an aversion to making private matches for money; it is a vulgar sort of test after all and probably would decide nothing. But, my! How I would delight to see a real knock-down and drag-out race between the three. If good judges could be had, a convenient place, a reasonably long hunt, and plenty of birds, such a trial would draw a crowd. We lookers-on would not care what money was up, or whether any money was up. But let us consider the record of work.

Lad of Rush began his career at Elizabethtown, Ky., November 7, 1892, in the U. S. Field Club's Trial Derby. He was then less than twenty months old: he ran in a field of fourteen dogs, and in four heats he beat David C, Lady Peg, Ginger Ale and Mamie S. According to report but five coveys of birds were found in a course of fifteen to twenty miles the first day. Lad ran but one heat that day, and the American Field credited him with one point. David C false pointed so often Lad naturally won. Birds were so scarce, the second day was consumed in the pointer Derby, and then the trials were transferred to Columbus. In his second heat, with Lady Peg, Lad's work was summarized as follows: A flush; a point, to which birds very nearly flushed, Lad a little unsteady; a point, badly backed by Peg, and Lad again unsteady. In his third heat he beat Ginger Ale in a heat in which it is said neither dog took the advantages offered, and that it was poor work for both dogs. In his fourth heat, with Mamie S, it was said he had the advantage of her by being fresher; he was credited with a beautiful point, a false point, three points, a doubtful flush and a chase of thirty yards. Lad won the Derby, and the reporter was of opinion that Mamie S was his superior. The report was that the lack of game rendered a correct estimate of the quality of the dogs very difficult. Lad's next appearance was in December, 1892, at Lexington, N. C., in the Central Field Trial Club's pointer Derby, wherein thirteen dogs competed. He ran three heats. In the first he beat Hempstead Game. She was described as a potterer. Lad scored a false point, a point where he failed to locate, a point on a bevy, a point. In his second he beat Jingo, who began with a flush, and Lad did the like twice; the reporter said Jingo outworked and outpointed him. In the third heat Graceful II beat Lad in a heat in which both were described as pottering, and neither found any birds. Lad was, however, placed second. In the All-Age Pointer Stakes, run three days later, he ran three heats, beating Drake, Bob and Damon. In the first heat, with Drake, he stood two bevies and a lark, and Drake was described as in poor form. In the second heat, with Bob, Lad's record was an excusable flush and a point on a bevy; Bob flushed and chased, so Lad won. In his third heat, with Damon, Lad pointed a bevy, then flushed a bevy, then pointed a single; and Damon flushed, so Lad won. His next appearance was at the postponed trials of the U. S. Field Trial Club in February, 1893, at New Albany, Mississippi, in the All-Age Pointer Stakes, thirteen entries, where he beat Belle Sensation, Manitou and Ben A. In his first heat he ran against a bitch that did not know her handler; the reporter says: "Lad, in this heat, hardly did himself credit, though far outclassing Belle." In his second heat Lad did splendidly and beat Manitou handsomely. In his third heat he again did remarkably well, although the reporter thought Ben A's work better than his. Now this is a splendid record for a dog under two years of age—a record any owner may be proud of. At the same time, assuming the reports to be correct, one cannot help being struck with the great luck of Lad as regards the dogs he ran against; also with the fact that flushes, false points and pottering all appear, here and there, in the record of Lad. Can it be said of him that this is the record of one of those meteoric, surprising, phenomenal dogs that now and then appear?

Let us now examine the field trial record of Strideaway.

He began his career November 6, 1893, at Bicknell, Ind., at the U. S. field trials, when he was twenty months old, with thirteen entries in the Pointer Derby; and he won in three heats, beating Alice Leslie once and Little Ned twice. His first heat was near midday of a hot day; he opened with three "stylish and stanch points;" he was described as "thoroughly stanch on points with good style" and "one of the most promising pointers ever seen in a Derby, and should have a great future." In his second heat it was said "there was no possible chance for any but one decision;" there was no suggestion of flush, false point, or pottering. Then came the Absolute Derby, in which Strideaway defeated Topsy's Rod, the setter winner, and of which it was said by the reporter: "I question if such a heat was ever seen in this country where there was so little difference between the contestants. If any difference the pointer had a little advantage in speed. There was absolutely no mistake made by either puppy during the heat, and nothing in any way to be criticized. . . . I predict it will be many a year before another such brace is seen." And again: "The winning Derby puppies, Topsy's Rod and Strideaway, are as good as ever started or won at a trial, and should have brilliant futures." Then came the United States trials beginning February 12, 1894, at Grand Junction, where Strideaway again won the Pointer Derby; and the criticisms were, "his point work was good and accurate" as to his first heat; but in the second series, although he won, it was said of him he was "not running in his Bicknell form," and he made [illegible] two flushes. When it came to the Pointer All-Age Stakes Strideaway was defeated, in a field of eleven, by Kent Elgin, his half brother. In the first heat he beat a Graphic puppy; in his second heat he was placed second to Kent Elgin, without com ment or criticism. Immediately afterward he won the Absolute Derby a second time from his former adversary, Topsy's Rod, but under such circumstances that the victory did not count for much with dog men, as Rod was not in form. Strideaway's next victory was at the U. S. trials at Bicknell, Ind., November 8, 1894, where he won the All-Age Pointer Stakes, beating Lad of Rush, Lady, Tick Boy and Little Ned; it was said of him, "Strideaway was an easy winner of first and is a far better dog than ever before, his work to-day being all that anyone could wish." And there the little fellow rests, having lowered his colors but once, and that time to his half-brother who is a year older than himself.

Let us now look at the field record of Kent Elgin.

Kent Elgin, although nearly as old as Lad of Rush, appears not to have run in good form in the U. S. field trial meeting of November, 1892. He was described as out of Croxie Wise, which must be a mistake as he is registered as out of Vera Bang; he was beaten in his second heat by Ginger Ale for the Pointer Derby, and neither was placed. Nor did he enter the All-Age Pointer Stakes of that club; he was not in the Central Field Trial Club's Pointer Derby in December, 1892, nor in its All-Age Stakes; and he was not in the Pointer Derby of the U. S. trials of November, 1893, but won second to Franklin in the All-Age Pointer Stakes. His performance in that stake was as follows: In his first heat he beat Mame S, and he was reported as doing excellent work, being under good command, and showing great improvement; his second heat, with Jingo, was not valuable; in his third heat he won second to Franklin, and the award was "well received." At the U. S. trials at Grand Junction in February, 1894, Kent Elgin did not run in the Pointer Derby, but he defeated Strideaway for the All-Age Pointer Stakes after Strideaway had won the Derby; only two series of heats were won to decide this event; in the first series Kent Elgin had a soft thing with a false pointer, and in the second heat, with Strideaway, he beat him. The reports give very little details of the heat. Upon running off the Absolute for all-ages with Count Gladstone Kent Elgin was defeated.

Now let us summarize these records.

LAD OF RUSH

November, 1892	U. S. Pointer Derby	First...	Questioned.
December, 1892	Central Pointer Derby	Second	Questioned.
December, 1892	Central All-Age Pointer Stakes	First...

Started four times—won three firsts and one second.

STRIDEAWAY

November, 1893	U. S. Derby Absolute	First...
February, 1894	U. S. Pointer Derby	First...

February, 1894	U. S. Derby Absolute	First...	Questioned.
November, 1894	U. S. All-Age Pointer Stakes	First...

Started six times—won five firsts and one second.

KENT ELGIN

February, 1894	U. S. All-Age Pointer Stakes	First...
February, 1894	U. S. Absolute All-Age Stake		Beaten.

Surely the record stands strongly in favor of Strideaway. We may omit altogether his last race against Topsy's Rod, and the record still stands in his favor. If we read the details of these performances we cannot help seeing that, while Lad of Rush and Kent Elgin are very good dogs, Strideaway is an exceptional and phenomenal animal.

I propose now to examine their breeding in detail. The following columns show their breeding for three generations:

					Hebe 1

The figures opposite the names of their progenitors in each generation give my estimate of the field qualities of those progenitors, and where I do not know of them having a field record I put zero. For example, as between Kent Elgin and Strideaway, the difference must be in their dams. King of Kent is undoubtedly entitled to be marked as of the highest grade and so he appears with 1. So with Pearl's Dot, being a great field winner she is marked with a 1 too. Vera Bang, the dam of Kent Elgin, is certainly not as distinguished an animal as Pearl's Dot; her breeding is good, but Bang Bang, her sire, was never such a dog as Trinket's Bang, the sire of Pearl's Dot, and so I mark Trinket's Bang 1 and Bang Bang 2. Nor was Christmas Vic any such bitch as Pearlstone. I did not know Vic, but her gander-eyed ordinary sire, Christmas Bill, was an old, old friend of mine who deserves about 3 as a fielder. Pearlstone was a granddaughter of Price's Bang, through Hebe; and her sire, Bang II, was by Bounce out of Jilt, than which there is no better blood.

In a word, Strideaway's pedigree in the first, second and third generations has not an indifferent dog or an experiment in all his ancestry, and the dogs were all famous winners.

In Kent Elgin's pedigree the progenitors fell off to less conspicuous dogs in the second and third generations.

This latter feature is even more conspicuous in Lad of Rush's pedigree, where, in the second and third generations, he has a lot of "mug hunters" who were notoriously not first-class fielders. From my knowledge of Lad of Bow, Graphic, Naso of Kippen, Meteor and Faust, Lad of Bow was the handsomest looking of the three, and the "mug darlings" in his pedigree; but I am not certain that the dog Strideaway is descended from is the best dog of the three, and that he would beat either of the others if they meet on Accordingly, I intend to breed to Strideaway. He is by no means a model of beauty himself, but, as I believe in the theory of atavism, I hope I may get another King of Kent.

I believe King of Kent has been the best sire we have ever had in pointers, and Strideaway is stronger on his dam's side than either of the other dogs. King of Kent is getting old and has been bred from a great deal; and for that reason I prefer his young, fresh and excellent son.

A real test race between these dogs would be a great thing for pointer breeders, and, although ill able to do so, I would be one of ten to make up a purse of $1,000 for a trial on terms to be agreed upon, and have them placed in 1, 2, 3 order as fielders after a fair field and a fight to a finish. I have my ideas as to which is the best, but am not obstinate in any opinion on the subject and would accept the result. I believe the Pointer Club, in the interest of pointer breeding, could be induced to become a subscriber to the stakes and would be glad to hear from others. It is a much more agreeable form of contest than a mere bet between private owners.

What say the owners of these dogs, and what say other pointer men to this proposition?

AT LAST A CHALLENGE ACCEPTED

HICKORY VALLEY, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In the last issue of one of your cotemporaries there was a challenge from Major J. R. Purcell to run Lady Margaret against Chevalier at the U. S. trials (B) at West Point, Miss. The following is a copy of my answer to the Major's challenge:

"I read with interest Major J. R. Purcell's challenge and must say it sounds like he means business; and I am proud to say that the Major is no part of a Mr. Damon. The major has a good pointer and he is not afraid to run her against good pointers and setters. When it comes to running Chevalier against Lady Margaret the record will show that Chevalier will have all to lose and nothing to gain except the stakes that will be put up. To show that I am correct in my above statement I will give the record of Chevalier. He won in the Derby in good company. In all-age form, in 1893, he won the U. S. Field Trial Club's All-Age Stakes; also won the Absolute by beating the pointer winner, Franklin. On prairie chickens he was second in the Manitoba Field Trial Club's All-Age Stakes, being defeated by his kennel brace mate Count Gladstone IV, who won. At the U. S. trials (B) in 1894 he again was second in the All-Age Stakes, only beaten again by Count Gladstone IV. His next appearance was in the Eastern two-hour race in November, 1894; in this stake Chevalier was second after a great trial, with Rip Rap first and Topsy's Rod third, and Lady Margaret was not placed. All six of Chevalier's wins have been under different judges and on different grounds. The public well knows that Lady Margaret has often run and has not yet been placed very big in open stakes. So all that I would think about making a match against Lady Margaret for would be just to accommodate the Major, and for a chance to win the money that is up.

"I will run Chevalier against Lady Margaret under the same conditions that he ran under in the Eastern Field Trials Club's two-hour race, and under their rules or the U. S. rules, for a purse of $300 a side, or as much more as he likes up to $5,000 a side. The match race to be run on first suitable day after the U. S. trials are over and on their grounds at West Point, Miss.

"I will select Mr. F. R. Hitchcock as my judge, but if he can't act I will select some competent judge that is recognized as such in public field trials, and I hope the Major will also select a competent judge; and they can select the third. I will suggest Mr. P. T. Madison, secretary of the U. S. Club, as stakeholder, and I have mailed him a check for $150 as forfeit, showing my good faith.

"As Chevalier has no stake that he can run in I hope the Major will cover my forfeit at once, before I spend any time on him."

I mail the Major a copy of this letter, so that he will know I mean business, and if E. O. Damon will only watch he will see a challenge accepted and a match run in a gentlemanly way. All of the pointers are not owned by people that harp on honors won by having good dogs stuffed on salt pork. The Major, like Mr. Dexter, owns good pointers and is not such a coward as to keep them from competing against good setters and pointers. They are gentlemen that will not force me to sleep with my dogs for fear of their getting salt pork or some other drug the night before they run.

DEATH OF CHAMPION OBO II

One by one the old champions pass away. It must always be so, and though one cannot but regret the loss yet it is better that a dog should die, even if it has to be put out of the way, rather than live to such extreme old age that it becomes a burden to itself and all around it.

Obo II was imported in utero by Mr. F. F. Pitche of Claremont, N. H., and was out of his Chloe II, a prize winning black cocker bitch of 21 pounds' weight, by Mr. Farrow's Obo, weighing 22 pounds, and acknowledged by good judges to be one of the best black cockers in England in his day. Chloe II was bred by Mr. P. Bullock, and out of his Nellie by his Dash. Mr. Farrow's Obo was out of his Betty by his Fred. Obo II weighed rather over 20 pounds, had short legs, nice flat coat, very heavy feather, a good disposition, and in the field he was a first-class little worker, which is more than can be said of many cockers seen on the bench at the present time. He was whelped August 7, 1882, and ten years ago was generally regarded as the best black cocker spaniel in America. His career on the show bench was undimmed by defeat, and he won the following prizes: 1st Manchester, N. H., Sept., 1883; championship and special for best cocker, Lowell, Mass., Dec., 1883; 1st and special for best cocker, New Haven, Conn., March, 1884; championship and special for best cocker owned by a member of the A. C. S. Club, New York, May, 1884; championship and stud dog prize for spaniels, Philadelphia, Pa., 1884; 1st and special for best cocker dog, special for best cocker, special with Shina for best brace, and special as one of the best kennel, New Haven, Conn., 1885; championship, Boston, 1885. He was then withdrawn from exhibition, and placed in the stud, where he proved a most successful sire and added greatly to the fame he had already acquired as a show dog; indeed, in this respect his record outshines that of any other cocker spaniel dog in America, and his name can be found in the pedigrees of most of our best cockers. He commanded the high fee (for a cocker) of $25, and must have earned a good deal of money for his owner. But it was not on that account that Mr. Willey thought so much of the old dog that had been his constant companion for so many years; but we will let Mr. Willey tell his own tale. Writing from Salmon Falls, N. H., under date of January 9, he says:

"I am sorry to say I have lost my old favorite Obo II. He died January 2, going on thirteen years, being whelped August 7, 1882. As this dog is considered one of the pillars of the Stud Book I would have written you sooner, but I felt so badly I did not like to think of it. The old dog has been a close companion with me and my favorite; in fact so close that hardly a meal has been passed without the dog at one side of me and expecting a share of whatever I had. I always considered him worthy of it and gave it to him; in fact not a meal went by that Obo II did not have his tea or coffee the same as I did myself, so you can see the dog has really been one of the family. I own and have out on a farm from thirty-five to forty cockers, yet when I lost Obo II I felt as though I had lost all the dogs I ever owned. The dog has been smart up to a short time back, when I noticed his legs commenced to swell and he appeared to bloat some, which was caused by dropsy. That was what carried him off, or rather say of old age. He has always been a strong, hardy dog, never sick a day. The last week, while it put him out to get round much, he ate well, and two days before he died he left the house and came to my place of business and stopped part of the day, or till I left for home with him. He ate quite a good supper before he died, so you see the dog did not have to suffer, which I am very thankful for. I would have had him tapped and water taken from him, but the doctors said it would only hurt him and as he was such an old dog he would soon fill up again; therefore I decided not to have it done. I would not have them hurt him without some benefit to him. I have always made this dog my pet, raising him from a puppy, and being so much attached to him is why I miss him so much. I never shall become attached to another as strongly as I was to Obo II. He was retired from shows, as his stock was good; for it has been my practice to show a dog only till his stock came up; if he could not get good stock it was no use to show then. Obo II, Black Pete, Jersey, Shina, and, in fact, all my dogs and bitches had to give place to new ones as I bred them. I like when I show dogs to show those bred the last season, as it shows what one is doing. When you do that you have to retire the old ones. A few of the prominent cockers Obo II was sire of were Champion Jersey, Champion Black Duke, Champion Shina, Black Duchess, Champion Brant, and many others. All his stock have also been good as stock getters. He was a grand old dog to the spaniel family, but to me, outside his stock qualities, he was a companion and one I can never replace."

IN A DILEMMA

CHICAGO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—After an involuntary exile from field sports for more than a decade, excepting an occasional jaunt with my gun, the writer is contemplating re-entering the lists, being thereunto incited by the benefit derived from a week's exercise last Fall on the Kankakee marshes, about 70 miles out from the city on the P. H. W. & Chicago Railroad, in quest of any feathered game, but principally for jacksnipes or English snipes as the game bird is named in the East.

Our bag to two guns for the week was sixty snipes and four ducks. A poor record, especially when compared with reported records of eighty snipes being bagged in a single day to one gun, which was more than we saw all told in any one day, and perhaps as many as we saw in any two days of the week. We attributed our non-success in part to the especially fine weather which prevailed, which held the flights further north, to the drouth also in part, and to the further drawback that we hunted dogless.

In the writer's palmy hunting days, in quest of that incomparable game bird, the ruffed grouse, to achieve which in satisfactory bags as they are found in their glory in Western Pennsylvania in the valley of the noble Allegheny, requires a nerve, an eye, a gun and a dog of the first water. Of those requisites which had won me many a crusade against the ruffed grouse in their mountain fastnesses of rock, brush and timber, there was lacking nothing excepting from the impairment of time but the last mentioned, my red setter, whose bones repose upon the banks of the Alleghany, 30 miles up from Oil City, which brings me to the gist of my story.

It is certainly discouraging to down a right and left at the first flush of the day and retrieve neither bird, which is a sample of our fortune throughout the week, and with this feeling I turned to the advertisements of the AMERICAN FIELD offering all sorts and conditions of dogs, as it were, with prices to correspond, having sworn never again to hunt dogless.

I commune thus: In all this maze of advertising all are strangers. With whom shall I negotiate? Are they all reliable? And in my despair I appeal to readers of the AMERICAN FIELD who have passed through a similar experience, and ask what shall I do about it? In other days I have selected my puppy from the litter and knew of the dam and sire, and have broken my own dogs, but in this case I repeat the query: What shall I do about it?

BELL MUZZLE.

POINTER TYPE

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In a recent AMERICAN FIELD appeared an article on pointer type that has interested me, and I think it must interest all pointer breeders in this country. Only those who have made the pointer their stand-by in the field can truly draw the line, and in the pointer that Mr. Arkwright calls of "houndy type" and the ones with the shorter ears and different formation. All the characteristics that Arkwright speaks of as belonging to the houndy type are true. So strong in the hunting and pointing quality is the pure English pointer that he will stand more outcrossing and yet do good work than any other field dog. Yet every deviation from the parent stock shows itself more prominently and detracts from the good qualities of the pure English pointer, with the not long ear starting well up on the broad head and setting close to the head, and which will never cock up or curl under.

Many of our pointers that pass as good looking dogs are deficient in quality on account of the houndy appearance their too long ears and narrow heads give them. Such dogs I have owned very many of. Yet I was ever after the other type, for I knew there was a deficiency in the courage and endurance that my old black Phil had, and others of his type. Yet who is there to-day who owns a pointer but thinks he has just such a one?

The judge gives his decision based on the one Mr. Arkwright speaks of, and if he does not see one perfect in that type he chooses the ones nearest to it; that is all he can do. A breeder should never breed to a dog whose only record is a show one. Croxteth, who during his time got as many good field dogs as any pointer in America, was never entitled to a good show record. Sensation far outclassed him on the bench. Little Bang Bang has probably left his mark more prominently on his offspring than any pointer I can cite, as he had a very decided stop and was full of pointer character.

Our pointer men are fully up on the knowledge of what a good pointer should be, and although we hear of but few that have alarmed the setter men, yet I believe there are as many good pointers as there are setters. It takes money to compete, and if Strideaway, Rip Rap, or Lad of Rush should be defeated by a neck it would not prove to sportsmen that they had been defeated (only in getting the money). They are all great ones, and Topsy's Rod, no doubt, thinks so too. But his owner don't want him to, and it is a blessing that he can't help it; he should hold his point and not get rattled even if the pointer is crowding him hard.

Money is not the only thing that talks, although in the betting ring they will tell you so. A true and full account of the field trial tells us "stay-at-homes" which is the best dog.

BREEDING ENGLISH SETTERS

Newburyport, Mass.

Editor American Field:—The article by Dr. Maclin on English setters interested me when I saw the signature. The author has necessarily given study and thought to laws of heredity, and the wonderful Gath—Gem litter has also made him famous as a breeder of English setters.

Now as to the depreciation of that breed, physically and mentally, it is easy enough to make the assertion but where is the proof. Setters of the Llewellin strain have always lacked the rugged coarseness and bulk of other strains; the bitches have been less prolific and the puppies needed more care. The cry that they were playing out was raised almost from the first. It was a natural inference considering the close inbreeding; and the thought was father of the belief. It was assumed that they were lacking in stamina and endurance, and to prove it the pick of the natives, Grousedale, ran with Lit. Then there was quiet along the lines for a while. Now if they have commenced to depreciate it is certainly not very marked.

Perhaps Mr. Maclin has suggested one cause why they have not, viz., change of climate, surroundings, conditions, etc., being transplanting, as it were, to another soil and another atmosphere. How subtly nature works we can only conjecture.

It seems plausible that English setters of the Llewellin strain bred for generations in the cold North should differ from those bred in the hot southern country, and that their English brethren should differ from both. Whether the difference is sufficient to maintain the breed by interchange remains to be proved perhaps.

To sum up my experience of twenty years or so with the breed, I should say they are fully equal if not superior now to those that I first bred. For many generations they have been largely bred from the best of their kind (the field trial winners), and the qualities requisite for best workers should be more marked than formerly.

Finally, is anyone anxious to try his wonderful setter of different breeding against another Lit?

HUNTING TO THE GUN

Washington, D. C.

Editor American Field:—For several weeks I have been from home, and have not seen your paper until to-day, when I stepped into the Ebbitt House and found my old friend, Pat Henry, reading the last American Field. He walked with me to where I got the last four numbers, and I have just finished reading them, and, while they are all interesting, the thing that pleased me most was Mr. P. H. Bryson's article on "Hunting to the Gun;" and, though it is near midnight, I will not retire until I give it my hearty indorsement. We have strayed far away from the original purpose of field trials, which was to develop the highest class of bird finding dogs, not bolters; not dogs that must go off like shot out of a shovel, with no other seeming object than to get as far off as they can in the shortest possible time. Is that the kind of dog we want when we go out for a day's sport? Not much. We want a dog that knows a likely place for birds when he sees it, and has the bird sense to go to it, hunt it out quickly, and then off for the next, leaving no ground behind him not hunted out thoroughly; one that knows he is hunting for birds and will point them when he finds them, and stay on point until one arrives. Instead of this, we have about merged into a coursing club.

Let us go back to first principles and let the bird finders to the front, and leave the coursing to the greyhounds.

PACIFIC COAST TRIALS POSTPONED

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Pacific Field Trials Club held Tuesday, January 8, the twelfth annual trials of the club were postponed until February 11.

The postponement was made necessary by the long continued storm and the yet threatening condition of the weather, which indicates no abatement for the coming week. The committee therefore considered it imperative to postpone and selected the eleventh of February in hopes of settled weather and clear skies. All indications point to a very successful meeting and good work from the contesting dogs.

NOTES

Mr. George R. Krehl, editor of our English cotemporary, the Stock-Keeper, has recently had two toy bulldogs done to death by their kennel-mates, urged on to the deed by a dachshund. Our cotemporary refers to the Boston terrier matter that came up at the American Kennel Club's last quarterly meeting, and pours a good deal of very cold water upon the Boston animal and its standing as a breed, saying: "Now we are going to tell the Boston terrier believers, and Mr. Hook in particular, a secret which is shared by Mr. James Mortimer, who, so far as we can learn, has not confided it to his unsettled countrymen, but is hugging it in his guilty bosom. The Boston terrier is a fraud, an imposition, and has no claim at all to be called after the hub of the universe. We do not deal in dubious generalities, nor are we poking fun at the breed. We have seen photographs from life of the best that Boston can boast, and they are bad French bulldogs; only that and nothing more. Since the peaceful and pleasant invasion of Paris by the well-to-do and smart members of American society, the children of Brother Jonathan have learned to love the gay capital and all that in it dwells, not forgetting those cunning, little, short-faced, tulip-eared dorgs, and swarms of returning Americans have taken back with them, besides other souvenirs, specimens of the breed beloved by the gamins and bred by the biggest blackguards in Paris, whose only redeeming quality is their attachment to their dogs, which they will not part with, but so polite are they and anxious to oblige that, rather than Monsieur or Madame the stranger shall be disappointed, they will steal their neighbor's dog for you. We shall not hurt their feelings by mentioning this, as we had the information from themselves. These transported bouledogues have become converted into the Boston terrier, and if our American readers find a difficulty in crediting our assertion, we will tell them where to obtain confirmation. Let them ask Mr. Jas. Mortimer whether when he was in Paris this year he did not see Boston terriers running about the streets, as plentiful as fox terriers in London; and further, whether he does not know that they were simply bad specimens of the toy bulldog Parisian fancy; and lastly, ask him if any of them could bark a word of English, or knew the address of the American Legation." On behalf of Mr. Mortimer we might say that the "secret" by no means has been "hugged in his guilty bosom," for in his report of the last New York show for the American Field he forestalled our English cotemporary by about nine months, his remarks on the "Boston terrier" classes containing the following passage: "There is little fault to be found with the placing of these dogs, but if our Boston friends would call them anything but 'terriers' I could forgive them. Call them Boston bulldogs, like as they are to what we have seen from La Belle France, called Parisian bulldogs. I know where there is one of the latter that I am sure would have been in the money at this show had he been entered. I respectfully submit to the club that the name be changed from 'Boston terrier' to 'Boston bulldog.'" This was in the American Field of March 3, last year, and consequently before Mr. Mortimer's last European trip, but the club has shown no inclination to adopt the very sensible suggestion that if we must have the breed it should be rightly named. The Stock-Keeper, however, goes a step farther than Mr. Mortimer and denies even the correctness of the "Boston" part of the name, claiming that the animal is nothing but a French bulldog—and a poor specimen at that.

Oftentimes after reading the American Field I am struck with the similarity of events or circumstances that fall to the lot of my friends, the dog men. Be it luck, or whatever you may call it, I have often after reading of the experience of some brother sportsman been able to revert to some incident or parallel case of my own. I, however, had an experience that I have not seen narrated, and thinking that perhaps some young sportsman may derive some satisfaction from my experience I would like to give it to your readers. I live in a small town at the crossing of the Galesburg Railway and the Rock Island and St. [illegible] the C. B. & Q. R. R. Being a lover of dogs I have several, and occasionally breed a litter. September 23 my bitch Minnie Noble II, by Gath's Hope (3124) out of Minnie Noble (22907), dropped a litter by Breeze Gladstone. Well, all the "boys" came in to see the new arrivals and for several days it furnished the topic of conversation among our local sportsmen. Things went well for three weeks, when I was called to the country on a Tuesday evening and could not return until next morning, when I visited the kennel, and lo! two of my prettiest little dog puppies had disappeared. I inquired of the office boy and learned all was well the previous evening. I told Mr. Russell, the druggist, of my loss and he thought that perhaps they had not been stolen and related an experience of his own, where he thought a fiend had done his work (the same as I thought), but to his surprise he caught his bitch eating a puppy. Others thought it might be possible, but I had my own ideas for once. The following Friday night, having nothing better to do, I went up to our club, played a few games of billiards, became disinterested, and thought I would visit the kennel yard. Just as I stepped into the office I heard one of my older dogs bark, and I knew on the instant that a stranger was around. I went to the back door of the office and sure enough saw a gentleman (?) stepping over a low partition fence separating the puppy yard from the larger run. I took my gun from its case, as soon as possible dropped in a couple of shells, ran out of the office, fell over the fence he had scaled so easily, and made such a racket that he dropped his burden and went for the kennel yard fence (a solid board fence seven feet high with four wires above it!). I got myself together in time to give him both barrels as he went over the fence. He left his mark all right, and I did mine also, which was 38 No. 6 chilled shot in his wrist, side, and back of his head, they being the portions of his precious anatomy that were above the fence at the instant. He has since the occurrence found business in the wild West, but should he chance to see this article and not feel that he has received a sufficient recompense for his endeavors to get away with a brace of puppies I will upon his appetence furnish the necessary directions for the same. I have not lost any puppies since.

Vermont, Ill. Will. C. Fowler, M. D.

An interesting dog stealing case was heard at the London County Petty Sessions on Thursday, December 20, of which our English cotemporary, The Field, gives the following account: "A milkman named Whyte was brought up charged with stealing a dog collar of the value of 2s. 6d.; but, as a fact, the collar had been attached to a terrier whose value was £3, which was stolen at the same time. For the prosecution, Mr. Leycester said that one of the curious anomalies of English law was that a man could not be indicted for stealing a dog, as stealing a dog was not larceny, but only an offense punishable on summary conviction; and as nothing was known in this respect against Whyte, he could only be prosecuted so far as the collar was concerned. The dog, the property of Mrs. Tillyer, living at Stamford Hill, was stolen on the afternoon of November 16, while out in the neighborhood in charge of a servant. Mrs. Tillyer at once communicated with the police, and the next day Police-Sergeant Croston visited the prisoner's house in Mundford road, Clapton, but he could not find the dog or gain any information about it. There were other dogs there one of which was claimed by a gentleman, and the prisoner was charged with having stolen it, but that charge was dismissed by the magistrate, although the dog was handed over to its owner. Nothing was heard of Mrs. Tillyer's terrier until December 3, when it was found in the possession of a gentleman at Harlesden. It now appeared he had it from a dealer in dogs, named Smith, at Elstree in Hertfordshire, who had himself bought it from the prisoner. It arrived at Smith's place at Elstree on the early morning of November 17, and it must have been dispatched from town a few hours after it was stolen. It was further proved that three days before it was stolen the prisoner sent an advertisement to the Bazaar, Exchange and Mart, which appeared on the 16th, and began with the word "Pat," the name to which the dog answered, and contained an accurate description of it and an offer of it for sale. Mr. Smith had answered the advertisement and had so come to buy the dog and it was suggested that the prisoner had been watching it, and knew it was always sent out with the servant at the same time in the afternoon, and that he could have an opportunity of stealing it as soon as he had a purchaser for it. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and Sergeant Croston stated that, although the prisoner had never been convicted before, he had been suspected by the police for some time to be an habitual dog stealer. He had sent away as many as sixty-eight dogs during the last four months, but he got rid of them so quickly that the police were unable to detect him. The chairman sentenced the prisoner to be imprisoned and kept to hard labor for nine months."

A feature of the Detroit premium list is the presence of local classes for some breeds, those so favored being St. Bernards, English setters, pointers, Irish setters, cocker spaniels, fox terriers and pugs; three prizes are offered, viz., $5, $3 and $2, and it seems that it is the intention of the City of the Straits Kennel Club to charge a reduced entry fee for these classes. St. Bernards (each variety) and mastiffs are provided with two challenge classes ($15 each), two open classes ($15 and $10 each), and a puppy class ($10 and $5). For other breeds the prizes are $10 and $5 in the open classes, except that English and Irish setters and pointers get third prizes of $3; some, however, get two challenge classes ($10 each) and two open classes, some have but one challenge class and two open classes; others get no challenge [illegible] few breeds—bloodhounds, Irish water spaniels, Dinmonts, Skyes, Scottish, Yorkshire, other [illegible] and toy spaniels—have only one open class [illegible] for them. Those that have two open classes and challenge class are foxhounds, deerhounds, [illegible] dachshunde, wirehaired fox terriers and Irish [illegible]

A single challenge class is alloted to the borzois, greyhounds, field spaniels, poodles, bull terriers, black and tan [illegible] and Italian greyhounds; while those that find [illegible] age classes are Great Danes, pointers, all three [illegible] kers collies, beagles and smooth fox terriers. [illegible] in [illegible] vided by weight, get double classes, [illegible] sc[illegible]ous classes are provided, the weight division being made at 30 pounds. The club offers kennel prizes of $10 for eighteen breeds. The entry fee is $3, and entries will close on February 11. It is stated that the entry fee for local classes will be only $2, which looks as if separate entries, for these classes only, are to be accepted. In the way of specials the club has been so fortunate as to secure already three silver cups and other pieces of plate. The judging is almost equally divided between Mr. Jas. Mortimer and Mr. John Davidson. No information is given as to benching or feeding.

THE following remarks on inbreeding for type are taken from the Ontario Live-Stock Journal and are worthy the consideration of breeders: "Scientific students of the law of heredity long since discovered that where animals of mixed breeds are crossed promiscuously together, there is a constant struggle of Nature to revert back to a fixed type, and generally that type which is common to the ancestry of most of the animals in the pedigree of the youngster produced, but as blood influences do not always accord with the arithmetical ratio of the blood itself, that is not always the case. This tendency to revert to a previous type has been seized upon by breeders as a means of establishing breeds through inbreeding of the blood of some one or more animals possessing the type it is desired to fix upon the breed. Calling commenced with the bull Hubbuck, and he and his successors established and perfected the Shorthorn breed of cattle, which continues to breed true to the established type when kept pure, and when crossed struggles to assert its type. The true theory of inbreeding is little understood by the superficial breeder. An animal may possess the blood of a given ancestor without possessing the least appreciable evidence of it in his tendencies or traits—in fact, may be the counterpart of some other ancestor bear or the stamp of a group of ancestors. Inbreeding by means of such animals will not tend to fix the type of the desired ancestor or his descendants. It is not this alone that separates lines from a common source. That being the case, each will help and support the other in Nature's struggle to cast back the type. When there is strength enough in this united effort it prevails not only in reproducing the type sought, but it eradicates contending influences and makes a prepotential individual, or one that is practically thoroughbred in type. In reproducing animal nature blood influences have their affinities and repellants, just as we find the same in chemistry of materlal nature."

FROM the Kennel Notes in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 29 I learned that Mr. Fr. Pletschker, secretary of the Doggen Club of Berlin, is in New York, where he intends to show half a dozen of his Great Danes next month. This is really interesting news to Great Dane fanciers. But the few lines in which the announcement was made contain so many dubious statements that an explanation may be in order. Peter is declared to be "winner of tbe government medal and of four first and special prizes at Munich in 1892." According to the Hundesport's report of that show. at which Max Hartenstein judged, Mr. Pietschker won the following, and no other, prizes: Troll II, third prize; Alexander, first and prize of honor; Harald, V. H. C.; Victor, V. H. C. and special prize; Meta, H. C.; Jane, H. C.; and two special prizes, one for the best collection of Great Danes (the kennel prize) and the other for most successful breeding. The two last mentioned prizes were given by the Deutsche Doggen Club, whose secretary Mr. Pietschker is, and that sold that famous stud dog (?) Imperator (Sandor); these two had to be awarded to Mr. Pietschker, because he had the above mentioned six dogs there, and perhaps Peter and others; while four exhibitors, viz., Püschel, Diesterweg, Schulze and Aichele, had each three dogs, six others had two each, and the rest only one each in the Great Dane classes. I doubt that Mr. Pietschker has "a son of Alexander that has won three firsts and specials." There is alse something wrong about the assertion that "the Alexander Kennel is credited with winning the government medals, for breeding the best specimens of the Great Danes each year since 1888," because to my knowledge no medals are awarded by a government; and I think Mr. Pietschker did not exhibit any dogs in 1891 and 1893.

I WAS much interested and amused when I read the note by St. Paul, of New York, in your last issue, and I wish to congratulate brother St. Paul on being one of the greatest mind-readers of the day, as he struck the keynote exactly when he was on 'Change in St. Louis. And while on this subject I want to most emphatically declare that I am "fornlnst" sending dogs on approval unless it should be to a personal acquaintance. Early this last season I received a beautifully written letter; so much so that I was misled into the idea that the writer was an honest sportsman and consequently sent him a high-class thoroughly broken English setter, a dog that several practical sportsman had shot over and about whose field qualities there was no question. I therefore violated my rule and sent the dog to Seaford, Delaware, on approval, as the would-be purchaser said he simply wanted the privilege of examining the dog to see that it was in good shape and ready for business. I presume he had a couple of weeks off and wanted a dog to use in that time without pay, as he kept this dog the full two weeks and returned it to me with expressage unpaid; and up to the present date I have not had a letter from this party explaining why he did not want to keep the dog, or that he was too poor to pay the return express charges, or to even thank me for the use that he had had of a first-class bird dog. From my very limited experience I should not think [illegible] who was regularly in the business [illegible] even if he sent his dogs on approval. I [illegible] a steel engraving, 11 by 14 inchess, of the [illegible] entitled "Royal Setters, time of [illegible] shows three setters on a point, [illegible] landscape view.

DOUBTLESS many of your readers are familiar with the fact of the mastiff dog Beaufort Prince, owned and exhibited by Dr. Lougest, having been replevied at the N. E. K. Club's show in April, 1894, by a man named Fallon, who thought he recognized in Prince a dog that he had lost some time previously. In June last the case was tried, resulting in a verdict for Dr. Lougest. The case was carried up and was tried in the Superior Court, Boston, lasting from Friday, January 4, till Monday afternoon, January 7, before all the evidence was in. The witnesses produced by Dr. Lougest were: Mr. Winchell, who bred the dog and sold him to Mr. Fraleigh as a puppy; the written evidence of Mr. Fraleigh, who testified that he had bought the dog of Mr. Winchell and that he had presented it to Mr. Mead; Mr. Mead, who testified as to how he came in possession of the dog and to the fact of his having sold it to Dr. Lougest, thus showing the career of the dog from birth to the time he was replevied at the Boston show. I myself, who treated Prince professionally when quite a young dog and under whose inspection he passed at the Westminster Kennel Club's shows in 1893 and 1894, also the Boston show in 1894, swore to the identity of the dog, as did also Mr. John Read, and Dr. Stewart of Boston. Notwithstanding all this evidence the jury rendered a verdict against Dr. Lougest, which seems unaccountable.

I WAS astonished to see in Mr. Higginson's letter in last week's AMERICAN FIELD that the Toronto wins are not to be counted by the American Kennel Club. It was one of the distinct understandings with Mr. Vredenburgh last February that these Canadian wins were to "count" whether the agreement then formulated by the joint committee was carried or not, and for the very good reason that the American Kennel Club could not get out of it, as the old agreement of February 1, 1889, was never legally annulled and stands good to this day. I am sorry to have to make this statement public, but if the American Kennel Club, which is supposed to be (and rightly so) the authority on all doggy matters in the United States, will stultify itself by taking such a petty position to the injury of their own exhibitors and with the idea of forcing the Canadian Kennel Club to become part of it, it is far from achieving the object it wishes to attain. Two wrongs will never make a right, and if the American Kennel Club wishes to be an authority it is necessary for it to abide strictly by the laws which it formulates to govern itself. I write thus in order to place the two clubs on their proper footing. No laws can be retrospective. Therefore I say the Toronto wins for the past two years do "count," and if the American Kennel Club refuses to acknowledge them it only adds one more wrong to the list.

WE remember being exhorted in schoolboy days to "work hard, and play hard." It is a mighty good precept to instill into the young mind—though most boys naturally prefer to exert themselves harder on the playground than in the classroom—and Mr. W. L. Washington, of Irish setter fame, is evidently a believer in it. Many of our readers will remember how he made things hum when he entered into the fancy, buying a dog for a mere song one month and selling it for a million (or thereabouts) the next. He is now putting the same energy and vim into the steel manufacturing business which he lately purchased an interest in, judging from the New Castle, Pa., Daily Guardian, which, in a long article on the improvements and enlargement about to be made in the Elliott-Washington Steel Company's plant, says: "When Mr. W. L. Washington, formerly of Pittsburg, became connected with the firm, he proved himself such a hustler in business that the mill could not supply orders even when running night and day, and it soon became apparent to all the members of the firm that a new plant was necessary. They quietly secured the necessary land and now have their plans prepared, and are ready to let contracts for a new plant that will have ten times the capacity of the present mill." The worst we wish him is that he may make his "pile" quickly while he is young, and then live long to enjoy the fruits of his labor.

THE push and energy of the West are proverbial, and the Western Kennel Club Company affords an excellent instance. Its premium list was the first of the lists for the scheduled dog shows to reach this office, although the Denver show is the last of the four arranged for so far, and it is also the first to send in its advertisement, which will appear weekly in our business columns until the date of closing entries. The club is sparing no reasonable trouble or expense in its efforts to make the Denver show of 1895 a thorough success, and as the entry fee is very reasonable—$2, $2 50 or $3, according to breed—owners can well afford to be liberal in their patronage. Mr. E. T. Weiant, who has been attending another kind of show—a bicycle show—in Chicago, says a large local entry is certain and the club hopes to receive a goodly number of entries from outsiders. We hope it will, for the Denver fanciers deserve every possible encouragement for keeping the show going year after year in spite of there being a deficit to make good every time. Many other cities have started into the dog show business like lions and gone out like lambs, but Denver keeps pegging away pluckily. We were glad to hear from Mr. Weiant that all our Denver friends are flourishing like green bay trees, and that the number of well-bred dogs in Denver increases steadily.

MR. L. D. HARGRAVES, a plucky sportsman who deserves better luck than he has been having, writes a few lines from Charlotte, N. C., telling of all the evil things that have befallen the inmates of his kennel. He says: "The old saying that misfortunes never come singly has been forcibly illustrated to me recently. In October my bitch by Cincinnatus—Fly Noble got out of her kennel and was served by a cur. On December 19 my red Irish bitch was run over by a cart and her back was broken. On January 1 my bitch Daisy Furness whelped seven pretty puppies by Paul Gladstone, and in three days all were dead. I am too much a lover of the dog to allow this to discourage me, and have just sent my fine bitch Buena Vista to Gladstone's Boy, accompanied by a check for $50 to pay the stud fee. Quite a number of Northern sportsmen have been in the Old North State this season quail hunting, and have found game about as plentiful as usual. Don't think I have ever seen a Northern sportsman here but who was a reader of the AMERICAN FIELD." One cannot but admire Mr. Hargraves' determination, and it may afford him some encouragement to remind him of that other old saying that it is a long lane that has no turning.

AT a meeting of the executive committee of the English Bloodhound Club it was voted to offer for competition at the coming New York show the following special prizes: The English Bloodhound Club's challenge trophy for the best dog or bitch (donated by Dr. Lougest); a gold medal for best bloodhound dog in the challenge class; a gold medal for best bloodhound bitch in the challenge class; a gold medal for best bloodhound dog in the open class; a gold medal for the best bloodhound bitch in the open class; a silver medal for best bloodhound dog puppy over six months and under twelve months old; a silver medal for best bloodhound bitch puppy over six months and under twelve months old. It was also decided that the annual meeting of the club be held Wednesday, February 20, at 2 p. m., at Madison Square Garden. As the club has been so liberal in its offer of specials it is expected that there will be a large exhibit at New York.

CHARLES H. INNES, Secy.

OUR English exchanges all chronicle the death, on December 14, of Mr. J. F. Smith's celebrated smooth St. Bernard Keeper, after a very short illness, from, it is reported, an internal rupture. Keeper was bred in 1887 by Mr. M. Dur, of Burgdorf, Switzerland; from him purchased by Mr. H. J. Betterton, who, after showing him successfully, sold him to Mr. J. F. Smith, of Sheffield. "Keeper, by Ino—Sans Peur, was," says the Field, "undoubtedly one of the very best smooth-coated St. Bernards we have had, and this he proved by winning the 100-guinea challedge cup on three occasions, and other honors at our chief shows in great numbers. He was likewise a great success at the stud, and a thoroughly healthy dog, who never had a day's illness since he has been a favored inmate of the Sheffield Kennels. Keeper's disposition, too, was of the most kindly, and it has been said of him that a thief might have stolen his collar from his neck without a growl of objection from its wearer."

FROM the real estate firm of Smith & Dickinson, of Wheeling, W. Va., we have received a couple of calendars, long and narrow, each adorned with a picture that will please the dog man. One shows a setter on point and backed by a black pointer; in the other a couple of terriers and a dachshund have treed a cat, and are evidently much excited about it. Mr. G. O. Smith also favors us with a copy of the steel engraving, mentioned in his note, of a picture called "Royal Setters," from which it seems that setters in the time of Louis XIV had rather curious heads, and very long legs, and that their tails were shaved, except for a tuft on the end, in poodle fashion. Mr. Smith has a few copies of this engraving to spare for those that want one.

MR. J. M. AVENT writes me that I have made a mistake in the name of his all-age pointer entry in trials B; he says the name of the dog is Hempstead Don instead of Hempstead Duke. Mr. Avent gave me the names of his entries at Bicknell, and I wrote them on a note head and filled a blank after I got home, and presume I got the names mixed. I start for the trials at West Point the eighteenth.

P. T. MADISON,
Indianapolis, Ind. Secretary U. S. F. T. C.

[Reference to the AMERICAN FIELD of December 1, in which the entry list was published, does not show any pointer entered in Mr. Avent's name; but we find Hempstead Duke entered by the Hempstead Farm, and presumably that is the dog referred to.—ED.]

MR. ARTHUR FROEMBLING, of Chicago, has purchased, through our advertising columns, the young imported St. Bernard bitch Arlington Pansy from Mr. F. E. Lamb, of Arlington, Md.; as a puppy she won in the novice and puppy classes at Aberdeen, Scotland, and will try her luck at the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show in March. Another Chicagoan, Mr. W. R. Bentley, has bought Royal Teddy (imported Drummer—Phyllis), reserve in novice class for pugs at Pittsburg last September, where he was exhibited by Mr. E. Caldwell, of Delaware, O., who bought him as a puppy from the German-Howard Kennels.

A FRIEND of mine recently bought the celebrated beagle trial winner Base from E. H. Rummele Jr., of Sheboygan, Wis., and sent him to me for board. I have since bought him. Base was whelped February 5, 1889, and was bred by W. H. Ashburner; his winnings are: Second in the National Beagle Club's All-Age stakes of 1892; second and first in the Northwestern Beagle Club's All-Age Stakes of 1893 and 1894. I hope now to satisfy my own curiosity as to the relative merits of Buckshot and Base, the former winner in the East and the latter winner in the West last year.

Nanuet, N. Y. H. L. KREUDER.

FOR four or five days a brindled Great Dane bitch in full season has been running at large in and about the north end of this city. She is undoubtedly a lost bitch, and thinking it possible that she has got loose while en route to be bred I take this method of notifying the public, and I hope if she is lost the owner may see this and get his bitch, as she will be all right to breed from at her next season. She does not belong in or about Columbus, I am satisfied of that.

Columbus, O. T. A. HOWARD.

MY King of Kent—Hops bitch, Hops II, died yesterday morning; she whelped a litter of four dogs and four bitches by Strideway on January 4. I am trying to save the puppies. I considered "Hopsey" the best bitch in America, and as her mother is dead no more of this great strain of pointers can be produced. I know now how to sympathize with gentlemen when they lose by death their favorite dog. I feel that in this bitch's death the pointer interests of America have suffered greatly.

Indianapolis, Ind. P. T. MADISON.

MR. FRANK S. ANDERSON, the well-known Chicago fancier, is "feeling good" over a litter of ten by Champion Melac out of his bitch Nora; they were whelped on New Year's Day, and Mr. Anderson writes: "This is the finest litter of Danes I ever saw; they are all brindled, some dark, like their sire, and the others light, favoring their mother. With good luck in raising them they are certain to make prize-winners." We hope his anticipations may be realized.

A TELEGRAM from Mr. Eberhart reads: "Show great success. Three hundred dogs. Great quality." The judging was commenced on Saturday, but very little progress was made. We hear, however, that two old acquaintances, Monk Bishop and Maid Marian, won in the greyhound classes; the former used to belong to the Messrs. Bartels and the latter to Mr. Roger Williams, but both are now the property of Mr. Chas. Robinson of St. Louis.

AT the Duquesne Kennel Club's meeting last month "it was the unanimous opinion of the members that a show should be held as early next year as possible." The question on which the holding of a show in Pittsburg seemed to hinge was whether or not the Grand Central Rink could be obtained. "Next year" is now this year, and we should like to know what the chances are of securing the rink and holding a good show.

THE recent changes in the editorial management of the British Fancier do not seem to have been to its benefit. A journal that filches items, either from our columns or those of our cotemporaries, or that makes a pretense at acknowledgment by prefacing borrowed matter with "the following interesting story in the columns of an American cotemporary," is not improving its tone.

ON January 1 I bought of the Chesterford Park Kennels the celebrated English setter Chesterford Surprise, having seen their advertisement "for sale" in the AMERICAN FIELD. It was a purchase on "unsight and unseen," and as the dog is certainly a fine specimen this is a case where dependence on the judgment and representations of Mr. Elliott was not abused.

Columbus, Ind. WM. J. BECK.

IT is said that a trainer of performing dogs and monkeys, who was recently in Philadelphia with his troupe, has a dog that does the skirt dance in wonderfully perfect fashion. Perhaps he has, but it is one of those things that a fellow would like to see rather than be asked to accept without question; and it would be a very stilty, jerky kind of skirt dance that one would look for.

THE Fox Terrier Chronicle says every effort is being made to get D'Orsay right without amputation of the injured leg, and the famous fox terrier has been sent to a specialist in such matters for treatment. The same journal states that the fox terrier dog Berkeley Wonder has been sold "to go to America, at the long price of £80;" the purchaser's name is not given.

KINDLY discontinue my advertisement of broken setters now running in your columns. I am fairly swamped with inquiries, which shows the standing of the AMERICAN FIELD as an advertising medium. I have sold the dogs and cannot catch up with my correspondence.

Odell, Ill. W. F. VAN BUSKIRK.

WILL readers of the AMERICAN FIELD please give me any information they can in regard to the Pape pointers?

STUD BOOK FUNDS

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Anyone who has undertaken to raise a fund knows that it is extremely difficult to raise money by subscription, except for charitable objects or for value to be received. Your suggestion as to the raising of a fund for the publication of the stud book does not seem at all practicable.

Will not the work of securing enough advertisements to make the stud book pay for itself be sufficiently arduous to warrant the board in allowing Mr. Williams, and those who may be willing to join with him in the responsibility, to retain all the profit they may be able to make out of the publication? Is the American Coursing Board, as a body, in a position to undertake the publication, and is it not, as you intimate, certain to suffer in reputation by going into a business in which it is almost certain to run in debt? As long as the board retains absolute control of the stud book, and the matter to be printed therein, through the appointment by it of the keeper of the stud book, what matters it if the keeper and his associates make money out of the transaction? If the operation proves a profitable one, there may be a lively competition for the position of keeper of the stud book, and this will naturally result in a better stud book.

J. HERBERT WATSON.

NOTES

IT has been our good fortune to make the acquaintance of Mr. J. G. Massey of Rawlins, Wyo., whose interest in coursing and wolf-killing hounds was mentioned in these columns two weeks ago. Mr. Massey is visiting relatives in Illinois and taking a well-earned rest and change from western ranch life, and we enjoyed a couple of pleasant chats with him. It seems that the few lines we wrote about him in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 29 brought him half a dozen letters, from almost as many states, offering to furnish him with dogs that would rid his range of coyotes; some offered greyhounds, and some foxhounds, and one wished to sell him a brace of "staghounds," by which deerhounds were meant undoubtedly. We fear our note was misunderstood; perhaps we did not make its meaning sufficiently plain. "He has not found a reliable coyote killing breed" was not intended to convey the idea that Mr. Massey has not any good wolf dogs, for he has both greyhounds and deerhounds that have many a kill to their credit and do their work in most satisfactory fashion. Only last week he received a letter from his foreman saying he had taken the dogs out the day before he wrote and they had accounted for five coyotes. Mr. Massey has collies, deerhounds, borzois and greyhounds on his range, and has found some greyhounds excellent on coyotes, but he would like if possible to have more size without sacrificing speed and courage. On his return home he intends to breed his borzoi bitch By'stra to an extraordinarily large brindled greyhound owned at Laramie, Wyo., by a Mr. Peter Fisher. This dog, Mr. Massey says, stands 30 inches (good) at the shoulder and weighs 105 pounds! Other measurements are length (tip to tip) 72 inches, around chest 33 inches, around loins 23 inches, around thigh 19 inches. The present owner of this enormous dog got him from a Scotchman passing through Laramie; the Scot had two, the other being a black and equally as large, and declared that he had the dogs' pedigree, though Mr. Peter Fisher, it appears, did not obtain it. From the union of this big greyhound and his borzoi bitch Mr. Massey hopes to get something unusually good as coyote and wolf dogs, and it will be interesting to know to what extent these hopes are fulfilled. Mr. Massey says the borzoi bitch weighs seventy-five pounds and has been tried with the Messrs. Bartels' greyhounds to have a nice turn of speed, so if the big greyhound is not deficient in this respect their puppies should go a good pace.

MR. WATSON'S letter puts the stud book question in an entirely new light. We had no idea that the American Coursing Board intended to farm out the publishing of its stud book. Such being the case we have little or nothing further to say, beyond expressing [illegible] the advisability of such a course, which per[illegible] be allowed to do, although it is none of our [illegible] course the board may pursue. Mr. Watson [illegible] calls the hard work he had as chairman of [illegible] appointed to raise $2,500 for the internati[illegible] 1893, and we admit that raising a fund by general subscription is not the easiest thing in the world, but there is a vast difference between trying to raise, say, a couple of hundred dollars and twenty-five hundred. Also, there are more people interested in coursing now than two years ago, and a great many more would get value received from the stud book—from the very fact that there was a stud book—than ever expected to participate in the international meeting. Furthermore, we believe the raising of a fund by small subscriptions would create a greater general interest in the stud book than the undertaking of its publication as a paying enterprise by private individuals. However, it is not our affair, as we have already said; but we fail to see, if the publication is likely to pay so handsomely as to make the keepership a coveted position, why the American Coursing Board, should it undertake the publishing of the stud book, be "going into a business in which it is almost certain to run into debt." Coursing men probably would be more liberal in the way of subscriptions and advertisements if they looked upon the stud book as a national affair, in which they felt a proprietary interest, than as a semi-private enterprise, as which they are apt to regard it.

MR. D. J. O'CALLAGHAN, of St. Louis, a gentleman and a good sportsman who would meet with a hearty welcome on the coursing plains of the West, writes: "In your issue of even date, referring to the Altcar Club's advertisement, you state in the last sentence of the article that you cannot understand why an event in which can be entered greyhounds whelped perhaps a year ago, or more, is a produce stake, etc. The words 'or more' tempt me to ask you for information as to the maximum age eligible for entry for the Altcar Produce Stakes." The words "at time of entry" should have been inserted after "or more" in order to avoid misunderstanding, and it is no wonder Mr. O'Callaghan seeks enlightenment. Saplings whelped on or after January 1 of last year being eligible, and the entries not closing until March 1, some of the youngsters may be hard on fourteen months old when they are entered.

A SHORT letter from Dr. Van Hummell, who leaves Indianapolis on Thursday of this week for New York, where he will spend a few days before sailing for England, says: "I shall try to attend the South Lancashire meeting February 5 and the Eastern Counties on the 7th, and then the Waterloo Cup; in other words I intend to know something about English coursing, coursers and greyhounds when I come back. I wish you could go with me. I am going to take a white-tail and a black-tail with me, and get permission to turn them down on Altcar Plains." We do not wish to discourage the Doctor in his praiseworthy attempt to introduce the American hare or jack-rabbit into England, but it is ten to one that they will not survive the voyage, and if they do it is about the same odds that the sudden change of climate will prove too much for one or both.

MR. MICHAEL ALLEN is feeling pretty good just now. He has got a litter of two dogs and six bitches, whelped January 3, out of the young bitch Maid of Honor (imp. Miller's Rob—imp. Nettlefield), and another of three dogs and six bitches, whelped January 2, out of Grace O'Malley (Master Rich—Hawthorne Belle); both litters are sired by imp. Jim o' the Hill. The bitches were served the same day, Maid in the morning and Grace in afternoon, but the latter though the last to receive attention was the first to whelp. Both seem to have timed their affairs to a nicety.

MR. D. C. LUSE advertises in our business columns that his entire kennel of greyhounds is on the market. He has had several imported bitches and dogs in his kennel and among their produce some bargains should be found. It is hard to believe, though, that Mr. Luse will abandon all active interest in coursing; as October approaches he will probably "get the fever" again, as Dr. Van Hummell puts it.

IN the report of the Kenmore Coursing Club's annual business meeting, held at Goodland on October 18, the names of Dr. Q. Van Hummell and Messrs. D. C. Luse and M. Allen were given as the newly elected executive committee. This was not correct, as the last named gentleman declined to be nominated, and the minutes show that the committee elected consists of Dr. Q. Van Hummell, Mr. D. C. Luse and Mr. William Walker Jr.

MR. C. H. VINTON of Redfield, S. D., was in Chicago for a few hours on Monday of this week, but we did not have the pleasure of seeing him. Mr. A. C. Lighthall of Denver also called recently, but we were so unfortunate as to be out at the time; he should have some news about Bonnie Belle before long.

MR. H. C. LOWE closes an interesting letter with the remarks: "I think your idea on the stud book question is a good one. I shall be pleased to contribute to it. Prince Charlie is looking well and running in great style, as true as a young one."

A VERY important item was omitted last week from the Altcar Coursing Club's advertisement of its produce stakes. We refer to the secretary-treasurer's address; it is 625 Cooper Building, Denver, Colo., and should be made note of.

IT looks as if the repurchase of Simonian might become a cause célèbre, for a press cablegram states that the Russian grand duke, who sold the dog to Colonel North, intends to institute a suit for damages against the [illegible] millionaire.

GREYHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by the American Coursing Kennels, Great Bend, Kan.

Rifle

PERFECTION IN RIFLES

SALEM, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—That one, at least, of our American manufacturers has reached the above point in the production of sporting rifles must be evident to all who have used and made the rifle a study for the past few years. Nothing has done more to convince me of this fact than the table published by the Winchester Repeating Arms Co. in its late November catalog. This table gives the velocity, penetration and trajectory of about all the bullets manufactured by this company and shot from Winchester rifles which might be termed suitable for sporting purposes. That this table is worthy of careful study by all who use a sporting rifle I am sure. While in the main this table will be found correctly and carefully prepared, and of great benefit to sportsmen, there has crept into it at one point a slight error, and at just the point it would not be expected.

However, this error is so plain that it can in no way affect the great benefit of the table as a whole. One benefit resulting from a careful study of this table is that to a certain extent it will remove that element of chance which enters into all long range shooting at game, and such shooting with some rifles contains little but chance when shot at estimated distances much beyond the natural point blank. Another point that will be of great benefit to the owner or intending purchaser of a rifle who has not the time or place for experiment is, that the gun may be so sighted as to give it an artifical point blank at the utmost distance, that will prevent over-shooting at any intermediate distance. The greater the distance we can get this artificial or second point blank (I believe there is no natural point blank) in a rifle, and at the same time keep the ball so near the line of sight up to that distance as to prevent over-shooting, the better the rifle for a sporting arm. That there is some difference of opinion as to how high above the line of sight a ball may with safety be allowed to go before reaching the point blank, is true. To my mind, a perfect rifle for big game should be so sighted that its ball will always be within 2½ inches of the line of sight up to point blank, and I would only allow this rise of ball in order to get the point blank at as great a distance as possible, in order to prevent being called on to estimate distances. Or, say we select a rifle used in the table spoken of above. The .45-125-300 has a trajectory of 2.19 inches in 100 yards. At about 50 yards the ball is 2.19 inches above the line of sight. At 100 yards the point blank is a center. At about 140 yards it is about the same distance below the line of sight that it was above at 50 yards. What is the result in using such a rifle on game? Just this: We can use the same uniform sight at any distance up to 140 yards and be sure of hitting the vital parts of any game as large as a small deer. There is no elevation of sights or guessing at distances; and I will say here that when you get much beyond 100 yards and begin to estimate distance and elevate sights, you are entering upon a sea of disappointment in shooting at game.

To my mind the perfect rifle for big game is one that does not require any elevation of sights or estimation of distance up to 140 yards. Or, in other words, a rifle that will shoot in a 5-inch ring from the muzzle up to 140 yards, using the same uniform sight throughout the range. The Winchester Co. is now making five rifles according to the table that will do this—the .38 90 217, the .40-110-260, the .45-90 300, the .45-125 300, and the .50-110-300. Such a rifle's point blank should be at 100 yards. Its ball would be in the upper edge of the ring at about 50 yards, in the center at 100 yards, and in the lower edge of the ring at 140 yards. Some may think that a rifle that will only shoot through a set of 5-inch rings up to 140 yards is not an extraordinary rifle. To such I will say that I am only speaking of the trajectory or curve of the ball and its ability to hit or miss game, for I believe all of these rifles are accurate enough for any sporting purpose. But say we take any one or all of the above rifles and shoot them as they would be shot by a good game shot. There is not one of them but what will shoot in a 2½-inch ring up to 140 yards with the same sight at all distances and without holding off the ring at any point, simply shifting from bottom at 50 yards to center of ring at 100 yards and to top of ring at 140 yards. This seems to me to be about perfection in a sporting rifle, when we take into consideration the terrific killing power of the charge used.

Another point in the table that seems to be worthy of note is the trajectory of the express balls at 300 yards. Contrary to the belief of some, these balls show a very swift and steady flight, even at the longer ranges. Another thing that should be remembered in comparing the guns of this table is, that the penetration in most cases is not an illustration of the killing force as applied to game. For example: The .50 110 300 would drop a deer almost in its tracks if hit in almost any part of the body. This gun has a penetration of eight boards. The .236 United States navy rifle has a penetration of sixty-two boards, but a deer shot with one of them would run nearly all day unless struck directly in the vitals. But even with the express guns a solid ball is at times to be preferred, and both hollow and solid balls should be used as the case may demand.

NOTES

THE Columbia Rifle Club of Rochester, N. Y., and the Missouri Rifle Club of St. Louis, Mo., have arranged for a series of three gallery matches. In the first match the St. Louis club's target will be used. In the second match the Rochester club's target will be used, and in the third match both clubs will use the Standard American target. The shooting will be done on the same evening by both clubs. When the shooting is over the result will be telegraphed to St. Louis to Rochester and from [illegible]. The same night the targets used by each club will be sealed and sent to the [illegible] not a member of either club will [illegible] each contest. The first match was [illegible] the second will be shot on February 14, and the third, or last match, will be shot sometime in March, date not yet fixed. The teams will consist of ten men each, and each man will fire twenty shots.

AT a meeting recently of the Philadelphia Rifle Club officers as follows were elected for 1895: President, William Goizer; vice-president, Jacob Roth; treasurer Jacob Weber; secretary, Henry Eggeling; first marksman, Chas. Molter; chairmen of park, building and entertainment committees, Frederick Ohlemann, Geo. Weisbred, Jacob Roth. The treasurer announced the receipt of $110,359.05 from the city for the club's old park and that after all liabilities of the club had been canceled and all shares, with accrued interest, in the old park had been paid off, there would remain in the club's treasury some $13,000.

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of January 5, A. B. W., of Salt Lake City, Utah, discusses a question in which I am interested. I have had similar experience with the .45-90, which is all right for accuracy and penetration, but does not appear to give enough shock to big game. But A. B. W. quits just as his letter promises to tell what I want know, viz.: What is the effect of his 500 grain bullet? Has he ever tried it? Does the 405-grain factory ammunition knock 'em out? Will he not write again and give me more light?

Las Cruces, N. M. WAPITI.

THE North Shore Rifle Club of this city held its annual meeting on January 7, and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Mr. L. Bowers; secretary and treasurer, Mr. H. Ahrens; captain, Mr. Th. Wagner; rifle inspector, Mr. M L. Bowers. The club adopted a new constitution and shooting rules. The weekly shoots will be held regularly hereafter every Thursday evening.

Ryrie; treasurer, R. F. Seely; captain, G. H. Lane. The AMERICAN FIELD was unanimously voted the official organ of the club.

MR. JOHN B. DOMM, formerly a resident of Cincinnati, O., was accidentally shot and killed on January 3, at St Augustine, Fla., while at rifle practice. Mr. Domm was a soldier in the regular army and had he lived until March 4 would have served out his enlistment and been discharged.

CINCINNATI, O.—The following scores were made by the Cincinnati Rifle Association January 13, at its range. Conditions: 200 yards, off hand, at the Standard target. The small a tendance was due to the cold weather and snowstorm. The bullseye was scarcely perceptible at times owing to the falling snow. The scores:

ED. BARLOW BACKS HIMSELF TO KILL 82 BIRDS OUT OF 100

SEATTLE, WASH.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Ed. Barlow of Tacoma, a member of the Tacoma Rod and Gun Club, and one of the crack shots of that city, has backed himself to the extent of $100, wagering "Stevens," who is backing the birds, that he can kill 82 out of any 100 birds picked out by the latter. Mr. W. A. Hardy, of the Hardy-Hall Arms Co., of this city, has been decided on as referee, and Dr. P. A. Purdy, also of this city, will be trap puller.

The wager will be decided here on January 20, when another live bird shoot will be held at our West Seattle grounds. American Shooting Association rules will govern Barlow's shooting.

In my last letter to you I announced a shoot which was to come off here on New Year's Day but owing to the Tacoma boys holding a shoot we attended theirs in a body. It was a great success and Mr. W. A. Eberly, who managed the affair, did everything possible to entertain visitors.

No doubt Tacoma as well as other cities, will be well represented here on January 20, as sweepstake shooting will occupy a large part of the day.

C. F. GRAFF.

A NEW SCORE BOOK

The attention of gun clubs is invited to the fact that the American Field Publishing Co. has just issued one of the best and most complete score books ever offered to the trap shooting fraternity and which only needs to be seen to be appreciated. Among its points of excellence, and which are not all embraced in any other score book that we have seen, are a cover which folds back out of the way when in use and forms a good pad upon which to do the scoring, a form of constitution, by-laws and rules for organizing a gun club, the American Shooting Association rules for both live bird and inanimate target shooting (which are often needed on a club's grounds), Hurlingham rules for live bird shooting, Long Island rules, and 150 score sheets with carbon paper for making duplicates. Besides, the book is a little larger than those most in use, permitting the scoring of thirty shots to each man and twenty-four men to a page, yet it is not so large as to be inconvenient to handle. Although embracing so many desirable features, it will be forwarded postpaid to any address in the United States for one dollar. Every gun club should have one of them.

DR. CARVER ACCEPTS MR. WEBSTER'S CHALLENGE

KANSAS CITY, MO., January 5, 1895.

EDITOR AMERCAN FIELD:—In reply to Mr. John Webster, of Manchester, Eng., who I see challenges any man in America to shoot for one thousand dollars at 100 Blue Rocks (I suppose, of course, he means to shoot in England), I will say that I accept his proposition and will shoot for one thousand dollars or as much more as he wishes. I shall expect him to deposit all of the one thousand dollars in the hands of the London Sportsmen or some other responsible paper. As soon as he does this I will name date and at once go to England. I simply want sixty days' notice. Or he can name time and place, giving me a time to get over there.

DR. W. F. CARVER,
Champion Shot of the World.

NOTES

THE AMERICAN FIELD desires to acknowledge a very pleasant call last week from Mr. J. B. Julius of Manson, Ia., president of the Manson Gun Club. Mr. Julius says that the Manson Gun Club, in shooting strength, is one of the strongest gun clubs in Iowa, and although the club is not so large numerically as some, its members are all enthusiastic sportsmen, and that as their town is located in a splendid game section they probably do as much if not more shooting than any other club in the state. Speaking of the prospects for prairie chickens another Fall, Mr. Julius says that hundreds of old birds are left over from last year, and that with a good hatching season they will have the finest chicken shooting next Fall they have had for years. He also said that they have fine snipe and duck shooting, both in the Spring and Fall, as the lakes and marshes near them are great resorts for these birds. Some of the lakes have been sown with wild rice and they have some of the finest canvas-back duck shooting to be had anywhere in the West. The Manson Gun Club is one of the few clubs in the country that throws wide open its doors and invites everybody to come to its tournaments, barring none and handicapping no one. its members feeling themselves competent to compete with the best trap shots in the country.

I WAS present at a meeting of the board of directors of the Forrester Gun Club of this city, called to arrange for their annual tournament, which will be held February 20, 21 and 22. They arranged a very attractive program and took up the question of dropping for place, which is so much discussed at present. It was decided that it would not be allowed, and upon my suggestion, adopted the plan of requesting each contestant to sign a "roll of honor" agreeing not to drop a bird or target intentionally in any of the contests in which he might enter, and to assist the management in making the shoot fair and aboveboard. If all will agree to shoot on the square the result will be that anyone who does not live up to his agreement will be requested to put up his gun and leave. They also determined to build a new trap pit and house like the one owned by the Rochester (N. Y.) Gun Club, and fit same up with the latest traps and pulls in time for the tournament. When these improvements are made they will have very complete grounds in every respect.

Davenport, Ia. PAUL NORTH.

THE annual meeting of the Cleveland Gun Club was held on the evening of January 8, when the following officers were elected: President, W. R. Huntington; vice-president, S. S. Saffold; treasurer, Fred A. Tamblyn; secretary, A. M. Allyn; financial secretary, F. H. Wallace; captain, W. H. Tamblyn. The reports for the past year showed an increasing interest in trap shooting, the average attendance at the bi-monthly shoots surpassing any previous year. The club is prosperous and progressive, and steps are now being taken to reincorporate and issue stock, thus placing it on a thoroughly business basis. A proposition is now before the club relative to consolidation of the East End club with the Cleveland, and, should this be effected, we will have one of the strongest organizations of the kind in the country.

Cleveland, O. A. M. A.

THE Little Rock Shooting Association will hold its Winter tournament on January 24 and 25. Live birds and targets will be used. Fifteen dollars will be given as average prizes as follows: To the shooter making the best average each day $3, and the one making the next best average $2; while the shooter making the best average in the two days will receive $5. Two cents will be charged for targets and a lunch will be served on the grounds gratis to the shooters. The equipments of the club are modern and the grounds are as fine as there are in the country, having a sky background and being easy of access. Everything will be done to make the shoot attractive and interesting.

Little Rock, Ark. PAUL R. LITZKE.

THE first bi-montbly tournament of the Union Gun Club will be held on the club's grounds near Springfield, N J., January 22 and

23. Average money will be divided among those who are first, second, third and fourth best, shooting in all the events for the two days. A variety of events from 10 to 25 targets each are given for both days. A division of four moneys for ten or more entries; under ten entries, three moneys. Price of targets will be two cents each. Any shooter in a tie may withdraw his share of purse. Loaded shells and refreshments can be had on the grounds. Expert traps and pulls will be used.

MR. W. P. BARNUM, traveling representative of the Clover Trap & Target Co., of Fredonia, N. Y., made a business call at the AMERICAN FIELD office on Thursday of last week. The company Mr. Barnum represents is a "new kichmond in the field" of trap and target manufacturers and his business here was mainly to place an advertisement in the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD. Mr. Barnum claims that the targets manufactured by his company are equal to the best, while he thinks their trap second to none, it possessing several excellent features and is so constructed as to stand the severest kind of use.

THE Boston Shooting Association held its annual meeting Monday evening, January 7, preceded by an all-day shoot at Wellington, Mass., with 25 members participating. The annual dinner was held in the banquet hall of the club house at 5 o'clock p. m., after which, officers were elected as follows: President, Captain E. B. Wadsworth; vice-president, William Pray; treasurer, O. R. Dickey; secretary, Herbert Federhen. The above and W. A. Sanborn and B. L. Woodward executive committee. O. R. Dickey, captain and superintendent.

Boston, Mass. E. B. WADSWORTH.

THE program of the midwinter tournament to be held at Utica, N. Y., on February 5, 6 and 7, by Messrs. Gates and Fulford, announces eight events at inanimate targets for each of the first two days, and the Central New York handicap at 20 live birds per man, $10 entrance, birds extra, handicap rise, four moneys, for the third day. American Shooting Association rules will govern all shooting and the firing points will be so protected that no matter what the weather may be the shoot will go on.

MR. ELMER E. SHANER and Mr. A. H. King, representatives of W. G. Clark of Altoona and M. C. Jones of Pittsburg, met a few days since and arranged two matches between Clark and Jones. Each match is to be at 100 birds for $100 a side. The first race will take place at Altoona on January 23 and the second at Pittsburg on January 30. "Old Hoss" was named as referee and stakeholder. As both men are good shots the contest promises to be a close and exciting one.

MR. PAUL NORTH, traveling representative of the Cleveland Target and Trap Co., visited the trade in Chicago the latter part of last week. Mr. North is the same "hustler" for business as of yore, and believes that it is not only the early bird, but the industrious one as well, that gets the most worms. By this we do not mean to infer that Paul has worms, for we do not believe he has, but that he is out for business and if hustling will get it he will have his part.

THE Flushing Shooting Club will give a 50 live bird handicap (Flushing championship for 1895) shoot on its grounds at Flushing, Long Island, January 17. The following are the conditions: 50 live birds, 50 yards boundary, handicap rise. Cost of birds and an entrance fee of $25 per gun. The purse will be divided 40 per cent. to first, 25 per cent. to second, 15 per cent. to third, and 10 per cent. to fourth. The club will give a trophy, value $50, to winner.

THE live bird match at Cedar Rapids, Ia., on January 11, between Dr. W. F. Carver, Geo. Henderson, A. Booth, J. M. Lobensteiu and Mr. Hefer, the former shooting against the latter four, 100 birds a side, had to be postponed when hardly half finished on account of the severe weather. Only 35 birds were shot, the score standing at that time 28 for Carver to 30 for the home contingent. The match will be finished some day this week, weather permitting.

MR. CHARLES E. WILLARD, Western representative of the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Co., and Mr. Mark Cummings, left Chicago on Saturday of last week for an extended hunting trip in Texas. Mr. Willard made a similar trip a year ago, and the fast friends he made in the South at that time will see to it that he and his friend do not lack for royal sport while on this trip.

AMONG the many callers at the office of the AMERICAN FIELD the past week was Mr. Henry Brevoort Cannon, representing the firm of Hartley & Graham of New York. Mr. Cannon had been attending the great bicycle exhibit at Chicago, and although well pleased with his trip was not sorry that the show, like all public exhibitions, had a limit.

IN the shoot between the Leavenworth Gun Club and the West Side Gun Club of Topeka, Kan., for the state championship team trophy, which took place at Topeka, on January 10, the Leavenworth team was victorious, the scores being Leavenworth 194, Topeka 185. Each team shot at 250 targets, 30 singles and 10 pairs per man.

THE fourth annual meeting of the New Jersey Trap Shooters' League will take place on January 21, at 1 o'clock p. m., at the office of the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., No. 312 Broadway, New York. Clubs not already members are cordially invited to affiliate and send a delegate to this meeting.

Newark, N. J. W. R. HOBART, Secretary.

THE Chippewa Gun Club is the name of a new club recently organized in Brooklyn, N. Y. The club has its own grounds and trap shooting fixtures, and will shoot one or twice a month at inanimate targets and live sparrows. Its board of managers consists of President Wm. Ehrichs, J. C. Becker, Henry Ehrichs and John A. Hatter.

THE New Utrecht Gun Club of New York will hold its fifth shoot for the E. C. Powder Cup on Saturday, January 19, at Woodlawn, and on Wednesday, January 23, its second special pigeon sweepstake. This latter event is at 25 live birds per man, open to members of the club only, entrance $5, class shooting.

THE Empire Target Company publish in our business columns a number of testimonials from well known firms and sportsmen, attesting the excellence of their targets, and agencies have been established all over the country, as will be seen by reference to their advertisement, to which the reader's attention is directed.

IT is said that another match will soon be shot between Mr. Frank Class of Morristown, N. J., and Mr. Edward Hill of Trenton, the race to be at 100 live birds per man for $200 a side, Class to shoot at 30 yards rise and Hill at 28 yards. Mr. Hill won the last match between these men by one bird.

MR. CHAS. ANTOINE of the firm of Von Lengerke & Antoine, of Chicago, is this week visiting relatives and friends in New York. His many Eastern friends are receiving him very cordially, which undoubtedly makes him realize that life is not all "a fleeting show."

THE Crescent Gun Club of Brooklyn, N. Y., has leased 2,500 acres of land in the famous Berkshire Hills, Mass., which will be known as the Crescent Gun Club preserve. Mr. Walter D. Gilman is president of the club and Mr. Louis C. Hopkins secretary-treasurer.

ROBERT A. WELCH, of the Riverton Gun Club of Philadelphia, has been declared the winner of the Riverton challenge plate for 1894, he having defended it successfully against all comers for the requisite length of time.

A NEW gun club, to be known as the Zulu Gun Club, was organized at Keokuk, Ia., on January 1. The club starts off with seventeen charter members and bright prospects for its prosperity, growth and usefulness.

THE recent performances of Capt. G. W. Coulston, of the New Utrecht Gun Club, before the traps, has been of such character that he has been transferred to Class A, and he is now recognized as one of the club's best shots.

A LIVE bird match, 25 birds each man, is said to be one of the fixtures that will soon be decided at Dexter Park, between W. D. Gilman, president of the Crescent Gun Club, and Geo. W. Coulston of the New Utrecht Club.

IN the live bird match at Rochester, N. Y., on January 14, between Capt. J. L. Brewer and Mr. S. Glover of Rochester, 100 birds per man for $100 a side, Mr. Glover proved the victor, scoring 91 to Capt. Brewer 90.

OWING to the great number of shooting events in this issue, several interesting letters are held over till next week, including one from the Knoxville Gun Club, one from Gaucho, and others.

THE Amityville Rod and Gun Club of Amityville, L. I., has recently been organized. A sweepstakes, $25 a corner, is said to be one of the first events to be decided.

THE Findlay (O.) Gun Club will hold an all-day tournament on Washington's Birthday, February 22, which will be open to all comers.

THE CLIMAX GUN CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

A hard rain sometimes runs shooters from the score and breaks up a tournament, but it did not have this effect on the first day of the Climax Gun Club's tournament near Plainfield, N. J., on January 10. A more disagreeable day could hardly be imagined; a driving rain right in the face of the shooters, and cold enough to benumb the fingers so it was difficult to pull the trigger correctly, was the greeting of all before the traps.

The management, "Tee Kay" and "Dutchy" Smith, must have felt highly complimented at the attendance under such unfavorable circumstances. Unquestionably it was equal to any shoot given this season, and would have proved the event of the Winter under more favorable conditions. The dates were claimed only a short time ago, but the club was ready to meet all conditions of weather by the erection of a good club house, well arranged the only weak spot in the arrangements being the cashier's office, and that from the goodness of heart of those in authority.

The events of the day proved the popularity of this club—always a popular one. Well, who were there? A good lot of fellows, and good shots all: Rolla Heikes, fresh from the West, met a hearty reception. Rolla did not get the "hang" of the throwing for a match or two, but finally landed right on top of them. A strong delegation came from the East. Scan the list: Messrs. Dickey, Wheeler, "Le Roy" Kennerson, the Bennett brother, and last, but not by any means the least, Mascroft. Jolly and hearty as he always is, his cup was full of joy, and running over, when he defeated "Tee Kay" in the 25-bird race, as their scores were to settle another special match between them. Our jovial friend vows "Tee Kay" cannot shoot "a little bit," and he says he will never feel worried over the after events of his life if he has no harder job to "tackle" than to beat Tom Keller. Well, it is no easy job for anyone to beat friend Mascroft, without you can get him a little 'nervous." Try him some of you that think you can shoot. The others of the Eastern delegation were a happy lot with confidence in their ability to keep "tag" in a game of shoot. Another incident in this 25-bird shoot was the flight of a bevy of quails across the grounds and near the traps while the shooting was in progress. The home talent was well represented by such shots as Hobart, Hebbard, Van Dyke and Drake.

Following the first day's target shooting come the live bird events for to-morrow. To-night the shooters will be entertained in Plainfield, as two boxes are engaged and at their disposal at the principal place of amusement.

On Friday, the day set apart for live bird shooting, the shoot was a continued success. About every shooter of the previous day was present, and they were strongly reinforced by others who make a "specialty" of live birds. The attendance was by far the best of the season and the popularity of the management and "hosts," "Tee Kay" and "Dutchy," was proven by the manner in which their shooting friends stood by them. The "hoss" shoot proved a success in way of entries, and as the fee was $1, birds extra, each shooter was limited to five entries. Such shots as Heikes and others thought one chance enough. Others proposed a "cinch" on the horse by taking five, the total entries making seventy-five. It proved a rather tedious shoot, as the birds were not good enough to thin the ranks of shooters fast. A large number of the birds had to be "scared" up after being released, some of them proving to be good ones for all that. The handicapping did not prove thoroughly satisfactory. It had a wide range, from 25 to 32 yards, Mr. Lee and Mr. Elliott occupying the extremes respectively. The scores show the result.

LARCHMONT YACHT CLUB SHOOT

The principal event in the shooting world in and around New York was the event inaugurated by Mr. J. P. Knapp and carried to so successful a conclusion by him as one of the leading members of the Larchmont Yacht Club. Mr. Knapp is known to the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD through the nom-de-plume of J. Palmer, and has figured under this name for some time past. Now that he has won the amateur championship in such gallant style, and by wonderfully good shooting, he should no longer object to being known by our readers, as it is an honor obtained by few that a person so young in years, and young in actual service of the gun—taking up shooting about two years since—should so ably lead some of the veterans, and those who have been in the front ranks for several years past. But to the conditions that controlled this event. They were: Sweepstakes of $100 each, at 100 birds apiece; all to stand at 30 yards: for amateur championship and a silver trophy offered by the Larchmont Yacht Club; 10 per cent of the sweep to go to the club; 50 of the remainder to the winner, 25 per cent. to the second, 25 per cent. to be divided be ween third and fourth.

Out of twelve nominations three paid forfeit and nine faced the traps, viz., J. "Palmer," George Work, L. T. "Davenport," C. Fergueson Jr., Fred G. Moore, W. S. Edey, Capt. A. W. Money, Dr. Wm. Wynn and E. C. "Madison." It took two days, Friday and Saturday, January 11 and 12, to finish the event, as the shooting did not begin until the arrival of the 10:06 train from New York, which made it about 11 o'clock each day before the first gun was fired.

Aside from a chilly atmosphere the weather each day was as good as could be expected for the season of the year. The conduct of the match was exceptionally good from start to finish; lots of good birds, a large number of them as good as ever left a trap; prompt trappers and several retrievers all contributing to the smooth conduct of the match. The attendance was good on the first day, large on the second, and besides the friends who cheered the several contestants, there was a large contingent drawn by the exceptionally good work that was being done.

Mr. "Palmer's" work cannot be too highly complimented. His work on the first day was exceptionally good. Scoring 46 out of 50 on the first day, with three of the four scored against him dead out of bounds, gave him a lead, though small, that could not be overcome on the second day, as he really killed every bird shot at and had only one bird scored as lost, a bird which he and every looker-on thought killed dead with the first barrel, not using his second at all, but which fluttered out of bounds when the dog was sent to retrieve it. This made an actual kill of 99 out of the hundred, with four dead out of bounds, leaving a score of 95, and leading his nearest opponent, Mr. George Work, by six birds. His performance was admired by all; and no matter how good the bird there seemed but one result from his unerring aim. After his failure to secure the only bird he lost on the second day by non-use of his second barrel, he observed the caution usually practised by following with the second, no matter if it seemed entirely useless.

Mr. Geo. Work, who followed at the score, did even work throughout the match, scoring 44 and 45, respectively, the first and second days, losing two on the first and one on the second day, and making his actual kills on each day the same. His misses on the second day were principally on birds that did not seem the most difficult ones. Mr. Work, who won second, was closely pushed by Mr. "Davenport," winner of third place, Mr. Work leading him only one bird, the gain he made on the first day. On the second day both men scored 45. All present agreed that Mr. "Davenport" had the worst of it in hard birds on the first day, and only maintained himself by wonderfully clever work. He lost four dead out of bounds. His final score was 88; excellent under the circumstances.

Fred Moore and C. Fergueson Jr., the New Utrecht expert, tied on 86 for fourth place, Moore seemingly losing it by losing his ninety-ninth bird; but Mr. Fergueson dropped his one hundredth, which again evened up matters. Mr. Fergueson lost in totals three dead out of bounds, Mr. Moore, more unfortunate, had six. This shows a pretty race, after first place was so decidedly determined, between Messrs Work, "Davenport," Fergueson and Moore, for the remaining honors, as only three birds formed the difference between them. The race between the veterans, Dr. Wynn and Capt. Money, was interesting to the finish, the respective admirers of each backing them, and it caused almost constant inquiry to know their respective standing. The Doctor held Mr. Money safely by five birds at the end of the first day, and at the seventy-fifth round had a lead of four, which seemed safe enough; but Capt. Money had a reserve force left, and landed twenty-three of his last twenty-five, the Doctor losing seven, losing to the Captain by one bird on a score of 79 to 80.

Mr. Edey lost all his chances of winning by his score of 36 on the first day, the lowest made except by Mr. "Madison." On the second day he shot in fine form, his work quite as good as the most of them, and his good work was frequently applauded. Mr. Madison's best score of any division of 25 was 18, which took him to last place; notwithstanding, he shot to the end of the race, with a total of 65. The company was apparently entirely too hot for him.

Among those who witnessed the contest were Judge Gildersleeve, J. Otto Dormer, Frank Beard, Arthur Duane, De Forest Manice, Jordon L. Mott Jr., Augustus Monroe, J. F. Lovejoy, Wilson Marshall, Randolph Hurry, Lloyd Taylor, H. P. Benjamin, W. H. Harper, G. I. Seney, A. C. Marshall, Chas. A. Boyd, D. J. Jackson, R. M. Bull, Archibald Le Roy, George Barnes, Dr. John H. Woodbury, Jas. S. Taylor, W. T. Wilcox, C. F. Ulrich, Archie Pell, Paul L. Theband, Wm. S. Alley and Geo. A. Cormack.

It is hard for anyone who did not witness the contest to correctly judge of the performance of the contestants. Hard luck in hard birds, drivers, twisters, towerers and circlers, some getting out of bounds no matter how good the aim and how hard hit, are things to be seen to properly measure the merit of the shooter under all these circumstances which at times cling to one and then shift to another. After all it was a race to be remembered, and one thing in future contests to be thought of is, that Mr. "Palmer" is one to be considered, as he is handling, at present, a wonderful gun.

Mr. John Hoey, as is usual on such occasions, was the referee. His rulings were never questioned. In fact, I have never, in the years of his service that I have seen, known them to be. Following is the summary of the match.

NEW JERSEY TRAP SHOOTERS' LEAGUE

(Secretary's Report, 1894.)

During the period covered by this report there has been one meeting of the delegates and five of the governing committee. At the former, which was held at the office of the W. Fred Quimby Co., the clubs represented were the Union, Endeavor, South Side and Maplewood. Mr. Miller of the Union club presided. Applications for membership were received from the Climax, of Plainfield, and Brunswick, of New Brunswick, and these clubs were duly elected members.

Mr. P. A. Jeaneret of Bolling Springs club, the president of the previous year, tendered his resignation, which was accepted with regrets. The election of officers and governing committee resulted in the choice of Messrs. R. M. Petit, of the Brunswick, as president; W. R. Hobart, South side, secretary-treasurer; E. D. Miller, Union, manager; C. W. McPeek, Endeavor, and S. B. Tillow, Maplewood, with the above officers, form the governing committee.

The first tournament of the season was to take place in February, and the choice of club to hold the same fell to the Endeavor Gun Club of Jersey City. The other meetings were held on the grounds of the various clubs, decided by drawing of the clubs, to hold the following tournaments.

The tournaments held during the year were February 28, on the grounds of the Endeavor club, at which all the teams were present and 4,205 targets were thrown; March 22 Maplewood had all the teams present and 3,225 targets were scored. South Side drew the next tournament, which was held on April 26 and 27, the teams shooting on the second day. The targets thrown were 2,185 first day and 4,421 second day, or a total for the two days of 6,606. May 9 was chosen by the Climax club for its day, when all the teams were on hand and about 3,500 targets thrown. On June 26 the Union club had the call, with one absent team (Myrtle Park), when 2,710 targets were thrown. No tournament was held in July on account of the warm weather and absence of shooters. Brunswick drew the date, but exchanged with Myrtle Park, which club held the tournament on August 30 with four teams present. About 2,000 targets were thrown. The Brunswick club selected September 20 to hold the final contest, when seven teams contested and 3,500 targets were scored.

The total number of teams in the series was 45, the men composing them shooting at 5,625 targets and the total number thrown in sweepstakes was 20,121, or a grand total of 25,746 targets used in the series of tournaments of the League in 1894. These figures, in some instances, are approximate, as in the case of the third, sixth and seventh meetings, being estimated on the basis of 100 shots for each team man present. No return of these was ever made to the league secretary, who based the other figures on an actual count of the sweepstakes reported by the sportsmen's journals. No one who has never undertaken to get up such a report has an idea of the labor involved, and it would be a good thing if secretaries of clubs would make a brief summary of the targets thrown in their tournaments. This would prevent mistakes and put the clubs on record.

The following is the standing of the clubs in the league contests:

Total	45	4555	80.98		3598	82.24		2926	83.60

In the above it will be seen that both the best four and best five scores have been figured. This was done because the secretary needed the advice of the governing committee before paying the prizes, and each computation alters the standing of four clubs. The by-laws require that in order to qualify a club shall shoot in one more than one half of the total number of contests held during the season. It is therefore necessary for the committee to decide under which computation the prizes shall be divided, the secretary believing that it should be on five, as four is not one more than one-half of seven, the number of tournaments held. The secretary would also call attention to the case of the Union Club which shot on their team, in contests four and five, men whose names did not appear on the roll. If these scores are thrown out, as required by section 11 of the by-laws, it will also affect the standing of two clubs, making a tie between the Climax and Union clubs, throwing the Endeavor club into fourth place If the committee decides that five scores shall be necessary for qualification, the Union club will be disqualified. Other clubs, Maplewood and Myrtle Park, were also guilty of same offense, but their action did not affect the result. The Climax club shot two men in contest No. 7—Scott and McGinty—neither of which appear on the roll, but the secretary believes them to be assumed names. The final result would not be affected, however, but it should be understood that in shooting on a team a man should be required to use his real name and so prevent confusion. In the individual scores the shooting was of a high order in many cases, and among those who shot at 100 targets or over in the team contests, one scored over 95 per cent., seven 90.95, nine 85.90, five 80.85, four 75.80, three 70.75. The individual scores above 90 per cent. follow below in their order of merit:

In regard to the scores kept during the year, the secretary has to say that the last made was never forwarded to him by the manager, but were copied from the files of the AMERICAN FIELD. The score of No. 6 was sent in by the courtesy of Mr. C. H. Townsend.

It is to be regretted that no solicitation of prizes was made as in previous years. At the last annual meeting the matter was generally discussed and it was requested that each delegate should interest himself in that regard.

Empire targets were successfully used in all the league contests. All of which is respectfully submitted.

IRWIN—DETTERLINE

KEWANEE, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—It has been many moons since a target race has been poled off in the Mississippi Valley, and when the cold and snow caused the race between Irwin and Detterline to be postponed, as it was one of the attractions of the big Kewanee tournament, there was considerable regret expressed on the part of the shooting fraternity present. Seated in the office of the Kewanee House talk flowed fast and furious, almost rivaling the storm without, and, forgetting that the storm had settled the temperature to 12° below zero, the match, including the live bird race, was made for next day and the birds sent for.

Morning came, and when, at 10 o'clock, the live birds arrived, the sun was vainly attempting to promise a fair day, so the enthusiasts repaired to the shooting grounds and prepared for the races between W. T. Irwin of Peoria and E. E. Detterline, of Keithsburg, Ill.

The first race was at [illegible] Peoria blackbirds, fifty to be from known traps, [illegible] fifty from five unknown traps, known [illegible]

[illegible] put in shape the preliminaries were [illegible] Walpert, of Spring Bay, stakeholder [illegible] Kewanee, and Mr. Humphries, of Nepon[illegible] Marshall scorer.

[illegible] to the trap first and killed ten [illegible] one in his first ten. By this time the [illegible] the traps set facing the storm it made the shooting very unpleasant and difficult. Both men shot a fair race; I may say very good considering that this was the first individual target race either one had ever shot.

The "old man" dropped five out of his first twenty-five and seven out of his second twenty-five. Detterline got twenty-two out of first twenty-five and twenty-one out of his second twenty-five, thus leading by five, a big majority, and if Irwin had a friend in the shape of a backer, no one knew it. But the race was only half over and Irwin had a little nerve left, and if he was "rattled" he did not show it by shaking (unless it was with the cold). He warmed his fingers, adjusted his gloves, got some different shells, and only when he missed his first bird coming from No. 1 trap did he say a harsh word. That settled the match, said all, but then—well, it would have been worth going a little journey and to have stood for a while in the snowstorm to have seen him "bust" to atoms thirty-five targets out of the next thirty-six. Meantime Detterline had lost eleven. Irwin here let up a little and scored twenty out of his last twenty-five, while Detterline scored twenty-one, and thereby "hangs a tale." A match is not always won at the half way post, and many times not until the last shot is fired, as here was an instance: Irwin 82, Detterline 81.

Oh, how glad the trappers were to get out of the pits, and when they got to talking it over I heard them say: "Well, who'd thought that old gray-whiskered man could shoot like that? Why, I do not see how he could see those black birds in the snow."

In justice to the targets used let me say that seldom do targets work as well as did these on this occasion. Irwin had only three broken birds in his 100 and Detterline only six, and some of these the boys broke purposely, trying to be "smart."

Irwin used a Parker 12-gauge gun, weighing eight pounds, and his load was 3¼ drams of Du Pont's Smokeless powder and 1⅛ ounces of No. 7½ Tatham shot in green Trap cases.

Detterline used a nine-pound Smith gun, and his load was 3¼ drams of E C. and 1¼ ounces of No. 7 chilled shot in Smokeless cases. The scores follow:

LIVE BIRD MATCH

As soon as the spectators and shooters could recover from their surprise and the details could be arranged, the second match was on. This time it was 50 live birds for $50 a side. Both gentlemen got their wet gloves off and, with cold fingers, counted out the cold cash. E. E. Baker of the Kewanee Gun Club was chosen referee.

Irwin again won the toss and took the lead, grassing his first bird nicely, while Detterline, getting first a "no bird," then drew a daisy cutter, and it went went "over the fence and out." Irwin had the toughest kind of luck on his fourth bird, as it was hit hard with the second barrel, yet the wind carried it down the hill and about a foot over the boundary. He only lost one more in his first twenty-five and ran up to his thirty-fourth when his second barrel scared the bird out, and as Detterline had missed eight it put the "old man" five ahead, and he run his string out with three dead out of bounds, making the good score of 44. Detterline got onto the last nineteen birds he shot at in good shape, and ran out straight.

Irwin had an advantage over his opponent, as he has shot half a dozen matches during the past fifteen years, and Detterline claimed this to be his first.

The birds were not an average good lot, the best ones going to Detterline. The quality of the birds must not be charged to the officers of the gun club, as they bought them like a "pig in a poke," and although paying a very high price for them got birds that were weak and had been cooped too long, and besides the cold, snowy day was against them. The club furnished some extra good birds for the sweeps, the team shoot, and the Carver—Marshall match. These shoots used up all the club's supply and the birds used in this match were bought at the request of the parties interested. The scores:

Irwin ....221*122222 2101111222 1222112122 222*11*121 21*12222*1—44

If there is a more whole-souled, upright set of good trap shooters in Illinois than at Kewanee I have not met them, and I have traveled "quite a bit." If any visitor was given a chance to "set 'em up," it must have been when the Kewanee men were asleep. If the weather had not been the worst in many years this club's tournament would have been the best held in the West during the present Winter. Let me, as a friend to every shooter far and near, urge one and all to keep watch for the next tournament held by the Kewanee Gun Club and fail not to be present.

RYE GUN CLUB SCORES

RYE, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I inclose herewith the scores made at the last three shoots of the Rye Gun Club, and, although I have been a little slow in sending them, I hope that to please your patrons in this section of the country you will give them a place in columns of the AMERICAN FIELD.

Among the prominent visitors were Messrs. Blakeslee and Lockwood of the Park City (Bridgeport, Conn.) Gun Club, Messrs. Sanger, McKnab and Woodruff of the Cos Cob (Conn.) Gun Club, and George Ferris and M. Henri of Stamford, Conn.

The chief event of the first day was the match shoot between the Cos Cob Gun Club and "we'uns" for the price of the birds. The race was a close one and was won by a small two-bird margin by the straight scores of D. Budd and S. H. Graham. The shooting average of the visitors was excellent considering their handicap of strange grounds, unusually strong birds, and the first experience in trap shooting for a number of them. The scores:

The New Year's Day shoot of the club brought out a goodly number of shooters, chiefly the gentlemen from Stamford, Bridgeport, Cos Cob and Yonkers, who as usual made the leading scores The 10 target match shoot between "P. Eat" and "Capt." was won by the "Capt." in a walk, who surprised all of the boys, including "P. Eat," with his easy manner of shooting with gun below the elbow. "P. Eat," as loser, had to pass around the cigars, remarking that it was an easy mark this time, but look out for the result of the next match.

TRAP AT SEATTLE

SEATTLE, WASH.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The live bird match between Messrs. "Stevens" and Miner, which had been the topic of conversation among trap shooters of this section for three weeks prior to its being shot, was decided at the West Seattle live bird grounds on December 23.

The match was at 50 live birds per man, for $100 a side, American Shooting Association rules to govern. "Stevens" is well known in Chicago, his home, where he has shot several matches. Captain E. P. Miner, his opponent, is a Californian, and an old and experienced live bird shot. The men were well matched and the result was quite a surprise to some who expected to see the Captain give his opponent a harder race; but those who were aware of the fact that Captain Miner was to shoot a strange gun did not look for any other outcome. Besides, he clearly drew the harder lot of birds. It was the opinion of those present that, under the circumstances, he shot a great race, and there are not a few who doubt "Stevens'" ability to defeat him in another race.

Quite a crowd witnessed the contest, and for a time it looked as though it would prove even a closer race than the scores show.

The birds were a rather poor lot, making necessary the continual use of the flush ropes to start them. This was disappointing to the contestants, as well as the management of the shoot, as the match birds were supposed to be a picked lot, superior to those used in the sweeps.

Mr. W. A. Hardy, of the Hardy-Hall Arms Co., refereed the match in splendid manner, not one decision being questioned. A. K. Churchill, the well-known trap shot of this city, handled "Stevens" and Jack Ruppe. also a good trap shot and as good a field shot, as can be found anywhere, acted in a like capacity for Captain Miner, while Messrs. Treat and Graff kept the scores.

Promptly at 10:30 o'clock in the morning "Stevens" stepped to the score and stopped his first bird, a left-quarterer, in good shape with the first barrel. Miner did not do so well. His first bird, a left-quartering driver, succeeded in crossing the boundary apparently none the worse for the two loads hurled after it. On the second round the men were even, "Stevens' losing his, a right-quarterer. He also lost his fifth, and Captain Miner lost his eleventh. The score then stood a tie, each man having lost two birds. "Stevens" after losing his fourteenth bird made a run of twenty-one straight. Captain Miner lost his 14th, 16th and 18th birds, then killed his next thirteen in good shape. He then lost his 32nd, and each losing his 36th, the score stood 32 to 29 in favor of "Stevens."

"Stevens" missed his 41st bird also, then finished his string without a skip, scoring 45. Captain Miner lost his 42nd, 46th and 50th birds and finished with 40. Both men made some beautiful kills and were frequently applauded by the spectators.

"Stevens" used his Francotte gun, and his load was 3¼ drams of Schultze powder and 1⅛ ounces of No. 7 chilled shot in both barrels.

Captain Miner shot an L. C. Smith gun, loaned him for the occasion by the Hardy-Hall Arms Co. His load was the same as his opponent's.

KEWANEE, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The midwinter shooting tournament held by the Kewanee Gun Club on January 10 and 11 was very largely attended, there being shooters present from all parts of the state. The principal attraction the first day was the live bird match between Dr. Carver and Tom Marshall, 100 live birds each man, for a purse of $200, Dr. Carver winning by two birds, the scores standing 75 to 73.

On the second day Mr. E. E. Baker and H. C. Crain of Kewanee and L. Snow and V. Studley of Neponset, Ill., shot a live bird match, 50 live birds per team, the Neponset men winning by two birds. Score 34 to 32. Owing to the extremely cold weather and high winds, the shooters were obliged to leave the grounds early in the afternoon, and the target and live bird matches between W. T. Irwin and E. E. Detterline were postponed until the following day, when Irwin won both Below are the scores of principal events in the tournament, the result of the matches between Carver and Marshall and Irwin and Detterline appearing in another column.

TRAP AT CIRCLEVILLE

CIRCLEVILLE, O

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Inclosed please find the scores made by members of the Pickaway Rod and Gun Club of this place in seven events of the second merchandise shoot of the club, the rest of the events to be shot on January 11.

Some may think this a funny way of holding a shoot, but with the thermometer registering only 6° above zero, as on this occasion, it is not good weather for sport of this kind. If the day had been suitable for trap shooting we would have had a much larger attendance than we did and probably succeeded in finishing the program.

We have a good many country shooters here, and from Thanksgiving Day until the last of February they hold from three to six turkey matches a week; and what a warming we town fellows get when we attend one of them; but we are always invited and someone always goes.

The scores made in the merchandise shoot mentioned above were as follows:

CARVER—MARSHALL

KEWANEE, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The live bird match shot here on the afternoon of January 10, between Dr. W. F. Carver of Kansas City, Mo., and Hon. Thomas Marshall of Keithsburg, Ill., for a purse of $200, was indeed an interesting race and resulted in favor of the former by the narrow margin of two birds.

The birds were a mixed lot, good, poor and indifferent; rather more good ones than otherwise. Some were as swift and old and tough as any that John Watson ever trapped—as shown by the number of dead out of bounds; quite a few required the scare ropes to start them, while some were of too tender an age to have been allowed to make their appearance at a pigeon shoot. The trapping was by boys and very slow, consuming much more time than it should; the gathering was simply execrable and should never have been tolerated. The sympathies of the crowd were with the Keithsburg man, and several placed their money on him. The referee was prompt and firm, and made a creditable showing considering that it was his first attempt.

The first peculiar thing to happen was when a white dog ran out to number five trap and got under a pigeon of same color from that trap. The Doctor was at the score, and the bird being a low one, the interference evidently bothered him, and he was slow to use his first barrel and the bird went out of bounds. Then another dog that had previously retrieved one bird and tried to retrieve a dozen or more, ran to and stirred up a crippled bird and chased it out of bounds, and it was called "lost bird" by the referee. This also was the Doctor's bird. The next misfortune that befell the Doctor was when the boy gatherer kicked instead of trying to catch a winged bird; not once, but two or three times, by which time the bird was out of bounds and was called "lost bird." Both of these birds should have been gathered and scored. Another peculiar thing was the escape of a bird from No. 3 trap an instant after No 2 trap had been pulled. The Doctor was at the score but failed to stop a fast driver out of the trap which was pulled for him. He then swung quickly and caught the other, an incomer, and killed it, but was not allowed a "dead bird." Of course the Doctor entered some objections, but as he was ahead and shooting in good form while his opponent was out of all form, he could afford to be generous, and was very gentlemanly about it, although perhaps a trifle "nettled." Probably these things contributed to his poor score. The scores were as follows:

Dr. Carver...2222222222 2222222224 2*22222*22 2*02222222 2212220222

WELLINGTON—BREWSTER VS. CLARK—ADAMS

HARRISBURG, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A most interesting team race took place on the driving park on Saturday afternoon between Wellington and Brewster of this city, and W. G. Clark and Mr. Adams of Altoona, for $50 a side, losers to pay expenses. The conditions were, 50 birds per man, five traps, 30 yards rise, otherwise American Shooting Association rules. Mr. Adams was granted two misses as dead, and one miss as "no bird."

The birds were selected and provided by Worden Bros. Never was seen a better lot in this vicinity. They were quick to get on the wing and bad to stop within bounds. Only one bird was called during the race. The wind blew diagonally across the traps from left to right, making right-quartering birds exceedingly hard, and all other outgoing birds very fast.

Mr. Adams' setter dog Rox did the retrieving. It was a feature of the race to see this dog work. He did not lose a bird during the day. The light was not good for pigeon shooting. The day was gloomy, the sky was overcast with masses of dull, cold clouds which made it hard for the men to measure quickly speed, distance and angles.

The attendance was good, the spectators watching the race closely and making no demonstration except when a difficult kill was made; then it mattered not which man it was, it was plainly demonstrated that the feat was fully appreciated.

Among those present I recall David Longnecker, Philadelphia; Stahler, Hipsch and Lighty, Steelton; Fry and Mathias, Mechanicsburg, and Disney and Hatfield, West Fairview.

All contestants used 12-gauge guns, Wellington a Parker and Brewster a Smith, both using U. M. C. Trap cases, Schultze powder and No. 7 shot in both barrels. Mr. Clark shot a Daly gun, using Smokeless cases loaded with E. C. powder. No. 7 shot in first barrel and No. 6 shot in second. Mr. Adams handled a Parker gun, using E. C. powder loaded in Trap cases and No. 7 shot in both barrels. Mr. James Worden was referee, Harry Dill was trap puller and Harvey Rose was scorer. The scores:

STOCKWELL'S TEAM WON

KANSAS CITY, MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In the team contest which took place in this city recently for a game supper, between teams of sixteen men each, the team captained by Mr. Geo. Stockwell surprised everybody, and themselves as well, by making the highest score.

That the surprise was great may well be understood when it is known that both Smith's and Hickman's teams had been carefully selected for the occasion and contained several men who are old-time pigeon shots and can generally be relied on to put up big scores. Stockwell's team had two or three of the "true and tried" in its make-up, but the rest were young men of limited experience, and instead of expecting this team to come out the winner, it was generally supposed that it would be third best when the race was finished. Each man where the score is given in detail shot at 10 birds; the others whose names appear, not shooting, but being allowed, by a committee appointed for the purpose, the number of birds it is presumed they would have scored had they shot.

CHAUNCEY FLOYD JONES AND J. K. "PALMER" VS. W. S. EDEY AND R. C. "NATHANIEL"

The above heading shows the names of the contestants in a pretty race on the grounds of the Westminster Kennel Club, Babylon, L. I., on January 8. Originally Mr. L. S. Thompson was to have been Mr. Edey's partner, but being ill Mr. "Nathaniel," who proved such a strong competitor with Mr. Fred Hoey in recent matches, took Mr. Thompson's place.

Messrs. Edey and "Nathaniel" took the lead in the early part of the race, but were not able to maintain it after the thirty-ninth round. A noticeable fact at the conclusion of the race is the close scores of the parties on each side, Jones and "Palmer" killing respectively 84 and 85, while Mr. Edey and "Nathaniel" killed 77 and 78 respectively. Mr. "Palmer," who is shooting a great gun nowadays, has the credit of the largest score. The birds were a fast lot, as is always seen on these grounds. The weather conditions were not the most favorable for big scores. The winners were the representatives of the Westminster club, the losers of the Westchester club. Following are the scores:

UNKNOWN GUN CLUB

The members of this club met at Dexter Park, L. I., on Thursday, January 10, an unfavorable day for shooting, a steady northeast wind, with rain, making it a most uncomfortable, yet notwithstanding the unfavorable weather the members had exciting contests on an excellent lot of birds which, contrary to the usual custom on rainy days, went at liveliest speed, and certainly equaled any ever trapped on these grounds. In the club contest three tied for first prize and two for second. In the extra sweepstakes two tied for first place. Scores:

In the shooting match which took place recently on the grouuds of the Keystone Shooting League, at Holmesburg Junction, Pa., betweeu Messrs. White, Landis, James and J. W. NORTH SIDE GUN CLUB

The members of this club had a stormy day on Tuesday, January 8, at Dexter Park, for their afternoon of enjoyment, and the attendance was not large. Those that were out made the best of it, shooting as the following scores indicate.

EVENT No. 1.—Club shoot, 7 live birds per man, classified:

Class A—John N. Meyer, 28 yards, 7; Christopher M. Meyer, 28 yards, 5; John Mencke, 28 yards, 6; M. C. Manning, 28 yards, 6; Samuel Lyons, 30 yards, 5.

Class B—John H. Jennings, 28 yards, 6; George Siemes, 28 yards, 5; Hermann Otten Jr., 27 yards 5; Herman Bock, 25 yards, 4.

EXTRA EVENT.—Sweepstakes race, miss and out: C. M. Meyer 9, Baker 9, Manning 8, Siemes 5, Mencke 4, Bock 2, Jennings 1, John N. Meyer 0. Tie divided.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—At next to the last club contest yet held of the Onondaga County Sportsmen's Club, 50 targets per man, H. C. McMurchy put up the top score and won Class A prize; and permit me to say that under the conditions his score of 41 was good. Harry Jones gave Mr. McMurchy a good close race, scoring only one bird less, while James Montgomery, of the same class, who was out at the traps for the first time in some weeks, did well. Mr. Courtney, who can generally be looked to for a big score, was sadly out of form on this occasion and scored only 33 out of the 50 shot at. Andrew S. White is getting back into form, and on this occasion scored 39 and won Class B medal. Harry Duguid pushed Mr. White closely, but was unable to tie him. In Class C Mr. J. Boyd had no competition [illegible] medal in his class on a score of 30. [illegible]rgets, the individual scores being as CYGNET, O.—Inclosed I hand you the scores of a live and clay bird shoot held at this place on January 1. The Cygnet Gun Club was but recently organized, which, in a measure, accounts for the poor scores made. The live bird shoot was interesting to both shooters and spectators. The birds were a very fair lot.

At the second contest, which was shot on December 29, the weather was about 10° below zero; but a little thing like that could not keep the enthusiasts away from a shoot. The scores are explained by the fact that the shot "balled" badly, being frozen into chunks before reaching the targets. Each man shot at 25 single targets: Cowen 6, Hewes 1, Bellmaine 5, Smith 10, Fashbaugh 7, Shaw 3, Cullen 3.

COFFEYVILLE, KAN.—Inclosed please find scores made by a few of our gun club members on January 10. Considering that all were new men at the trap, except Landers and Kleohr, they did first-rate shooting. Our club members are anxious to get to shooting again. The weather has been so bad of late that we have not been out very often. The scores which I send were made on live birds, each man shooting as many as he wished until the supply was exhausted.

KENNEL

H. M. G., Fort Dodge, Ia.—Ans.—Our space will not permit of answering such a long list of queries, neither have we the time. It would take at least three days to furnish the information you ask. You had better hire someone to compile the records you are in want of.

H. C. L., Cairo, Ill.—Ans.—(1) "Kennel Secrets," by Asbmont, is just the book you want; price $3, and worth every penny of it to any owner or breeder (2) He is still at his old address and we do not understand why he has not answered you.

E. E. L., Token Creek, Wis.—Ans.—Write to secretary of the American Kennel Club, 44 Broadway, New York, for registration blanks, which will give you the information you require; the fee is $1; we do not answer queries by mail.

MISCELLANEOUS

C. R., Dixon, Cal.—(1) How should I aim at a right-quartering or left-quartering live bird, using nitro powder, to kill? (2) How should I aim at a right-quartering or left-quartering Blue Rock target to score a break? (3) Are there any brass shot shells manufactured that have the No. 3 primer? (4) What is the difference between a shotgun bored true to gauge and one not bored that way? Ans.—(1) From one foot to five feet, depending very much on the swiftness with which the bird is flying and the acuteness of the angle it is taking. (2) From one foot to four feet, the latter distance being quite far enough for most targets even when thrown at sharp angles and from strong traps. (3) We think not. (4) In a gun bored true to gauge a wad of the same gauge as the gun will fit snugly from front end of shell chamber to muzzle, while in a gun that is not bored true to gauge, a wad of the same gauge dropped in at the breech end of the barrels will fall nearly three-fourths the length of them before stopping or can be pushed through the barrels with little pressure. In a gun of the last named kind 11-gauge wads should be used to get best results.

G. L. P., Appleton, Wis.—Can you give me the address of some man or firm that makes gunsmith's tools and supplies? Ans.—We cannot. Manufacturers of such goods should advertise in our columns but they do not.

TRAP

SUBSCRIBER, Valparaiso, Ind.—Ten men enter a trap shooting event. Two tie for first money, and three for third money, there being three prizes. Do the two men who tied for first place shoot off for first prize only, or do they shoot off for first and second? Ans.—If the shooting was such as is common in this country (class shooting), the two men who tied for first prize shoot off for or divide that prize, the man scoring next to them taking second and the next to him—one or more—dividing or shooting off for third. Under the style of shooting which prevails in England and most of the foreign countries, the two men who tie for first prize would shoot off for first and second prizes, the winner of the tie taking first and the loser second prize, and the next highest man third prize. This last style of shooting is what is termed "straight" shooting, or "high guns to win."

GAME AND SHOOTING

J. H. E., Grand Rapids, Mich.—Where can I purchase wild rice for seed and when is the best time to sow it? Ans.—Write to either R. J. Valentine, Janesville, Wis., or Chas. Gilchrist, Port Hope, Ont. Either of these gentlemen can furnish you the seed and give you all necessary information regarding the time of planting, etc.

Amusements

SCHILLER THEATER.—Charles Dickson and his company conclude the performances of his delightfully ridiculous farce-comedy "Incog," with the present week. "Incog" has been laughed at by thousands everywhere throughout the United States. Its popularity is immense, and it has crowded the handsome Schiller Theater with merry audiences all the week. The Dickens festival week, which commences next Sunday evening, is undoubtedly a great dramatic novelty. The celebrated play "Oliver Twist" is to be put upon the stage for a week, with a cast and in a manner that has never been equaled upon the American stage. It will be a great stage presentation of Dickens' masterpiece, produced with special scenery, costumes and an equipment of stage accessories prepared for the great star company, under the direction of W. A. Mestayer, who has made a specialty of the production of "Oliver Twist" this season. The play has already in the Eastern cities achieved an unqualified and remarkable success. The Mestayer combination producing "Oliver Twist" is a very strong one, including a number of dramatic stars of the first rank. "Oliver Twist" will be presented with a really phenomenal cast of no less than twenty-five persons, all actors and actresses of recognized ability.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under "Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kenneiman. Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. TITUS, Waverly, Clay Co., Miss. 42-18-tf

WE are located in one of the finest training grounds in the United States and have first-class kennels. We are now prepared to take four more dogs to train for next Fall shooting; keep our own saddle horses and hunting wagon; our patrons are always welcome. Can also board some more dogs and work on game. Write for pamphlet and full information. C. W. TWAY, Michigan City, Miss. 3

Gentlemen:—I see so many testimonials and see so much praise for Spratts Patent that I feel inclined to say a word myself. Dear Sirs:—In my expedition to the arctic regions we used large quantities of your biscuits, dog cakes and "armebis." These goods were all you had claimed them to be and even more.

Our draft dogs thrived amazingly upon your dog cakes.

For our next expedition you may be sure your goods will be ordered in still larger quantities.

Excelsior Dog Cakes

As their name implies, are the highest grade in the world, and five gold and silver medals corroborate the fact. They are economical and nutritious and are used by the leading kennels in the United States and Europe.

The Swiss Mountain Kennels have the following to say about them:

SWISS MOUNTAIN KENNELS, GERMANTOWN, PA.

Gentlemen:—I have used Excelsior biscuits now for about five years and find them perfectly satisfactory in all respects. The dogs are not only fond of them, but even when used exclusively have always agreed splendidly with them, keeping them generally in a good healtby trim.

I have several times recommended them to other parties and have never failed to find them otherwise than pleased with them. I would here thank you for your prompt attention to all orders. I am perfectly willing you should publish anything I have said formerly or at the present time in regard to the cakes. Yours truly,

THE ART OF SHOOTING.

LONDON, FOURTH EDITION, 1892. PRICE $3.00.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

At the special request of many gentlemen who have placed themselves in my hands for instruction in the Art of Shooting, I have written this treatise. I have endeavored to meet the special requirements of those who are anxious to become proficient in the art, and who have hitherto been unable to obtain, in a precise form, the information necessary for studying the first principles of shooting at moving objects.

I have had the honor of coaching many gentlemen, and have carefully studied the points especially requiring attention that have cropped up from time to time while giving instruction. I hope that those who favor me by studying this treatise may quickly gain the knowledge so essential for the making of an average f not a brilliant shot.

I have purposely refrained from touching on the several merits of any class of gun—being a gunmaker myself; and, indeed, so many good works on the subject have been written, that it is really unnecessary.

I trust that authors from whose writings I have made extracts will pardon me when they recollect that I have at heart one object, viz., the advancement of a manly sport which [illegible] easure, health and occupation to many, and to the patronage of [illegible] I am indebted for many pleasant days.

MONGOLIAN PHEASANT SHOOTING

PORTLAND, ORE.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—When the male Mongolian pheasant attains his majority he becomes a bird of exceeding great wisdom, and, in the language of the poet, is "nobody's fool." When the hunter lightly jumps the fence at one end of a field, should one of these sharp-eyed, sharp-spurred beauties chance to be therein, it is very likely he will begin a swift retreat for some well-known and oft-visited hiding place. Of course, when the birds are young, before they have won their needle-like spurs, they are childlike and bland, and when they find the swiftly quartering dog on their trail they hide in the nearest cover. Not so with the old cock; he with the metallic-hued horns, the bespangled and iridescent-hued breast, the back and wing feathers of gold, the green and black barred tail and bushels of experience and craftiness. Well does he know the import of that "Hie on, good dog! Hunt him up! Hunt him up!" Just about that time the fierce-looking head of the crafty old bird will be lowered close to the ground and the wiry legs will carry his majesty off at a rattling pace. Down a furrow he goes like a sprinter, then through a potato patch, across a vegetable garden, up another furrow, taking the safest way to the closest cover. He acts with the judgment of a general, realizing that if he goes into the air he may expose his precious body to the fire of some straggler, and he is perfectly willing, in the face of superior odds, to sneak off and say nothing about it. These old fellows are a nuisance to the dog trainer, for they will often lead the youngster a merry chase only to flush wild and gayly chatter at the eager and deluded dog. Ten to one the high strung, anxious animal will wildly chase the wily old rascal and have to take a good switching from his well-meaning owner.

The hens and young birds are not wild, and good open shooting may be had with them. Early in the season the old cocks will often lie well, but in October and November they have gathered together a great lot of statistics and data, which they advantageously use with a view of preserving unruffled plumage.

Getting out my gun one November morning I called Lassie, my Gordon setter bitch, and told her I would take her out for an hour and instruct her as to the Mongolian pheasant. Lassie is a good dog of noble breed (she's English you know), born on a British ship in the harbor of Portland. Having been her owner but a few months I was anxious to see her work on field birds, and expected to find her sorely deficient in training. A friend had informed me that a number of pheasants made his extensive farm their headquarters, and toward Waverly Place I took my way. Situated near the city, with stubble-fields, orchard, meadow, plowed land, swales and vegetable gardens, I found Waverly Place an ideal spot for the imported birds, and I felt sure of locating a few. Nor was I disappointed. Negotiating a barbed-wire fence I let the little dog go and it would have done your heart good to see her work. With quick, nervous movement she quartered the field, her tail marking out circles in the air and her nose to the damp stubble. She ranged a little too far to suit me, and I found that she would not obey my whistle but kept on at a rattling pace. Suddenly the gallop was changed to a trot and, with tail beating swiftly, she investigated a patch of weeds and started for the fence in a manner which left no doubt as to her suspicions. Thinking that she would likely flush the bird I ran in her direction, but had barely got well started when the old rascal got up from some weeds on the other side of the fence and made for a dense thicket of vine maple. Of course Lassie had to follow at breakneck speed, and of course she had to be well switched when I was able to get within reach of her black and tan hide. In defiance of whistle and vociferous cries, it was some minutes before I had an opportunity of telling her what I thought of her conduct. She proved to be a good little dog, however, with lots of sense, for she did not sulk and skulk, as some dogs do, after a whipping. I once owned a dog, a cross between a pointer and an English setter, "but that's another story."

Descending into a little valley which was nearly all taken up with a vegetable garden, I felt sure we would find some birds. Crossing a little stream I sent the dog into a cabbage patch and foolishly stood in my tracks and watched her pretty movements. I had just made up my mind to go to her and impress upon her the fact that she ranged too far from the gunner, when In oticed her making game. She thrashed around among the the cabbage for a moment, broke through a brush patch, again entered the cabbage, and up jumped another chattering cock. Again she followed at full speed across the creek, through the barbed-wire fence at a jump, and up the hillside. I stood where I was for a moment, asking myself why I had not followed the dog, and then tuned up my voice and whistle. She did not come to my dulcet tones. Catching sight of her working in the brush, I set out like a half-breed for a distant goal. She led me a merry chase, paying no attention whatever to my whistle and voice, but working as if she owned the farm and everything on it. Cutting a tough switch I went into the brush and after her like a beagle after a cottontail; and I got her. Overtaking her in a wood road I grasped her collar and plied the switch. By giving two blasts of the whistle and a few caresses with the switch, I thought I would impress upon her memory the meaning of that signal. The good little doggie doubtless has gray matter in that pretty head and behind those beautiful eyes, for throughout the rest of the morning when I blew two blasts on my whistle she came to me, and she stopped not for fences or creeks.

Working through the vegetable garden without result, I ascended a hill to examine a large excavation which contained a water tower and pumping machinery. Standing on the brim of the pit, viewing the machinery, I momentarily forgot to keep my eyes on the dog. Turning, I saw her disappear around the hill on the side of which I stood, and I knew she was trailing a bird. I started toward the top of the hill, believing that it was the shortest way for me to catch up with my dog. I had taken but a few steps when I heard a rustle in front of me, and on looking up I beheld a picture. Lassie was on the very brow of the little hill, clearly outlined against the cloud-flecked sky, on a stiff point. For a moment only did I admire the sight, for with beating of stout wings and a cackle of defiance, a great cock burst from a clump of blackberry briers. Up he went and off, with his tail feathers fluttering in the breeze and his wings working like a young locomotive. This time I was in range and when the nitro cracked one old cock had fooled his last puppy. Lassie brought me the gayly-clothed form and received the information that she had done nobly, and that with a little more experience she would be fit to go hunting with any gentleman.

DUCK SHOOTING IN MONTANA

BY PRICKLY PEAR

"What do you say to going down on the Muddy, next Sunday?" asked Mr. H—, an enthusiastic hunter of this place. (I should say that his enthusiasm is more than shared by Mrs. H—, who was also bound to go.)

"I'll go," was my reply.

Well, we laid our plans as follows: To send a conveyence to Jakey Baur's, on the Muddy, go down by train at 2:48 a. m., hunt up to the lakes about fifteen miles, return to Baur's, and then come home by train.

A word about the Muddy. It is a stream running into the Missouri about thirty miles east of Camp Poplar River, Mont. The Great Northern Railroad crosses it at a station called Blair. It is a deep sluggish stream, and surely furnishes its share of the article that makes the "Big Muddy" (Missouri) look like a living stream of chocolate. It is a famous place for ducks at certain seasons of the year. Here they breed and grow fat on the succullent roots and grasses that grow thickly in the stream. It runs through a beautiful valley covered with luxuriant grass, and its low banks give the weary duck a chance to "be up and going" the instant the hunter shows his head over the bank. Well to our trip.

I was awakened at 2 o'clock a. m., and started for the station, calling for Mr. and Mrs. H— on my way, and assisting them to carry a large basketful of the good things of this world. Arriving at the station we burst in on the night operator and deluged him with questions about the train—the possibility of its being late, etc.—until I reckon we bored him to death. I must not forget one member of the party who did not have much to say but looked miserable, Mont, one of my setters. He seems to know and dreads traveling in the cars. He acted as if offended at being awakened from his nap, and at the snapping of the chain to his collar, threw himself down by the stove as much as to say that it only needed that to fill his cup of bitterness.

At last the train came—on time; someone shouted all aboard; away it went, with us bursting into the car among the weary sleepers. After getting settled in our seats we talked duck, duck and an occasional goose thrown in. On reaching Blair I am sure the sleepy passengers must have drawn a sigh of relief as we disappeared in the darkness. We had a good walk of about a mile to Baur's and found that our man, Black Coffee, had already fed his horses and was ready to move at a moment's notice. Mr. Baur treated us with the greatest kindness, for he is a living example of Montana hospitality.

At daylight we hitched up and, as the wagon had to make a detour of about two miles, I concluded to walk up the creek bank and try and get a shot, and meet the wagon where the road touched the creek. I walked along the bank for about a mile. At last I saw a little bunch of ducks and a solitary mallard, the latter a little apart from the rest and looking like a swan. The bank on my side almost raised to the dignity of a bluff, and that was my objective point. Of course my whole aim was to pot that mallard and kill him with the first shot of the day, consequently I sneaked, as many a reader of this article has done. But Mr. Mallard was wide awake. As I crept to the bank he flew, but I nailed him with the right barrel. Turning my attention to the flock, which by this time had taken wing, I let drive at them and got one. In a few moments Mont appeared all dripping and I was in possession of a beautiful drake just as large as he looked. Soon Mont again put in an appearance, this time with a mudhen. Just then the wagon came in sight and I greeted them with "first blood for Gilhooley."

Our program was to drive across the bends of the stream and shoot as we went along. H— and I started out to walk and, creeping up to the bank, saw a flock of mallards about three hundred yards above us. The sneak act was again in order, but owing to my being afraid to take a good look at them in the first place, we came to the bank about fifty yards below them. "Holy smoke! Look at them!" I remarked, as they raised, about thirty of them. "Let's shoot anyhow," said I, and shoot we did without getting any until they flew across the creek, where one fell away outside the brush. "Hie on, Mont! Fetch!" said I to my dog, and he scampered off across, but I could not get him to go far enough out. We held a council of war and concluded to let the duck go, but the more I thought of it the more I wanted that duck; so after about fifteen minutes I concluded to get it and I breasted the stream. The sensation was not pleasant, but it had the incentive of being a good cause to suffer in. I searched high and low for that duck, but could not find it, and I braved the chilly water once more to get back, being consoled by H— with several "I told you sos" and "I have given over such tric[illegible] which made me feel like pushing him into the stream

After walking a few hundred yards Mrs. H— called my attention to a flock of mallards coming down and [illegible] we went under the bank. Just as they got almost [illegible] range they swerved off. The reason was obvious. Mr. Mont not having been even thought of, was sitting on the [illegible] his white coat a mark that could be seen [illegible] I right here made up my mind that the dog [illegible] be considered in any plans we might [illegible] the wily ducks. By this time the ducks [illegible] in all directions. They were quite plenty, but very wide awake, and by the time they left here for the waters South, it would have required but very little to complete their education.

We hunted up to Phillips ranch with pretty fair success. We got eighteen mallards, two spoonbills and four teals at a cost, I should judge, of about twenty-five cents each in ammunition. At the ranch we made coffee, soon got inside the lunch basket and outside of its contents. While planning to go to the lake about a mile from this point, our calculations were knocked sky high by a cold, drizzling rain, so we concluded to go right back to Baur's and wait there until train time. We saw hundreds of ducks going down stream from the lake, traveling ahead of the storm.

On arriving within four miles of Baur's H— and I concluded to hunt the remainder of the way. H— being then as wet as myself I had a chance to offer him my "heartfelt sympathy." We saw some mallards in one of the bends and had a long shot at them, dropping two. Here I was treated to one of the vagaries of duck hunting, a good dog and a wounded duck. Retrieving the dead one he started in with the other, when it flew out of his mouth twice. After about twenty minutes' looking we found it under the bank in the long grass. We arrived at the ranch, bringing in all four more ducks, which increased our bag to twenty-eight. Although thoroughly soaked we were as cheerful as we could be under the circumstances. After doing justice to the good things Mr. Baur put before us we waited until train time, riding home in a warm car. A change of clothing and a good night's rest prepared your humble servant for another week's grinding.

SECOND ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL GAME, BIRD AND FISH PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

Last week we published a report of the proceedings of the second annual meeting of the National Game, Bird and Fish Protective Association. Subjoined are some of the most interesting letters sent by members of the association, and others will appear next week.

The report of Mr. F. S. Baird, attorney for the association, is as follows:

TO THE PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE NATIONAL GAME, BIRD AND FISH PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

Gentlemen:—I herewith submit my annual report for the year ending January 9, 1895, and in making this report, will say that my duties for the year have been mostly in correspondence, counsel, and advice with the president or executive committee and other members of the association, and have been largely in consultation with them and especially the president of the association relative to the correspondence from different states, and facts as they have been brought to his attention through the secretary and other members of the association. I would report that during the season a large number of letters have been received from members of the association in various states, reporting progress and expressing willingness to aid and assist in the good work of game protection whenever it came in their power. Have had considerable correspondence with the secretary of the association, relative to the enactment of new laws in various states and the enforcement of the present laws, and from the reports received by me through the president and secretary and the game wardens of the various states, I would report that there has been an increased activity among the game wardens of the respective states and members of this association in the enforcement of the game laws and the prosecution of offenders, from all of which it would appear that this association is doing an increased amount of good in the direction of protection of fish and game.

A large number of instances of the malicious destruction of game and marketing of the same has been brought to my notice during the latter part of the season. The attention of the association has been called to the malicious and wanton destruction of game, especially elk, deer and antelope, in that region lying south of the Yellowstone National Park. I have had some correspondence from Mr. B. M. Webster of Omaha, in relation to the same, and in his communication of November 1, 1894, Mr. Webster says he has for many years made his outings in Wyoming and Idaho; that he has noticed in some parts of Idaho where sheep were not grazing and Indians have not visited, that the game does not appear to diminish; that in parts of Wyoming, the Indians, every Fall, leave the reservations and make a wholesale slaughter of all the game they can find in that locality; large numbers of them hand together and surround droves of elk and destroy the entire herd, in many cases leaving large numbers of carcasses untouched, except to take the skins, from the sale of which they receive a small amount of money; that he has seen elk in the mountains killed by the Indians that were not even skinned, but lying rotting, they having been killed apparently for no other purpose than to satisfy their desire to slaughter.

It appears these Indians go off their reservations upon permits issued by the Indian agents, through the department of the interior.

I have written Mr. Webster, stating that I would call the association's attention to this matter and ask it to take action upon the same at this meeting.

I would recommend that this association take immediate steps to notify the secretary of the interior, and if possible, prevent this destruction of game by the Indians while off their reservations.

The correspondence I have turned over to the secretary of this association to be kept by him for future reference.

I would further state that during the month of December last, my attention was called to the fact that large quantities of deer were being shipped to this city from Wisconsin, Minnesota and other northern points. I immediately placed men to watch the storehouses in this city to ascertain where said game was shipped from, and found that while my men were watching one storehouse, a large number of deer were received from another storehouse in the city, and they were unable to ascertain the source of the shipment of the game. They watched the express offices and could find no game from that source from which, I am of the opinion that most of the deer were received here in refrigerator cars and not through the express companies.

I immediately communicated with the Governor of Minnesota and with the officers of this [illegible]tion in Wisconsin and received word [illegible]thanking us for the information and [illegible]d of game and fish commissioners of [illegible]fter, I received a letter dated Decem[illegible]rs, stating that my letter had been [illegible]r, and answering the same he states [illegible]ed of the shipment to which I [illegible] endeavored to stop the same. Further stating that the illegal wholesale slaughter of deer in Minnesota was greatly magnified; that he had statistics from the transportation companies doing business in Minnesota, who had handled venison of this season and that about 3,000 carcasses of deer had been handled by them during the season; that he was aware of the great quantities of venison that had been shipped from St. Paul to Chicago, but that it has come from points in Wisconsin. Further stating that he believed that a large quantity of venison was taken out of Minnesota by wagons and shipped to Chicago by the transportation companies; that no venison has been shipped out of Minnesota by any of said companies, with one exception; that he had ample evidence against them and would indict them at the next session of the grand jury, together with the shippers residing in Minneapolis, and saying that he was using all diligence to protect the game of his state and prevent shipment, and referred to the president of the association for a confirmation of this assertion, also stating that he was glad to coöperate with this association at any and all times; that he had been elected a vice-president of our association, but had never qualified, which communications I turn over, with this report, to the secretary of this association.

The parties whom I had employed to watch the cold storage warehouses where these deer had been seen reported to me that large quantities of carcasses of deer were piled up in the warehouse, all of which deer were frozen, showing that said game, immediately after being killed, had been frozen and shipped in freight cars or else shipped in refrigerator cars to this city. I am of the opinion that if this game could be traced back and proven to have been killed in any of the states having non-export laws under the decisions of our Supreme Court a replevin suit, in the name of the people of the state in which said game was killed, could be successfully maintained against the parties having it in possession.

I would therefore recommend that the attorney of this association for the coming year be instructed to fully investigate that subject and correspond with the attorneys general of the respective states and ask them to coöperate with this association and bring replevin suits in the name of the people of their respective states and replevin any and all game so illegally taken.

I would further recommend that a special committee of this association be appointed who, together with the president and attorney of the association, should be instructed to have drafted an amendment to the Interstate Commerce Law and use all diligence to have the same passed at our next session of Congress. I believe that the most effectual way to protect the game of this country is by national legislation through the protection of and by amending the Interstate Commerce Law. In that way the traffic in game between the states can be effectually controlled.

I find upon examination of the statutes of the various states, that all of them have reasonably good laws for the protection of game, and that a large number, viz.: Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, North Dakota, Arkansas, Missouri, Wyoming, Vermont, and some other states have non-export game laws, making it a severe penalty for any person or corporation to carry or transport game out of the state.

I believe that this association should continue its good work and assist in the perfection of the game laws of the respective states; also secure national legislation, controlling the same by virtue of the Interstate Commerce Act. I believe as a rule that, the express companies are willing to aid and assist in the enforcement of the game laws, but from the recent shipments of deer to this city, it would appear that game in large quantities is being killed and accumulated in other states and illegally shipped to this and other cities in freight and refrigerator cars.

I would further report that a large amount of other miscellaneous work has been performed by your attorney during the past year. All of which has been in the interest of game and fish protection, all of which is submitted.

Geo. A. Johnson, secretary, Detroit, Mich.: "The warden should be appointed on recommendations of a majority of the clubs in the state, and his deputies should be appointed by him upon the indorsement of the club or clubs in the locality he desires him, as they best know. The state should appropriate a sum sufficient to pay them not less than $1,000 per year, and not leave it to conviction as we do, as they get nothing in many cases."

C. L. Hilleary, Cairo, Ill.: "There is absolutely no protection to turkeys, prairie chickens, ducks, squirrels, quails or snipes in Southern Illinois, Missouri, Kentucky or Tennessee, and unless the National Association does something (and at once) to protect game in the above named states, I fail to see that such an association is of material benefit to sportsmen. Have sportsmen elect the game warden and let the game wardens' compensation be half of the fines collected and no other."

J. F. Forbrich, Chicago: "The bill about to be introduced by Game Warden Chas. H. Blow is satisfactory, at least until we have a better foothold."

Wakeman Holberton, Hackensack, N. J.: "All sportsmen should agree on a license system, the money to go toward paying game wardens and stocking preserves."

W. S. Metcalf, vice-president, Lawrence, Kan.: "Each land owner and each true sportsman must be a game warden. My idea of the law is to entirely prohibit the sale of game in market, especially quails and prairie chickens. Make it a crime to offer them for sale or to ship them out of the state. The pot and market hunters are what make game scarce. But little is done in the way of protection now."

S. Northcott, secretary, McGregor, Ia.: "County game wardens with police powers."

C. E. Robbins, secretary, Fargo, N. D.; "We are trying to organize a state sportsmen's association. Our present game laws are openly violated and we hope to prevent market shooting and the illegal shipment of game if possible. This state is without money for appropriations and it will be difficult for us to get a bill passed by our legislature that will provide for a game warden."

H. F. Chase, vice-president, Amesbury, Mass.: "First, make the season for all game close January 1. This will surely save lots of quails and grouse shot by rabbit hunters. Offer a bounty on hawks, foxes and skunks, this to be paid by the county. Quails have been protected the past season, but in this section I do not think the law has been generally observed. The bill protecting quails was engineered through by members of the legislature from central Massachusetts. The snowfall is too heavy in that section for the quails, consequently all those on grounds stocked moved eastward and southward nearer salt water to obtain food; but the people in that section believed they were shot and so asked and obtained protection for them for 1894. Quails are on the increase in this section and I believe with ordinary Winters they will continue to do so; but a bad Winter—one with lots of ice storms and deep crust—will do more harm than all the shooters. We have a fund to stock with new game some cover in this section, but have not decided what to put in. The red legged partridge has been suggested. Can anyone tell us if it would thrive here? I believe in having wardens paid by the state, with a per cent. of fines also, and keep it out of politics. Give the deputies a living salary; make occupancy of office contingent on work done and upon absence of game law violations in their respective districts."

A. L. Harms, Rock Island, Ill.: "I am a firm believer in a strict license law, to make everyone who carries a gun or rifle in the field pay a license of one or two dollars, the money to be applied in paying salaries and expenses of game wardens. Good work has been done by State Game Warden Chas. H. Blow and his deputy, James First of Moline, in fish and game protection, by securing many convictions with heavy fines of a number of old offenders."

CAUSES OF THE BLOWING TO PIECES AND ELONGATION OF GUN WADS

BERNARDSVILLE, N. J.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Mr. Tenner in his very interesting experiments, just reported in the columns of your interesting journal, advanced a new theory as to the action of the gases in the gun barrel, and one which he said he had formed from the effect he had observed on: First, the wadding over the powder; second, the base-wads in such shells as are partially filled to reduce their capacity (as for the Walsrode powder), and third, on the shells themselves.

He frankly admits that the results he cannot reconcile with the laws of physics, inasmuch as he says that theory and practice are often at variance, implying therefore that they are at variance in this case. He says in substance that the elongation of all wads over the powder, the blowing to pieces of these wads, or their rear parts, if the wads are not of sufficient density and toughness, the blowing out of the base or filling wad in the Walsrode shell, and the collapsing of the cartridge case, which occurs often in some guns, together prove that there must be a suction produced in the barrel before the charge has left the muzzle. The base wads he says are often driven out with sufficient force to injure the choke of the gun. The collapsing of the shells, I presume, he thinks due to leakage of air through the action of the gun.

Now, although the formation of a partial vacuum, if it could be assumed, would be able to produce all these results, yet I think I can show that it is unnecessary to go so far out of our way to account for these phenomena. The only way that such a suction could occur would be on the assumption that the initial expansion of the gases started the charge forward at a speed which caused the space behind it to be enlarging more rapidly than the expansion of the gases could fill, from which, in the first place, we must conclude that it is a mistake to build guns with such long barrels, for it is evident that as soon as pressure behind the charge is changed into suction, the charge is retarded and the velocity of the delivery reduced.

It is an actual fact that a .22-caliber rifle with the short, rim-fire cartridge will give much greater penetration with an 18-inch than with a 28-inch barrel. This is doubtless the result of a too small powder charge for the long barrel, so that the powder has been all burned and the force applied a sufficiently long time to overcome the inertia of the bullet until the friction is equal to the propelling force of the powder, before the bullet has passed eighteen inches from the chamber. This result is not obtained with more powder or shorter barrel, and we have no question of suction to consider.

Now I assume, and I think it unscientific to do otherwise, that in both rifle and shotgun the powder exerts a continued pressure which, though slightly reduced at the muzzle owing to the larger space behind it which has to be filled, still keeps the wad under a compression sufficient to accelerate the charge. It is hard to see how this could elongate the wad in the gun, as Mr. Tenner thinks the case.

When the charge has left the muzzle there is undoubtedly a suction in its "wake" which helps to carry the wad along with the shot. Up to this time the wad has been under heavy and violent compression throughout its fiber. It is not necessary that the gases of the powder should penetrate into the wad, for their force is communicated and the air in the wad itself is under the same compression. Thus we can account for the fact that a hard wad next to the powder will not protect soft wadding from the effects of the explosion. Suddenly this great pressure is relieved and the wad flies apart, is "blown to pieces," or elongated, according to its toughness and the amount of air it holds in its fiber, by this very air in its expansion. Action and reaction are alike and in opposite direction; hence the contained air in the wad having been under a compression of 6,000 or 8,000 pounds per inch, the sudden expansion of the same force is easily sufficient to account for any effect on wadding or shell that I have ever seen.

Now as to the case of the Walsrode base wads, our theories are parallel, or I might say, alike. Mr. Tenner says it is due to suction that the wads fly out, and I, too; but he did not state that suction is merely a difference of pressure. No amount of suction could stir a wad at the bottom of the shell were there no air in it or behind it. If the wad was sucked out before the charge left the barrel, the suction must have come about gradually as the compression became tension, and the wad would not be driven out so hard by the air behind it as if the same process were brought about instantaneously. The very force with which he says the wad is driven out, leads to my conclusion that the charge liberates the gases suddenly in passing the muzzle, changes the compression on the base wad to atmospheric pressure, or probably less (by the reaction of the gases passing out) and the air behind and in the wad being suddenly liberated, expands with great force and the wad is "sucked" out with violence. This phenomenon I have not personally witnessed.

Now with the collapsing of shells the case is similar exactly, and the principles I have advanced I will not reiterate. The cause of the collapsing my experience has shown to be the loose-fitting of the shell in the chamber and not a leakage of the breech. I never saw a gun begin to collapse shells because it had become "shaky" or loose, though it then undoubtedly was far from gas tight. On the other hand, I own a gun in which one-third of the shells collapse, and it is very loosely chambered and has a very tight-fitting action, being an old Dougall with the eccentric cam action which moves the barrels back over two bosses which fit into each chamber like stoppers. It was one of the early breech-loaders made, when it was feared the force of the powder would be lost by escaping through the action. With the old pin-fire cartridges, which were larger, it never collapsed once, but with its change to central-fire it took up this bad habit.

The reason why a loose chamber gives this result is to me plain, for the head and base of the cartridge must have much air around it (not behind it), which the paper of the shell, expanding close against the chamber, confines and compresses. This being considerable in quantity, when released and an exhaust or lower pressure occurs suddenly in the interior of the empty shell, the paper is collapsed in longitudinal ridges.

It is in the hope that some of you more experienced sporesmen and scientists may take up the gantlet I have thrown down, and even that Mr. Tenner will give me the satisfaction of expressing his approval or disapproval of my theory as fully as I have criticised his, that I have written so at length. THE OPEN SEASON ON DEER IN MICHIGAN

De Kalb, Ill.

Editor American Field:—I noticed recently a report from Lansing, Mich., stating that a bill had been introduced in the House of the Michigan Legislature which proposed to make the open season for deer in the upper peninsula from October 22 to November 25, and to require a license for the privilege of hunting of $25 from non-resident and 50 cents from resident deer hunters, licenses to be obtained from county clerks, etc.

This bill is directly in the interest of the deer slaughterers, and has been framed either at their suggestion or by someone who knows nothing about the conditions in the upper peninsula.

For a number of years at the opening of the season, September 25, I have been going up there with a small party to enjoy a couple of weeks' vacation in the woods, hunting, fishing and rambling; and as we have had some idea of purchasing a small tract of land in order to obtain the rights of property holders there, we have taken considerable pains to inform ourselves regarding the conditions and the prospects for game. Of course, the preservation of the game is the first consideration with us, whether we buy any land or not, and with that end only in view do I now call attention to this proposed change of law.

Market-hunters, whether resident or non resident, do not begin killing the deer at the opening of the season, as now fixed, because the weather is then so warm that the meat cannot be kept or shipped, and the lumber camps, being either unoccupied or with small gangs of men, want very little of it. But at that time of the year the woods are particularly inviting to those who seek their shades chiefly for rest and recreation. Such hunters are neither expert nor persistent, and few would kill, if they could, more deer than the camp needed. The bucks are not running at that time, there is no snow for tracking and the meat cannot be sold or shipped; so such parties as ours, for instance, stay a week or two, spend some money with the residents, have a good time, kill two or three deer, perhaps, and go home satisfied. If the open season is changed to the time proposed there will be fewer pleasure parties, but more real hunting camps in the woods, and the deer will suffer accordingly.

As a matter of fact, however, it is not to these hunting parties, but to the market-hunters and the lumber camp hunters that the destruction of deer can be charged. I know several regular hunters who, since we have been going up there, have killed in a single season, each one of them, more deer than our entire party has during the last ten years. This we know not only from their statements but from the bosses of the lumber camps who bought their deer; and these camps have also, each, several who hunt Sundays or whenever opportunity may offer. I know one man who has killed over 400 deer. Nearly all this slaughter is made after the close of the season. Will it be any less when all these market-hunters and lumbermen have a late open season and fifty cent licenses in their pockets?

The few permanent residents, or settlers, in the sections where deer may yet be found would be glad if such wholesale destruction could be prevented; but, for their own use, they all kill deer out of season—seeing that so many others do—and they dare not complain of those who make a business of breaking the game laws.

In fine, the few deer killed during the present open season by parties who go into the woods for recreation are hardly worth counting beside the numbers that are lawlessly slaughtered after the season closes and until midwinter. If it be the purpose of the Michigan authorities to increase this slaughter unto extermination, let them change the open season as proposed and issue 50-cent licenses to kill; but if they want to preserve the game, which is all that will be worth anything in a large portion of the upper peninsula when the lumber—now nearly exhausted—shall have been fully cut, let them maintain the present law and make some effort to enforce the provisions for preventing this destruction. With the game destroyed, when the lumbermen get through, much of that country will be a worthless wilderness, but with the game preserved it will be taken up by hunting clubs who will pay taxes and distribute much money there every year.

TO ESTABLISH A GAME PRESERVE IN FLORIDA

Chicago.

Editor American Field:—On Tuesday, February 5, a number of Chicagoan devotees of the gun, rod and camera are going down to Western Florida for the purpose of establishing a game preserve and Winter club.

This move is the result of a trip made by two of our local gun cranks who have just returned from that region and who brought back such a glowing account of the locality, which is perfectly adapted for the purpose in view, that they have started the ball rolling, and which it is hoped will eventuate in the establishment of one of the best game preserves in this country.

We need a game preserve that will be pervaded by the spirit of Chicago, and we should have one that is commensurate with the greatness of our much-abused city. As Mr. Bortree in his eloquent address before the National Game, Bird and Fish Protective Association says, "sportsmen have been ever ready to deplete, but have done very little to replenish. Let us try to redeem ourselves and deserve a better name in the future."

The territory for the proposed preserve is an ideal one, and embraces an area of eighteen square miles, with a river having a brisk current running through the center; and the title can be secured at a very low figure. The conditions are perfect for the end in view, the site for the prospective club house being on very high land about one hundred and eighty miles above the gulf level, with sweet spring water gushing from the hillsides; and, surrounded by pine forests with no undergrowth, one can drive all through the woods. The soil is a sandy loam and with such conditions the bugbear of the tourist, viz.: malaria, is conspicuous by its absence.

The site is between two rivers, about eight miles apart, which swarm with black bass, bream, etc. Direct communication can be had with the nearest river, less than a mile away, by a creek which is in near proximity to the club house site. The distance down the river to its mouth is about eight miles, with good navigable water all the way either for row, sail or steam boat. The river empties into a beautiful landlocked bay which teems with all kinds of saltwater fish, pompano, snapper, tarpon, mackerel, mullet and many others that the writer cannot recall at present.

The region of the game park abounds in wild turkeys, deer, black bears, wildcats, and myriads of water fowl. The high lands of Western Florida have heretofore been ignored by the tourist and hunter, and it was a genuine surprise to the writer to find such a delightful place for a game preserve within thirty hours of Chicago.

The party will be met by Col. S. S. Harvey, the most genial, hospitable and whole-souled gentleman that ever wielded a rod. He lives contiguous to the prospective site and will put himself at the disposal of the party, showing them all the advantages of the proposed club. An opportunity will be afforded the party for making a thorough investigation into the merits of the plan.

Those who have piscatorial aspirations can try conclusions on the river for bass, bream, etc., and on the bay they can extend their operations to the saltwater fish. There will be abundant oppertunity also for those who take their guns, for Bob White is there in all his vigor ready to give the gunner a chance to swear at his shells or gun or to smile complacently as he sends his dog to retrieve poor, fluttering Bob. The camera fiend will find that his films are all too soon exhausted, for the number of enchanting spots that fill the eye with delight and the brain with rest would defy a double-shotted kodak.

Take it all in all it is a park worthy of Chicago, and nothing but the very best is quite good enough for this "windy city." Dr. F. A. Hodson.

Carried.

The changes and amendments suggested were as follows: In fifth line of Section 1, after the word "dove," the word wild pigeon be inserted. It was moved by Director Hamline and seconded by Director Price, that the tournament of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association be held from June 3 to 8 inclusive, and that the convention be held on Tuesday evening, June 4. Carried.

Motion to adjourn to meet at Sherman House, February 6, at 3 o'clock p. m., prevailed.

NOTES

A gentleman residing at Brunswick, Neb., writing to a friend at Harlan, Ia., regarding a wolf hunt he participated in along about Christmas time, says: "We formed our men thirty rods apart for a distance of ten miles square, and at 10 o'clock started for the center, a school section in the center of the square. We had a commander for every ten miles and a captain for every mile. You see we took in one hundred sections of land in that way, and as we drew nearer to the center of course the men came closer together. We started the lines at 10 a. m., moved for the center of the school section and reached the lines at 1:30, and found by looking things over that we had 13 wolves in the ring, that were running first one way and then another. We then turned in four greyhounds and two deerhounds and the fun began. The jack-rabbits were thicker than blackbirds on the Missouri bottoms and of all the running you ever saw they did it. They would start for the lines and find it so close they could not get through, and would run along about one hundred yards from the line and the men would shoot forty or fifty shots at them, and all this time the men were slowly closing up on them, and finally got so they had about forty acres in the circle. Then the wolves made a rush for liberty and the hounds had only succeeded in killing one in fifteen minutes; and now the men began firing on them as they would try to go between them, and in five minutes the last wolf was bagged. We found by counting up that the game killed was 213 jack-rabbits, 13 wolves, and as near as could be found about 125 prairie chickens, one badger and [illegible] many quails to count. I tell you, it was the finest sport you ever saw. There were about 750 men and 150 [illegible] that participated in the drive." The wolf and jack-bit part of the hunt—if the rabbits were used for food—was all well enough, but when a hunt of this kind is organized and prairie chickens and quails—"too many [illegible] are killed, it is not sportsmanship and should not be tolerated as such by true sportsmen. If we are overrun [illegible] forbid, prairie chickens and quails are none too plentiful in any portion of Nebraska, and slaughter of this kind, if continued, will very soon annihilate the birds that are there.

In the American Field of January 5, I see an article from Warren R. Leach, of Rushville, Ill., in regard to the California quails in Schuyler County. Some fifteen years ago I turned loose four dozen California quails, near Macomb, in the month of April. They nested and hatched large broods of young, and were often seen in the streets up to about October 20, when every bird disappeared. I took dogs and hunted the ground all over, thinking I might find some of them, but in vain, none of them having been seen here since. The next year a man was hunting birds in Kansas to place in the Smithsonian Institution and he found California quails. He made his report, stating that this was the first time he had ever seen or heard of California quails being in a wild state this side of the Rocky Mountains. I have always thought those birds were my quails hunting for a warmer climate. Mr. Samuel Davis of Schuyler County may have seen the California quails on his farm, and if this should be the case it would look as if they sprang from my importation. If Mr. Davis has the California quails on his farm he will surely know it another Spring, for the male birds sing a song that no other bird sings. They commence early in the morning and keep up the music nearly all day.

Macomb, Ill. W. O. Blaisdell.

Capt. J. J. Vandergrift of the United States light-house service, who is quite a sportsman, and part of whose district takes in the Tennessee River from Paducah, Ky., to Florence, Ala., relates the following incident which occurred during one of his recent trips down the Tennessee: "As we were navigating the Tennessee, about eighteen miles below Johnsonville, we heard a great hallo of huntsmen and yelping dogs on the nearest bank, and at the same instant saw a fine stag leap into the water, not a hundred yards ahead of the Golden Rod, and strike out vigorously for the opposite shore. Luckily, there was a breechloader aboard, and some shells loaded with buckshot. A boat was lowered quickly, for it doesn't take an animal like a deer many seconds to sink beyond all recovery, and when I fired with fatal results the men were alongside in a minute and landed the creature, still in its death throes, in the skiff. By this time the hunters had come up, and seeing what had happened took off their hats and saluted us with loud cheers. It was no robbery of them, for the game would have escaped them anyway."

Let me say to those sportsmen who are talking of changing or amending our game law that now is the time that our quails need protection most, and if each sportsman in the state will take his gun and go out and kill a few hawks and foxes he will do much toward the preservation of our Bob Whites. And when a man goes out to do a little of this kind of game preserving he should take along with him a quantity of wheat or corn and scatter it in places where the qualls are likely to find it. I am in favor of our state passing a law offering a bounty for hawk scalps and fox scalps, as I think it would stimulate the boys to kill more of them, and every time a fox or hawk is made to bite the dust a good act has been performed for the preservation of quails. Those who favor game protection should not put off going out for hawks and foxes, but go now when they are doing the greatest harm.

The Duck Island Club of Peoria held its regular annual meeting at the National Hotel, in Peoria, on Tuesday, January 15. The reports of the board of managers, and secretary and treasurer were read, showing the numerous improvements that had been made by the club during 1894, the most important being the erection of pumping works so that during an extra dry season a high stage of water can be maintained, as was evidenced last Fall by the excellent shooting enjoyed by the members. The roll of this club is now complete, with a number of applicants for stock. The officers for 1895 are as follows: President, Ferd Luthy; vice-president, W. L Shepard; secretary, N. E. D. Huggins; treasurer, H. H. Fahnestock; board of managers, Ferd Luthy, H. H. Fahnestock, N E D Huggins, W. H. Shaw and W. L. Shepard.

Chicago. W. L Shepard.

Mr. J. Roberts Mead of Portland Ore., than whom there is not a more enthusiastic sportsman in the state, at all times has [illegible] interest of game and fish at heart, [illegible] an angler par excellence, and a [illegible] ility and a gentleman always, [illegible] the proper man for the office of [illegible] arden for Oregon. The appointment of a state warden will be made next month and we recommend, in conjunction with all the best sportsmen of Oregon, his name to Governor Lord for that position, for he not only would see that the spirit of the game and fish statutes would be carried out, but he would be an honor to the state and the office. Unprincipled candidates should be guarded against, as personal aggrandisement is their sole motive.

A writer in a local paper published at San Jacinto, Cal., says that recently he rode more than two hundred miles through the rural districts of Riverside and San Diego counties, a section where, a dozen years ago, he would have seen thousands of quails, yet in all that ride he only saw two bevies, and they not large bevies either. From this fact he argues that it will not be many years until the birds will be practically extinct in that section of the state. There will always be a few birds there, he says, because there are many rocky and otherwise inaccessible places where they will breed and live in spite of the market-shooter, but they will afford no pleasure for the sportsman. Even now, he claims, it is half a day's journey from San Jacinto to any good quail shooting grounds.

The Robins Island Club has purchased, through Mr. John Glessing, of Forest Gate, London, some fifty to seventy-five pheasants for the purpose of introducing new blood into their present stock, knowing as everyone does the consequence of too close inbreeding. These pheasants have been purchased in small numbers from different aviaries and furnish a variety of changes. The superintendent of the club gave its members excellent sport last Fall. I believe they have already killed several hundred. The exact report is not yet in, as the season is not quite closed. With this importation they will undoubtedly excel all previous efforts.

New York. William Glessing.

In the American Field of January 12, I find an article stating that Messrs. Heming and Whitney had gone to the Great Slave Lake region. The statement was made that no other white man except Warburton Pike ever penetrated that region. In 1884-85 a Mr. Garland and his servant, Beatty, traveled in that region, and in 1892-93-94 I traveled two thousand miles on snowshoes and fifteen hundred by canoe in the same locality, reaching to Bathurst Inlet on the north, bringing out five musk ox and penetrating to the heart of the buffalo country. While I did not go to obtain "material for the pen and brush," my pen was not idle.

Iowa City, Ia. Frank Russell.

I left Leadville, Colo., in 1889 and have been here since then. I am a director and vice-president of the Salt Lake Sportsmen's Club. We have a club house and grounds at Spring Lake, near Provo, Utah, about 45 miles south of this city. This lake is an arm of Utah Lake and a pretty good place for duck shooting. I still shoot and fish a little, but have done no trap shooting for several years. I see the names of some of the "old crowd" in the American Field occasionally, but I presume many of them, like myself, are too old for trap shooting.

Salt Lake City, Utah. S. McDowall.

A gun club and game protective association has been organized at North Judson, Ind., with twenty-one members, the main objects of the organization being the protection of game and the enforcement of the game laws of that state. Each member of the club has pledged himself to abstain from shooting game out of season and to use every honest means to punish violators of the law. The officers of the organization for the ensuing year are as follows: President, Joseph Hubbard; vice-president, Wm. Lain; secretary, B Lightcap; treasurer, U. S. Devor; directors, A. T. Hetfield, N. L. Marsh and Geo. Dunkelbarger.

I read with much interest, in the American Field of January 5, the article from Mr. Warren Leach of Rushvill, Ill., regarding the California quails seen near his city. In 1892 a party of gentlemen in this city liberated on the game preserve of a club near Lomax, Hancock County, Ill., about fifteen miles south of Burlington and forty-five or fifty miles northwest of Rushville, eight California quails and twenty-nine California pheasants, and since that time nothing has been seen of the quails, though the pheasants, from reports received, are doing nicely.

Burlington, Ia. N. S. Young.

A report from Pine River, Wis., is to the effect that the Poygan Club, a Chicago organization, through its trustee, Robert E. Clark, has of late been purchasing all the land that could be had that was held by the club on leases. By this action the club has obtained hundreds of acres of land along Lake Poygan, Willow Creek and Pine River which constitute an immense and valuable hunting preserve. The fact of the purchase was discovered only recently, when some parties went and examined the county records with a view to purchasing the land for speculative purposes.

I look for the passage, by our state legislature, of the bill for the protection of small game and hope that it will become a law at the present session. Small game has been shamefully slaughtered in this state by market-hunters until there is scarcely none left for breeding purposes. Rabbits, partridges, quails and squirrels have been slaughtered by the hundreds and sent to Grand Rapids and other markets for the few dollars that could be obtained for them, and it is high time that something was done to put a stop to this business.

Sparta, Mich. T. E. Coleman.

The sportsmen of Onondaga and Madison counties, New York, are apparently not altogether pleased with that part of the work of the state association wherein the open season on ducks was made to end on March 1, for they have drawn up petitions to be sent to their representatives at Albany informing them that they prefer to have the open season continue until May 1, stating that in the Spring is the only time in the year when they have any duck shooting worth anything.

The Massachusetts Fish and Game Commissioners, in their annual report to the Legislature, advise that English sparrows should be included in the list of game birds, so that their destruction will become legitimate sport, saying that if something of the kind is not done the pugnacious sparrows will soon destroy all the plumage and song birds in the state and thus much damage will result to crops.

The Sussex County (N. J.) Game and Fish Protective Association, which was organized some weeks ago, held its second meeting on Saturday, January 19, enrolling twenty-seven new members, many of them prominent men of the county who never think of hunting but who wish to encourage the association for the benefit it will be to their county.

Mr. Armin Tenner, the gentleman who conducted the nitro powder tests at Chicago and Carney's Point, N. J., a year or so ago, is at present sojourning in Berlin, Germany, where he will probably remain for some time.

AN OHIO FOX HUNT

Cincinnati, O.

Editor American Field:—The annual meet of the Batavia Fox-Hunters' Club, held during five days of Christmas week, was voted a success by participants; notwithstanding the nasty weather of snow, gale and blizzard with their accompanying piercing cold that was decidedly unpleasant and uninviting enough to have kept the average sportsman close by his warm fireside. Christmas Day alone was favorable to the rider and hounds.

The country hunted over is an ideal one, somewhat broken, yet not hilly enough to make riding after hounds hard or dangerous. Several low cliffs bordering on and overlooking Stone Lick Creek, less than two miles distant from the pretty and picturesque town of Batavia, are a great rendezvous for foxes: in fact, dens innumerable are located there and no difficulty whatever is experienced in jumping sly Reynard—he is at home to visitors every day in the week.

The pack of eighteen hounds owned by the club are of the American type—large, heavy, muscular, and having good nose and much endurance. In addition to the above Col. A. B. Whitlock of Kentucky entered four and two puppies from his noted pack of "shaggy" hounds, and Mr. Langdon Anderson of Cincinnati had five entered from his pack.

Christmas Day opened auspiciously, with ground wet, and hounds fresh and eager for the chase. The course chosen was that along Elk Lick Creek, two miles from town. At daybreak twelve hounds were cast off, and in less than twenty minutes a fox was jumped, with the pack off in full cry and well bunched. The pace was at once a killing one, for this fox did not romp and play with his pursuers as is sometimes the case, being pressed too hard from the start to "back-track" and peep over the last hill crossed to smile at the laborious work the hounds are having in making out the very uncertain trail laid by himself. No time for rest, for his terra-cotta brush was in jeopardy, and in less than three hours he had run his race and taken refuge in a hollow log as four hounds were at his very heels. On arrival of horsemen he was soon excavated alive and without a scratch, and was held over for a run on Saturday.

Wednesday's weather proved a barrier to running that day, for a nasty gusty northeast gale accompanied by snow and sleet made a postponement necessary.

Thursday was equally unfavorable, yet hounds were cast off shortly after daybreak on Elk Lick, started a fox, and did beautiful work in the deep snow; but after an hour's run they were called off, owing to the gale and a blinding snowstorm.

Friday morning brought Greenland weather sure enough. The thermometer registered 4 degrees above zero at six a. m., while snow, seven inches on the level, covered the ground. In the face of these unfavorable conditions fourteen hounds were cast off at seven o'clock, and in less than thirty minutes they found a hot trail, much to the surprise and gratification of the hunting party. Brisk riding was necessary to reach the pack, and to follow was almost impossible owing to treacherous riding over ground hidden beneath the snow. Every imaginable maneuver was resorted to by this fox to lose the pack but to no avail. He was a game runner, evidently well fed by the choicest specimens in near-by farmers' poultry yards, with an occasional taste of lamb by way of variety, and felt in fine fettle for a long race. His last bit of strategy was running zigzag along Stone Lick Creek for more than four miles, taking to water at fords, ripples, and unfrozen portions of the route, and running along ice where the wind had blown the snow off; but finding his cunning efforts to escape futile he finally went to earth in the cliffs before noted, after giving the hounds a run of five hours and forty minutes and frequently during that time passing close by and within sight of those on horseback. Of the fourteen hounds in at the start but three finished, all deserving the greatest credit for their display of trailing powers, speed and endurance. Col. Whitlock's red shaggy hound Gregg led the pack all the way and is without doubt the best all-round foxhound ever seen in this section, and with Mr. Langdon Anderson's white, black and tan hound, Sherlock, and Mr. Thos. Glancy's black and tan Lead were the only ones in at the finish.

On Saturday, the last day of the meet, the captive fox was turned down, and a very pretty run given the puppy hounds. This was short and sweet, the run lasting less than an hour. Being hard pressed and somewhat out of running form by the enforced confinement, Reynard made for the bluffs, finding safety in the dens there.

Owing to the nearness of this locality to Cincinnati—being but twenty miles away and easily reached by rail or good free pikes—and its being favored with game in plenty and a beautiful riding country whose populace believe in the sport, follow it, and extend true hospitality to those participating from a distance, as a suitable point for holding the next meet of the National Fox-Hunters' Association none can offer more favorable inducements than do Batavia and Clermont County, Ohio.

The Hon. R. W. C. Gregg, Thomas Glancy and Charles Tatman entertained right royally the club's guests from Cincinnati They were Langdon Anderson, Eugene Hoffman, E. E. Isbell and Geo. G. Johnston of Cincinnati and Col. A. B. Whitlock of Kentucky.

EASTON WEST.

OPINIONS ON FOXHOUNDS

INGRAMS MILL, MISS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In your paper of November 24 was an article headed "Opinions on Foxhounds," from Mr. J. M. Avent, to which I want to make a short reply. His attack on Willis was unjust and cannot be sustained by facts. In the first place I will state that for two years I have said that Hunter and Rowdy were two of the best red fox foxhounds in the United States. Mr. Avent has not a single hound that is their equal. When I met Mr. Avent two years ago at Waterford, Miss., we ran two red foxes; the first morning the run lasted two and one-half hours, and Hunter caught the fox, the next morning the chase lasted just fifty-five minutes, and again Hunter caught the fox one hundred yards ahead of the pack. There were forty-five hounds in these two runs, and fifteen of them were Mr. Avent's. I called that an extra performance when in company with forty-four other good hounds; indeed it was so good that I never expect to see it done again by any hound.

Now I want to state that in all the dealings I have had with Capt. Luttrell his representations and statements concerning Willis in every particular I have found to be correct and I have never regretted paying him fifty dollars for Willis; and if I had Fannie to-day (as an outcross) I would rather breed her to Willis than any hound I ever saw.

Every experienced hunter must laugh when he reads Mr. Avent's comparison between Hunter and Willis. He says that Hunter will strike one hundred trails to Willis' one, and jump fifty foxes to his one, and hunt six miles while Willis is hunting over half a mile. Great Scott! did any hunter ever hear such gassing? Avent must think that Willis and all his posterity are dead. I want to say right here that there are very few living foxhounds superior to Willis. Mr. Avent also speaks of Fannie as "the little runty bitch" Well, I will tell your readers that Fannie weighs 39 pounds; Hunter about 45 or 46 pounds; and Willis 44 pounds. He also says that Hunter will trail or run a fox ten miles while Fannie is going five. I contend that Fannie will hunt, trail and run close up to Hunter all day, and as Mr. Avent and myself are so far apart in regard to the work of these hounds, I will make him this proposition: I believe the bird dog trials meet at New Albany, Miss., on February 5. If Mr. Avent will bring Hunter and Fannie and two of Hunter's get over two years old and two of them under one year old, I will take Willis and two of Fannie's puppies over two years old and two Fannie—Willis puppies under one year old, and we will run them together as long as Mr. Avent likes. I contend that the dogs I have bred Fannie to are as good as any bitch Mr. Avent has bred Hunter to, and I would like to prove it to him and the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD. I suggest New Albany because I want a crowd of true sportsmen to witness the comparison.

Mr. Avent speaks of Willis being part collie. There is no judge on earth who would say that Willis is half as much a collie as his two English hounds are like bulldogs, and a collie has more sense and speed than a bulldog.

I have five Fannie—Willis puppies that will be one year old in February, and I will run them against anything of their age in the United States for sport or money. I mean just what I say. Yours for right and justice,

W. I. SPEARS.

NOTES

CALLING the foxhounds together about New Year's, and starting with Lincoln, Wonder, Gelert and Lady St. Clair, we struck the trail of the fiery red fox of Pickerel Lake. Hounds trailed through eight inches snow for half a mile, then Gelert gave the signal that the quarry was started. Lincoln and the others harked to him, the musical notes of the hounds sounding loud and clear and distinct. The chase went on over gullies and hills. Getting on a hill I saw the fox coming and looking like a blaze of fire, so red was this old fox; hounds coming fast and furious on his track left no time for fooling. Having a word for each hound that passed; which was heartily responded to by the hounds as they were enjoying the hunt through snow. After circling twice, the hounds running without loss and pressing the fox hard, he barely escaped by going to ground in Pickerel Lake hills. I have purchased Caperton II from W. C. King. Caperton was bred and trained by W. C. Goodman and will make a valuable addition to my pack.

WE are very glad to hear that Joe Carr, Mr. E. H. Walker's hound that was lost the first day of the Brunswick Fur Club's Winter meet, has been found. Joe was captured in Francistown, N. H., fifty miles from Barre, Mass., where he was cast off. Mr. W. S. Walker left the East for home on January 18; while there he was the guest of Mr. A. B. F. Kinney at Worcester, hunted from the famous Tourtellotte House at Millbury with Mr. John M. White's pack, and made a flying visit to Portsmouth, N. H., where he was entertained by Dr. A. C. Heffenger, President of the Brunswick Fur Club. If Mr. Steve Walker had returned home without Joe Carr, how could he have faced his brother?

FOXHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by Mr. E. Hopkins, St. Francisville, Mo.; Keystone Kennel Co., Philadelphia, Pa., and Mr. A. A. Runge, Burlington, Ia.

Fish and Fishing

AN ANGLER'S PARADISE

BY W. M. BRINKERHOFF

For twenty-five years past I have been considered by my associates a fish crank, pure and simple. It has been my privilege to travel in almost every section of the United States and many portions of Canada in my general business, and I have endeavored as far as possible to visit the fishing resorts along my line of travel. Or in other words, I have done the fishing act from Grand Narrows, Cape Breton, to the mouth of the Columbia River, but not until recently have I discovered what may properly be called the Sportsman's Paradise.

There are a great many places in this country where one can go with good assurance of catching many fish and of having a good time while at the sport, but there are very few places in this country or Canada where one can go and catch lake trout, mascalonge, pike, etc., and not be compelled to tramp over a large extent of territory.

Undoubtedly many readers of the AMERICAN FIELD know of the section whereof I write, but there are many others quite unaware, I dare say, of the fact that the counties of Ashland, Oneida and Forest in Wisconsin and Gogebic and Ontonagon in the Northern Peninsula of Michigan embrace the most extensive field for the sportsman that lies within the borders of the United States. I have learned from good authority that within the five counties mentioned there are upward of two thousand lakes, the great majority of which are connected by streams of sufficient depth to admit of the passage of a canoe or medium sized rowboat, and in all cases the lakes are so close to each other that it is but a short trip overland from one to the other.

To accurately and minutely describe this section of the country in the limited space of this article, is rather a difficult matter but I will give briefly my experience in getting to this region, also what to do after one gets there and other general information of interest to the sportsman. This region is traversed, one might say surrounded, by the lines of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway; in fact two branches of the Ashland Division traverse it in such a manner that one is enabled to reach almost any point from one or more of the stations along the line.

I left Chicago by the "Ashland Limited," Chicago & Northwestern Railway, at 5 p. m. This train hauls sleepers and supper is served in the dining car, so one starts enjoying the comforts and luxuries of modern travel. I left the train at Woodruff, three hundred and sixty-five miles north of Chicago, arriving there at 4:30 a. m., and had breakfast at Muir's Hotel. At this point I was met by Mr. George Brown, who operates the stage line from Woodruff to Camp Frankiln, on Trout Lake, a distance of fourteen miles.

This stage ride is a very pleasant and interesting one. Starting out from Woodruff you are taken six miles through as dense a forest as there is in Northern Wisconsin. Then there is a beautiful sheet of water called Spider Lake, along whose shores you are driven for a distance of two miles; then through woods again, for another two miles, to the banks of Silver Lake, rightly named, for the morning I passed it the surface certainly had the appearance of one mass of polished silver. Not a ripple was visible, and surrounded as it is by tall pine and white birch trees it certainly presented a picture well worthy of the name and of your time to go the entire distance even if you did not see anything else. You are driven also the shores of this lake for two miles also, then about two miles further through the woods, and you arrive at Camp Franklin. This place is situated on the southern shores of Trout Lake and within two rods of the water's edge. The hotel is said to be the finest log building in the state of Wisconsin, the main part being ninety feet in length, forty feet in width, and two stories in height, with a wing extending back to the rear of the house, embracing the kitchen and sleeping rooms for the hotel people; the main body of the house is entirely given up to guests. The building is nicely made, well furnished and under first-class management, having in the west end of the lower floor a large sitting-room, with an open fireplace in which logs of considerable size can be rolled and burned. The next room east is the office and general sitting-room, and the one adjoining that, on the east, is the dining-room.

The sleeping-rooms upstairs all are of comfortable size and furnished with elegant beds, just as good as you get at your own homes. The table is at all times supplied with substantial material for the inner man, and during my stay at this place—which covered a period of several days—I had no occasion in any particular to say anything but praise in connection with what I received. Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Coon, the proprietors, are on hand at all times to attend to the wants of their guests. Those who are seeking health, for whom pure air, pine forests and outdoor exercise are required, will travel many miles before finding as desirable a place as the woods in Northern Wisconsin.

As to the fishing in this section, in all my travels I never have found anything to compare with it. The mascalonge fishing takes the lead over that of all other waters in the United States or Canada. While I did not spend much time in this direction, owing to the fact that a friend whom I expected to join me notified me, after I had waited several days, that it would be impossible for him to come. My time was then getting short and I could not fish to any extent for mascalonge. However, in half a day's fishing in Lake Allequash, two miles from Camp Franklin, I caught one mascalonge which weighed nineteen and one-half pounds. The same day I saw two that were caught by a lady, I think, in Boulder Lake; one weighed thirty-five pounds and the other forty-two pounds. During my stay there I saw at least twenty five mascalonge, ranging from ten pounds to forty-two pounds in weight.

For some time past my principal fishing has been for the lake trout, and mainly in the waters of Central New [illegible] that there were many lake trout in [illegible] I thought I would see what could be done [illegible] I spent four and one-half days on [illegible] each day from about eight o'clock until half past eleven in the morning, and from half past one until five in the afternoon. These four and one-half days yielded me 109 lake trout, the total weight being 447 pounds. The largest one of the lot, and in fact the largest lake trout I have ever caught, weighed seventeen and one-half pounds when he came out of the water, and he did not get away. I do not believe that anyone would care for better lake trout fishing than this.

Undoubtedly many readers of this article will say they do not believe there is a lake trout in Northern Wisconsin that will weigh seventeen and one-half pounds; that the statement's another fish lie. But let me tell all my readers now, that it is unnecessary to tell fish lies providing you do your fishing in the region of which I am writing. If you tell the truth your assertions will be doubted just the same. This seventeen and one-half pound trout being so far in advance of anything in this line ever caught by me before, I had a desire to send him where he could be seen by others, and being some fifteen hundred miles from home I could not send him there, so it struck me he would show up pretty well at the General Passenger Office of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, and so down to Chicago the fish went, to Mr. W. B. Kniskern, now general passenger and ticket agent, and I give here his letter acknowedging the receipt of the same:

MR. W. M. BRINKERHOFF, care Camp Franklin, Woodruff, Wis.

Dear Sir:—It affords me pleasure to acknowledge receipt of the box of fish mentioned in yours of September 25. The seventeen-pound trout is indeed a beauty, and I am very much indebted for your kind remembrance of me. Yours very truly,

W. B. KNISKERN,
Asst. Gen. Pass. and Ticket Agent.

I give this acknowledgment so that no one need accept the statement of a fisherman, for, as before remarked, I am aware there are those who would put me down as a fish liar for making the statement that in four and one-half days I caught 109 lake trout of a total weight of 447 pounds, the largest one of seventeen and one-half pounds' weight. Nevertheless such was the case.

Before describing other lakes, I wish to say a few more words about Camp Franklin. It is a most desirable place for ladies and children. It is beautifully located, having large verandas facing the lake. In connection with the hotel is a nice steam yacht for conveying people around the lake, which adds very much to the luxuries of the camp. There is as fine a line of row-boats—round bottomed—at this point as can be found at any place; and tourists need have no hesitancy in taking their wives and children into this region, for they can have a splendid time at Camp Franklin while the men and boys are tramping through the woods and visiting other lakes.

Another very important feature in connection with this wilderness is the class, or rather one might term it the quality of the guides. I saw something like a dozen of them while I was there, and without exception they were all gentlemanly, sober men. Mr. Thomas A. Miller, who engineered me through that section for nearly two weeks, is a man of as gentlemanly qualities as one would wish to find anywhere. His home is on an island in Trout Lake, where he lives with Mrs. Miller and their two children. This guide certainly I can vouch for; and should anyone go to Camp Franklin if that person will drop a line to Thomas A. Miller, whose postoffice address is Woodruff, Wis., the services of a first-class guide can be secured.

In going up into this couutry for an outing, if I had two months' time I should start in, say, about August 1, or if I had only four weeks to spare would take the month of September. Everybody tells me that the climate is fine all Summer, with cool days and cool nights. It is necessary to have as little luggage as possible, especially if one intends going away from Camp Franklin to be gone several days. Baggage can be left in care of Landlord Coon for an indefinite length of time. Many leave the camp and with their guide are absent several weeks before returning.

The Chicago & Northwestern Railway, as before stated, traverses this lake region in such a manner that it is possible to get within a reasonable distance of any of the choice sections of the territory, but I do not believe there is any better point to start from than at Camp Franklin. It is easy of access from Chicago to Woodruff, and there are first-class accommodations from there to Camp Franklin, and then one is right in the heart of the region for fishing and hunting.

If you desire you can fish in thirty-two lakes, starting from Camp Franklin, [illegible]day in each lake and get back [illegible] being gone two days you [illegible] lakes, and get back the second [illegible] in other words, this country consists of lakes and woods, and when you come to consider that you have upward of one thousand square miles of territory, and that ninety-nine per cent. of that territory is a region as wild as that bordering on Hudson Bay, you conclude that you are in good section for fishing and hunting.

Undoubtedly many will say that they do not care to go into so wild and new a country. If you like the woods, water, fishing and hunting, you cannot find a section where you would be any better pleased. During my stay in the woods I did not see a rough-spoken or intoxicated person, but at all times received the most gentle and courteous treatment. Of course, it is necessary at all times to employ a guide. As everyone well knows, in such a large forest it would not be a very difficult matter to get lost if you went alone, but the guides know every trail and portage from Lake Gogebic to Rhinelander.

Of course there are many points along the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway at which one can stop to enter this sporting region. The railway divides at Monico Junction, one branch running directly north, through Three Lakes, Eagle River, Scott, Conover, State Line, Watersmeet, Gogebic, and so on to Hurley; the other branch extends from Monico Junction through Rhinelander, Tomahawk Lake, Woodruff, Bolton, Lac du Flambeau, Manitowish, Mercer, and so on to Hurley, at which point the two branches come together, and the main line continues to Ashland.

On the first branch referred to one can get off at Three Lakes, Eagle River or State Line and go to the fishing grounds very conveniently; or, on the other branch, at Rhinelander, Tomahawk Lake, Woodruff, Bolton, Lac du Flambeau or Mercer, and reach the fishing grounds as conveniently. But, so far as I have been able to learn, you will not find any of them, taking everything into consideration, so much for your interest as to get off at Woodruff, and make your headquarters at Camp Franklin, on Trout Lake. You can readily see, by studying the map, that at that point you are nearer the ceutral section of this great forest, or, in other words, the best fishing territory, at Camp Franklin.

The black bass fishing in some of the lakes of this section is not excelled anywhere. The waters seem to be alive with them. Especially is this so at Lake Gogebic, the largest lake in this wooded country. To get there you take the sleeper from Chicago, on the Chicago & Northwestern, at 5 p. m., and you reach Gogebic the next morning, at half-past six o'clock. It is claimed by the fishermen that there is no better place in the United States for black bass fishing than Gogebic Lake. The head of the lake lies about ten miles from the railroad station. At the lake one will find first-class accommodations.

I could keep on writing, almost indefinitely, about this section, but from what I have said the average fisherman can gather enough to know that Northern Wisconsin and the Upper Peninsula of Michigan form a good territory in which to spend a vacation. Deer hunting in this section is first-class, but the season remains open only thirty days, from October 1 to November 1. Not being a hunter, I know very little about this sport further than what has been reported to me.

For lake trout fishing, take with you to that country two sets of trolling spoons manufactured at Canandaigua, N. Y.; for mascalonge Nos. 7 and 9 Skinner's trolling spoons, two or three of each, and No. 3 lines. The Skinner's spoons and the lines can be bought in Chicago, from dealers in fishing tackle, etc., at one dollar and twenty-five cents per set. With a rod and reel and a box in which to carry your fishing tackle you are ready for business; Messrs. Coon and Miller will supply the rest.

I called at the office of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Co., on my return, desiring to obtain some printed matter, if they had any, in connection with this northern region. Mr. W. B. Kniskern advised me that they had a very voluminous document in print, which would be soon out, entitled "Hunting and Fishing on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway," embodying all the fishing and huntiug districts. Owing to the limited number to be printed—twenty-five thousand copies—I would advise all those who desire to know more about this country than I have written to make early application for a copy of this book, which will be mailed to all applicants to the extent of the supply.

NOTES

THE angling in this locality was very poor last Spring, as the water was too roiley and the weather too cold until very late. The Fall angling was excellent, as the water was low and clear, and the weather was very fine. One day last October, J. M. Popham and Dr. J. W. Byers, having their fishing tackle and provisions loaded into a buggy, left at 6 a. m., for a day's angling north of the Big Four Railroad, at a point three miles northeast of this city. The morning was very cool and clear. There had been a killing frost and ice had frozen one-eighth of an inch thick. The thermometer registered twenty-eight degrees. The forest tree leaves looked magnificent in their hues of gold, red, pink, violet, orange and crimson. The fishermen soon arrived at the Embarras River and caught some fine minnows and went to angling for bass. Only a few were caught before noon, when the thermometer registered fifty-four degrees. They went to work in earnest when dinner had been served, and at six o'clock they counted twenty-nine bass, total weight thirty-five pounds; weight of largest two and one-half pounds, weight of smallest three-fourths of a pound. Mr. Popham's largest bass was one ounce heavier than the Doctor's biggest and the Doctor had to surrender the championship belt for the day. Temperature at 6 p. m., forty-six degrees.

Charleston, Ill. J. B. D.

THE vivacious fish liar has begun to get in his work early this year, as may be seen by the accompanying account of how a Pennsylvania boy turned himself into a fishpond for the entertainment of his playmates, according to the Blairsville Evening Courier: "Mr. Drummond has also another peculiarity of palate that is rather unique, and that is the eating or swallowing alive of chubs or little fish. Of late years he has not been able to gratify this appetite to any extent, but when a boy, he says that he used to have heaps of fun in going to a brook, catching a dozen or more chubs, swallowing them alive, and then permit his companions to introduce a baited fish hook into his stomach and again catch the fish. This would be kept up ad infinitum." We do not wish to reflect upon the veracity of the above statement, but must say it seems dallying with the truth ad infinitum.

AN interesting case was recently decided by Justice Gaynor of the Supreme Court in New York. The State Fish Commissianers had begun an action to recover a penalty from Henry C. Fish for taking menhaden in a net within the jurisdiction of Richmond County. Their action was based upon an ordinance, supplementary to the game laws, by which the County Supervisors of Richmond County imposed a fine of $100 upon any one taking menhaden with a net within their jurisdiction. Fish interposed [illegible]urrer, which was sustained by Justice Gaynor, of the Supreme Court. The Judge holds that though power was given to the supervisors to pass ordinances in relation to game, it did not authorize them to pass an ordinance overriding the law, which they did on this occasion, for the game laws, in prohibiting the taking of fishes by nets at certain seasons, expressly excepted menhaden.

THE annual meeting of the Camp Darby and Fishing and Hunting Club, of Columbus, O., took place January 8, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Henry Waldschmidt; vice-president, George Geigle; secretary, Carl Schroeder; treasurer, Charles A. Deibel; trustees, Louis Weilbacher, Henry Linkenheil, Gust Plettner; sergeant-at-arms, Ed Vogelgesang; assistant sergeant-at arms, William Zimmerer. The report of the treasurer showed the club to be in a flourishing condition. The installation of officers will take place January 30, and great preparations are being made to give a banquet to the members and their families.

AMONG the men prominently mentioned as likely to be appointed by Gov. Morton, of New York, as State Fish Commissioner, is Mr. A. Nelson Cheney, whose friends are urging his fitness for the office and that the State Fish Commission be made a single-headed commission Mr. Cheney recently made a formal call upon Gov. Morton, and is reported to have stated that he thinks Gov. Morton much prefers a single-headed commission. Of Mr. Cheney's qualifications to properly fill the position there can be little doubt, as probably few men in that state have greater knowledge of piscatorial matters.

ON January 9 N. D. Reynolds and George Shine, two men who had been charged with violation of the California fish law by dynamiting fishes in the Russian River, were tried in the Superior Court of Sonoma County, and upon convictiou Judge Crawford imposed a fine upon each of $100, the lowest penalty under the law. These two convictions are regarded as an important victory for the State Fish Commissioners, says the San Francisco Chronicle, and "taken as evidence of a healthful public sentiment in Sonoma County."

RECENT reports from New Jersey are that pickerel fishing through the ice has proved very successful on the lakes and ponds. As a rule the fishermen have made big strings, and more large pickerel have been taken this Winter than during any previous ice season. Fishes of four to five pounds are not uucommon, and from some lakes pickerel which weighed six and one-half pounds, seven aud one-quarter pounds and nearly eight pounds have been reported.

THE Fish Commissioners of Pennsylvania announced recently that they would receive applications for trout fry to be placed in the waters of the state. Applications for Lancaster, Lebanon, York, Adams, Franklin and Fulton counties should be made to Fish Commissioner H. C. Demuth, of Lancaster. The distribution will begin the latter part of March and continue through April, May and June, and any application must be indorsed by the Senator or Representatives from the district where the applicant resides.

LOVERS of angling will envy the fortunate fishermau who caught an eight and one-half pound trout, in the Snake River, near American Falls, Idaho, of which Mr. W. D. Burgess of that place sent us a paper profile in a recent letter. The profile measures two feet and thirteen-sixteenths of an inch in length, and the trout was caught with a minnow for bait. The sender of the profile says, to the Editor of the AMERICAN FIELD: "The boys invite you out here to catch a few of these boys; water's full of 'em aud hills full of elks and deer."

ON the evening of January 10, a number of enthusiastic anglers of Moline, Ill., organized the Moline Fishing Club, and elected the following officers: President, H. A. Barnard; first vice-president, G. A. Stephens; second vice-president, Henry Seller; secretary, E. E. Morgan; treasurer, O. F. Anderson. The club numbers sixty-five charter members, and the annual dues were fixed at one dollar. The annual meeting will be held the first Wednesday of next January.

AT Stark, N. H., on January 10, Stephen Crawford, the superintendent of the Piney Summer Club at Christine Lake, on complaint of Detective Blake, was brought before Justice Harvey for violating the fish laws by catching trout through the ice. Crawford claimed that the trout were for breeding purposes and that he had permission from the State Fish Commissioners. The case was taken up to be heard at the April term of court.

IN Sussex County, N. J., Fish Warden Hendershot recently succeeded in having convicted five men for fishing with nets illegally, the parties having paid a fine of twenty-five dollars each. The law-abiding anglers of that section are congratulating themselves that the enforcement of the law probably will make better sport in the proper season.

DURING heavy rains that occurred not long since in the vicinity of Watsonville, Cal., it is said a man who was walking past the pond known as Hobson's duck-pond, at the corner of Main and Bridge streets of that place, heard a splashing in the water and upon investigation found a salmon two feet in length floundering about in the pond.

THE Firm Fishing Club of Brooklyn, N. Y., recently held a meeting and elected officers as follows: President, Edward Dillmier; vice-president, Benjamin J. Becker; secretary, Thomas Raber; treasurer, Fred. Wortmann; commodore, John A. Barger; sergeant-at-arms, Joseph Whitley.

A BATCH of 10,000 young trout were placed recently in Pequest Creek, near Hackettstown, N. J., by Fish Warden Edward Hill.

IN Illinois, Gov. Altgeld has appointed C. D. Ramsey of Dixon state fish warden for that part of the state.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 1

BY MORRIS GIBBS

The reptiles to be described have been principally collected and studied in Kalamazoo County, my home, which lies between the 42nd and 43rd parallels north latitude, and 85th and 86th degrees longitude west. However, notes have been taken in eleven other counties in the state, and from St. Mary's River to our southern boundary; in addition to which assistance has been received from fellow observers. Still the records are mainly from my own observations.

This list may fairly be considered a record of the reptiles of the great lake region, and will therefore interest readers who are observers of our fauna within the following boundaries: A line from Columbus, Ohio, to Indianapolis, Ind., then to Lake Itaska, Minn.; to Lake Nepigon; from there to Rochester, N. Y., and then to Columbus, O. There are some species and several varieties which are known to occur within these limits, and are not recorded in this list; but it has not been thought best to include any reptiles excepting those well established in our state. The list and notes may be relied upon as exact so far as concerns the Michigan species. Partial descriptions of the reptiles will be given, together with accounts of their habits so far as known to the writer. The study is an interesting one, and observations on the subject will repay anyone interested in natural history.

Ground-snake; red snake—Carphophis amœna (Say.).—Upper parts chestnut-brown, under parts salmon or yellowish. This is a small species and is said to grow only a foot in length. I have met with a single specimen, and cousider it rare in Michigan. Still it may yet prove abundant as it is not rare in Indiana and New York. My only specimen was removed from a mass of decayed wood, in an old stump, in a forest. Dr. J. A. Allen states that the ground-snake is subterrestrial in its habits, and is more frequently turned up by the plow or hoe than seen crawling on the surface. I know nothing of its habits.

Blacksnake; blue-racer; black-racer—Bascanion constrictor (Linn.).—In Michigan this snake is always blue or dusky bluish, and is therefore called blueracer. Do not understand me to say that we have no black-snakes in Michigan for that would be an error, as we shall describe them later, in another genus; but the commou blacksnake of New England and other Eastern states becomes the blue-racer in the West. All individuals of this species are blue when small, even in the East, I am informed, and here, till they reach a length of two feet or a little more; they are of a beautiful bright cerulean blue, and spotted on their sides with black. At what age the cerulean racer begins to turn darker and lose his spots I am unable to say, but I have captured specimens three feet and one-half long, which were undoubtedly adults as they had entirely lost their bright blue color and were putting on the dusky greenish blue. When the blue-racer reaches full size it is brown on the back, with a faint suggestion of blue, which, however, is more pronounced just after skin shedding. The sides show a shade of greenish-blue and the under parts a dull bluish-white. This variation in collor between the eastern and western B. constrictor is, perhaps, comparable to the transition in the pelage of the gray squirrel Sciurus Carolinensis (Aud.) which is generally found black in this vicinity. I understand that in New York state the two varieties of squirrel intermingle, and that nests of young have been found containing both varieties. I have found this snake almost black here but never quite so.

The longest racer I have ever seen, and it was the longest snake I have measured in Michigan, was six feet four inches in length. Many, that at first sight and when running at full speed looked all of ten feet long, proved to be only between five and six feet, for when moving quickly over the ground they have a very deceiving appearance. From the time when they first appear in the month of April till well along in the Summer, perhaps all the season, this species is to be found in pairs. The female is the more heavily built of the two and generally about six inches longer, the male being much trimmer and seemingly more active, and averaging about sixty inches in length. It is very interesting to watch the movements of a pair when out, apparently, on a foraging expedition, or, perhaps, merely for pleasure. With heads from eight to twelve inches from the ground, they will go across a field or glade in an open piece of woods in majestic style; sometimes dropping down flat to the ground, and again turning their heads toward one another as if in consultation. They keep close together at this time, and generally run neck and neck, and about five feet apart.

If a racer's nest can be found, the snakes may be seen in the vicinity for years. I recall one such habitation, in the hollow and roots of a partially dead basswood stump on the banks of a river. Each season, in May, they could be found there sunning themselves.

The idea generally prevails that a racer can outrun a man, but this belief is erroneous. A good runner can easily run two rods to the blue-racer's one, on good level ground. However, it is rarely that they are found in these situations for, as a rule, it is on low, half-cleared, irregular ground that they are seen, and to chase an adult in such quarters requires some activity, as a racer dashes through brush and bogs, and over logs a foot and a half through as if nothing were there. Nevertheless, I have repeatedly captured them alive on their "native heath," and they have never escaped me unless there was a neighboring stone or brush pile handy for them.

In the month of June, generally the earlier half, the racer deposits its eggs, which are all laid in one spot, as with all the egg-laying snakes of my acquaintance. One instance of late egg-laying has led me to thiuk that perhaps a second set may be an occasional condition. Will some reader of the AMERICAN FIELD kindly inform me if this is ever so? These are placed in a warm situation where the sun's rays may act as an incubator. The eggs are somewhat over an inch and a quarter in [illegible], a thick, tough, skinny shell, and are of [illegible] snake-egg pattern. I am satisfied that a [illegible] mature female lays a greater number [illegible] comparatively small one. This, it is fa[illegible] at least with snakes and turtles. On[illegible] five feet which I dissected contained [illegible] eggs, while a very large one had nearly thirty. Mr. O. P. Hay, of Indiana, opened an egg which was ready to hatch, and removed a young snake over ten inches in length. He speaks of a small sharp tooth projecting from the upper jaw of the young snake, and which was, undoubtedly, to be used in opening the eggshell at the proper time.

I have caught this species in the act of devouring a frog, and doubt not that they are great destroyers of small animals of all kinds. Have known of their swallowing meadow-mice, Arricola. The largest prey that I have found in a racer's stomach was a one-third grown rabbit, Lepus sylvaticus.

The blue-racer makes a nice pet. It is quite intelligent, and often does surprising things to satisfy its curiosity. One day, when firing at a mark with a target pistol, a specimen approached within four feet of my seat and seemed very curious as to my movements. As the racer did not appear till the firing had proceeded for some time, it is reasonable to judge that it was first attracted by the shooting, although it is claimed that serpents are not gifted with hearing. There are so many marvelous stories in regard to snakes, and the blacksnake in particular, that nothing sensational on the subject will be offered here. The racer has a mouthful of teeth, and a good-sized one can give quite a scratch if caught; but there is no danger from the bite, neither is there any authority for the stories regarding its power to kill one with its constricting folds.

NOTES

THE supposed freak of nature in the birth of rattlesnakes at Lincoln Park, Chicago, as reported in our last issue, has had light thrown upon it and errors corrected by a letter from Frederick C. Baker, Secretary and Curator Chicago Academy of Sciences, as follows: "Several errors appeared in the article on the rattlesnakes born at Lincoln Park, and I give below facts which I trust will rectify the false impression formed. In the first place the rattler was very quiet during the birth of the young rattlers, and the only movements made were a violent tremor running throughout the body and a high raising of the tail. In regard to the method of bringing forth their young, the viper family, of which the rattlesnake is a representative, bring forth their young alive, while the other families, as a rule, lay eggs, which require several weeks to hatch. The peculiar and interesting fact connected with the recent births at Lincoln Park is that they were expelled a week or ten days before the natural time, gestation having been stopped, if one could judge from the condition of the embryos, two weeks before completion. The male rattlesnake which was confined with the female was badly crippled and fairly rotted in the cage, which fact may account, in some measure, for the premature delivery of the young rattlers. Lastly, let me say, I have never raised a rattler in my life, and have never seen over a dozen in my many travels through the Southern States. Several articles have appeared severely criticising myself and Prof. O. P. Hay. In reply to these criticisms I wish to say the article of January 11 was an error in reporting and not a fact given by myself or Prof. Hay, the latter gentleman having absolutely nothing to say upon the subject, he having called upon me on business. For the benefit of the untutored public I wish to say the rattlesnake, like other members of the viper family, is ovoviviparous, bringing forth its young alive, the process of 'hatching' going on inside the animal instead of in a calcareously covered egg, incubated in the sand, as in the case of the blacksnake, Coluber constrictor. The births at Lincoln Park zoo were not a paradox in any sense, but a curious freak of nature in expelling the embryos, with their surrounding membrane and food-yelk, a week or ten days before the normal time. This frequently happens, and is nature's safeguard for the mother when the young die before birth, as in the present instance."

ON Saturday, January 5, as two young men were walking in the timber along Coon River, just west of this city, they came upon, as they supposed, a wolf track. They followed it a short distance when, to their surprise, up jumped a large red dog fox, which they quickly laid low with a well-directed shot from a .22-caliber rifle. The ball entered just below the left ear and emerged at the corner of the right eye, a very good shot if it was not an accidental one, as the fox was on a dead run when killed. The skiu has beeu splendidly mounted by our local taxidermist, Mr. A. I. Johnson, and is now on exhibition at his rooms, with a great many other specim[illegible] animals, including a full-grown bull el[illegible] just finished for a state collection. The [illegible] shooting a fox almost in our city limits caused [illegible] able surprise among local sportsmen, as it is [illegible] to my knowledge, that has been killed in this immediate vicinity for years.

In the AMERICAN FIELD of January 19 a [illegible] "Something New Regarding Rattlesnakes," [illegible] that several years ago while hunting prairie [illegible] the Indian Territory, with a Mr. Taylor, as we were driving over a stony ridge I saw a rattlesnake. I got out and killed it with the whip. Noticing it looked large I turned it over, put my foot upon its head, my companion handed me his knife and I ripped it open. To my surprise I found it contained twelve young rattlers, each one encased in a sack by itself. I opened the sacks and found the youngsters very lively, they wou'd dodge their heads when I would strike at them with my knife. I had a rule with me and they measured nine inches each, while the old one measured two and one-half feet, making in all eleven and one-half feet of rattlesnake. I made a note of it at the time.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 1

BY A. K. DELANEY

The Transcontinental Ride over the Northern Pacific

No one, who has not crossed the North American continent, can form a true idea of either the magnitude or the physical features of that dominion over which "Uncle Sam" now holds sovereignty. The vast extent, from east to west, this dominion now stretches may be realized from the fact that the city of San Francisco is nearer the eastern limit of our territory than the western by some hundreds of miles. The eastern extremity of Maine is about 67° longitude west from Greenwich. In the treaty by which Russia ceded Alaska to the United States, the western limit of the territory ceded is the one hundred and ninety-third meridian of longitude west from Greenwich. Our dominion thus covers one hundred and twenty-six degrees of longitude, something over one-third the circumference of the earth. The island of Attou, which is the western terminus of the Aleutian Chain, marks the westerly limit of our land and lies about 188° west from Greenwich. A line drawn north and south, midway between this island and the eastern exremity of Maine, will fall in the Pacific Ocean not far from five hundred miles west of San Francisco.

These figures are somewhat startling, but to form anything like an adequate conception of the immensity of this area and the character of the great Northwest, one cross the continent and at least make the voyage through the archipelago of Southeastern Alaska, by the famous inland passage. To one who has passed his life, from childhood to middle age, amid the oak groves, prairies, stream, lakes, meadows, wheat and cornfields of the Mississippi Valley, the impressions made by the tour mentioned can never be effaced. After many months passed on the Pacific Coast, I have concluded to reduce some of these impressions to manuscript, and, now at the solicitation of the Editor of the AMERICAN FIELD, and without claim to literary fame, I submit them for a first perusal to that most manly and generous of all the fraternities among gentlemen—the sportsmen of America.

To the gentleman of leisure and fortune, as well as to the temporary tourist, who seeks a vacation from the cares of business, the pleasure of a long journey, like the trip from the Great Lakes to the Pacific coast and Alaska, can be but little alloyed. The anticipation of a pleasurable trip is given a keener zest by thoughts of the return home and a reunion with old friends after the journey is over. But one who is breaking from the scenes and associations of a lifetime, for years, perhaps forever, to woo "Dame Fortune" in the far West, no matter how adventurous his spirit, is quite sure to find the pictures anticipation paints on the canvas of the future more of less tinged with shades of sadness.

So one afternoon in the early part of April, 1887, when, after the usual handshakings and good-byes, I seated myself in a sleeper at the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway depot at Milwaukee ("fair, white Milwaukee"—so many years my pride and admiration), and the long train swung out of the depot headed for the westward, it is not to be doubted that the bears held control in the market of my emotions. But the full sense of the change from an old to a new world is not realized until after St. Paul is passed and the Northern Pacific train commences to creep across that vast plain which stretches over Western Minnesota and Eastern Dakota to the foothills of the Rockies. We then become fully conscious that we have entered a world new and strange. The last great commercial center of a restless business world has been passed. Behind us, stretching to the Atlantic, is the seat of the mightiest civilization in the world's history—the great arena through which, in ceaseless tides, surge the tireless currents of "trade—the calm health of nations." Before us, stretching to the Pacific, are hundreds, yea thousands, of miles of prairie, mountain, desert and woodland, the full fruition of whose greatness is yet to come.

The transition from the world of bustle and business to that of quietness, almost solitude, is rendered sharper and more emphatic for the reason that the transcontinental train of the Northern Pacific leaves St. Paul late in the afternoon. By the time the suburbs of Minneapolis are well passed night comes on, and one rises in the morning to find himself far out on the vast, level prairies of Dakota. Stopping places [illegible] ow far between and settlements become sp[illegible] there, a rude shanty marks [illegible] turous pioneer, but when I [illegible] there were miles upon miles, [illegible] thing but the broad prairies, covered with sere and yellow grass, tenantless and lonely in the extreme. A brief respite from this was offered when the train wound into the low, rolling hills of the James River and stopped at Jamestown, whose houses looked bright and inviting in their fresh coats of paint, but whose streets were inky black with loamy mud. Leaving here we were soon again on the great, level plain, which grew monotonous long before the heavy bluffs that skirt the Missouri were sighted and a halt was made at the capital of North Dakota, four hundred and seventy-one miles from St. Paul. The town reminded me a good deal of the cities along the Mississippi, as it is located on the sides of the bluffs and the buildings are chiefly composed of red brick.

As I stepped onto the depot platform my eyes fell upon a shield-shaped beer sign.

Beer and Bismarck! Boon companions and great leaders in the world's progress. At Bismarck the Missouri is crossed and, after it, about five miles of river bottom, along which were scattered acres of driftwood and scores of uprooted trees—the debris of the late Spring freshet—and we reached Mandan for a half-hour stop. West of the Missouri, the train winds through a rolling prairie country, timberless but inviting and apparently fertile, until just as the dusk of evening was approaching we crossed the Little Missouri, in the midst of the notorious "Bad Lands."

These are rightly named, for I venture the assertion that nowhere, in what are considered the habitable portions of the globe, can there be found another so utterly inhospitable and God-forsaken a region. Buttes of bald, barren rock, ponderous dunes, which appear to be heaps of gray ashes; round knolls over whose crests are scattered fragments of burned, red clay resembling pieces of broken bricks; huge gullies, at whose bottoms sluggishly flow streams of withering alkali water, and along whose banks fumes and jets of smoke occasionally ooze out, indicating that the subterranean fires are still smoldering, are the conspicuous features of this barren region. Occasional seams of bituminous coal crop out which have escaped the internal conflagration that, some day, has made this region the local habitation of Sheol. Nature has, however, here and there attempted to add something of the fantastic to the general barrenness and desolation. Not infrequently an elevation is seen having its apex crowned with a level slab, beneath which the elements have carried on the work of erosion until the formation resembles a most perfect cone surmounted by a broad-brimmed, crownless sombrero. The The bright red of the burned-clay knobs offers some relief to the eye from the prevailing dull gray, and here and there irregular-shaped caverns, with columned portals at the entrance, lend something of the curious to the place; but its treeless, broken, barren, desolate and forbidding features give suggestion to the thought that the title this region bears has been fitly bestowed.

It is, however, in the midst of such surroundings as these that one rises to a full and profound appreciation of the railroad, the sleeper and the diner. There we were, without the confines of civilization, in the heart of one of the most sterile and desolate regions of the globe, yet the iron equine at the head of the train was not only bearing us safely, surely on, but was also bearing with us many if not all the comforts of a home. That evening we drank a big bumper to Henry Villard for his unconquerable energy in pushing to completion one of the greatest financial, as well as engineering, wonders of the age.

I cannot refrain, at this point, from speaking a word of commendation for the officers and employes of the road with whom I chanced to come in contact. I found Mr. Chas. S. Fee, the General Passenger and Ticket Agent, at St. Paul, and his corps of assistants, extremely affable, gentlemanly and obliging, and the trainmen polite and attentive. In the five trips I have made over the road I have found little to criticise. The service in the diner might be improved as to the deportment of the waiters. The disposition to rush one through the meal, and to "fire" dishes and food onto the table, is quite too apparent among the "cullud gemmen" of the diner. Doubtless the intrusive haste and noise are made more observable by contrast with the uniformly courteous consideration one receives from the other employes of the train service; but some of that quiet civility and prompt yet unobtrusive attention which are so conspicuous features in the dining service at the Plankinton, at Milwaukee, and the Ryan, at St. Paul, would add greatly to the pleasure and comfort of the patrons of the dining car. But taken altogether I have found the management, equipment and personnel of the road equal to that of any of the best lines in the Western states.

Having passed through the Bad Lands, the valley of the Yellowstone is entered near Glendive, and this place and Fort Keogh and Miles City were passed in the night; but the next morning, the second out from St. Paul, one may know by the broad level lands, fringed by sagebrush and flanked on either side by precipitous, rocky bluffs, that the train is still pulling up the same valley. Shortly after breakfast we reached Billings, where the first exhibition of grandeur in the scenery was presented. The morning was bright and clear, and as I stepped from the train and turned to the westward the first spurs of the Rockies, snow-capped and gleaming white in the morning sun, burst upon my vision. Yes, there they were, the Rockies, the Rockies! The land of plain and prairie was far behind; in front of us towered, in awful grandeur, the great mountain range of North America.

The afternoon was well advanced when we reached Livingston, situated at the head of the Yellowstone Valley and directly at the foot of the mountain chain, ten hundred and thirty-two miles from St. Paul. From there the Yellowstone bends off toward the southwest, through a cañon, to its headwaters in the National Park, and a spur of the Northern Pacific follows it up as far as Cinnabar, while the main line begins the long, heavy grades of the mountain ascent.

BY DICK SWIVELER

"Friends," said McMurchy, "it is not generally known that I have had some adventures with bears; and can boast of a closer acquaintance with Ursus Americana, also Ursus horribilis, than most of men in my walk and at my time of life."

"What kind of bears have you had scrimmages with?" said Courtney.

"Look a-here, Courtney, you can't speak Spanish nor French, and haven't an intimacy with deceased languages, and although you sing in Italian that's no criterion you should show your ignorance of the proper name of bears; let the man go on with his story," said Tucker.

Courtney looked abashed; and after begging McMurchy's pardon leaned back in his seat, murmuring something about "Evastus Abbecrombie."

"Yes," continued McMurchy, "that was a great camp hunt. There were four of us went into the Medicine Bow Mountains one Fall, fitted out for a month's stay, or until the snow got so bad as to drive us out. We'd had pretty good run of luck, for inside of a week we hung up four fine elks and could have killed more only it was not necessary; your true sportsman kills only for his needs. During our tramp for elk we found considerable signs of bear, and once I saw a big chap clear across a cañon, a quarter of a mile away. This made me think that I'd like to add a cinnamon or silver tip to my score. One afternoon, being higher up in the mountains than at any time previously, I discovered signs of sheep. This drove all idea of bears and elks out of my head, so the next morning, fitting out for a two days' tramp, the guide and myself started for sheep. I wound a light, strong lariat around my waist; a very handy tool in the mountains sometimes and certainly it was so on this trip.

"Along in the afternoon we found signs of sheep and followed up until we came to a place where we had to go higher—climb and pull ourselves up. It was a mighty rough piece of ground. Immense bowlders, the size of a church, lay around thick; then there were ravines and smaller depressions that we had to go down and climb up. Pretty well winded we arrived at the top of one of these great ridges. The guide was ahead, and I had just asked him if he could see anything in the cañon below when he turned with a warning look and sank to the ground behind a big rock. He signed me to look, and there, perhaps three hundred yards away, standing on a flat rock, I counted four sheep."

"Were you excited?" said Courtney.

"Indeed, I was."

"Well, I would not have been."

"You wouldn't, why not?"

"Well a man must have small nerve to get excited over four sheep."

"But, man, they were mountain sheep."

"Don't care a darn; they were sheep, simply sheep, and I would not have been in the least worked up. Only, as a reminder of a Fourth of July dinner, of Spring lamb and marrowfat peas as a piéce de resistance de jour," said Courtney.

"Well, it takes an alligator or a columbiad to excite some people," rejoined McMurchy.

"Go on with the story," said I.

"Well, the guide looked at those sheep earnestly for about a minute, and then said I'd better try my chances and shoot. I raised the sights for two hundred and fifty yards, and holding fine on the base of the throat of the animal nearest the edge of rock, pressed the trigger. Three sheep turned and fled out of sight in an instant, but one lay kicking and dying on the rock, and he continued to kick until he kicked himself clear over and pitched sheer down a hundred and fifty feet or more.

"Well, as it seemed easier to get down in that rock-ribbed valley at the point where the sheep had been, we made our way around there with no little difficulty, and looking over saw the game lying there quite still. The guide examined the situation and saw that if the lariat rope was long enough it would reach to a sort of offset composed of rock and some loose soil on which there was a stunted fir tree, and from that point he could reach the sheep, dress it and fasten it to the lariat, and I could haul it up.

That part of the tournament worked beautifully as far as it went. I hitched the rope to a small tree that stood conveniently near, and the guide went down, hand over hand, like an expert fire-escape man, and soon was at work dressing the sheep. He had the job about half finished when he very suddenly stopped, looked up and said;

" 'How am I going to get back up there?'

" 'I didn't figure on that,' said I. 'You're the guide.' There was a set look on his face, and he went on carving the sheep. I had been lying flat, looking over at the guide, and as his question set me to thinking I arose to take a look around for ways and means.

"Well, gentlemen, I hadn't walked twenty steps from the edge of that cliff when I stopped, stopped mighty sudden; for there, not fifty yards away, was the biggest kind of a grizzly bear eyeing me with a cold, cynical stare. To advance was death, to retreat suddenly over that cliff was death. I had to act, for the bear was advancing for a closer acquaintance. Well, a man has to think quick sometimes, and that was one of those times. My thought was to shoot. Steadying myself I held for between his eyes, low down, and at the crack of my .50-110-300, he went down head on, plowing along the ground. I had time only to pump a couple more of those express balls into him when he started toward me at a lively gait, but sort of groggy. I fired three more shots, then dropped my rifle and rushing to that lariat began to slide down. When I had reached half-way, I heard a yell under me and at the same time a tug on the rope from above which lifted me two or three feet. Looking up, I saw the bear was tangled in the lariat. Looking down, I was amazed to see the guide running toward his end of the rope, and another bear a couple of hundred feet away, chasing him. The guide reached the rope, and placing his feet on the crossbar at the end of it implored me to pull him up, as he had nothing but his knife to defend himself with. I yelled back: 'How in thunder can I pull you up when I can't pull myself up? Besides, there is another bear at that end of the line.' The words were hardly spoken when there came a tremendous pull from above, and we were lifted eight to ten feet. Again came the pull and we were dangling in midair. I slid down and joined the guide on the crossbar.

"We hung on to that rope. I looked up and saw my bear twisting, squirming and turning, and apparently tangled in the lariat. A glance below and there was the guide's bear right under us. The guide said: 'What if this 'ere rope breaks?' I said: 'Let 'er break; there's a bear at the upper end, just as anxious and madder to get us for he is carrying eighteen hundred grains of lead in his system.'

"All this time the rope was being tugged and pulled, and we were swaying back and forth, two mighty anxious men. Again came a lift, and we neared the top by ten feet more. Again and again, and still once more came that mighty haul on the lariat, and we could almost touch the roots of the tree to which it was fastened. We could see where it was tied, but it reached back from the tree to where it was tangled around the bear, and he was now out of sight.

"The hauling and tugging ceased. A heart-breaking minute passed. Then the guide said: 'We've got to get out of this, or off of this, pretty blamed soon; this rope ain't goin' to hold a matter of three hundred and fifty pounds, dead weight, forever; and it will be dead weight, sure, if we drop down on that bear. Climb up on my shoulders and take a look at things.' Cautiously raising myself to that position, I at once had a good view of the ground. A glance showed the bear completely wound up in the lariat, the last turns around his neck; there was blood spattered and rubbed on the rocks; he was perfectly still, seemingly dead. My rifle lay between the bear and myself, considerably to the left. It seemed a desperate thing to do, but I must have that rifle. Grasping the roots of the tree I easily raised myself over the edge of the cliff and crawled toward the gun, and in a moment more grasped it. Noiselessly I shoved cartridges into the magazine. The bear lay perfectly still. Advancing with tense nerves, prepared to fire instantly, I stood near enough in a moment more to see the bear was stone dead. Hurrying to the edge I helped the guide up; then, after examining the dead bear again, we turned our attention to the live one below. We opened on him, and it took but a short time to lay him out; so there we were, with two dead grizzlies and a mountain sheep, after a most remarkable and exciting experience.

"The only way we could account for being hauled up by that bear is that when he rushed for me he must have run under the lariat, and in stopping and turning to save himself from going over he became entangled; then, fortunately for us, he must have been seized with death agonies, and by rolling over and over wound the rope around his great body, thus drawing us up."

"Did you get the sheep?" said Courtney.

"That's a good story. I like such bear stories," said Tucker, "they are out of the ordinary run of bear stories and go to prove what I have always contended, viz., that a gun man, a real gun man, has more nerve than the average man."

The train was running slowly, passing through gloomy defiles of the mountains. The night had grown blacker and rain was falling. Courtney peered out the window into the inky space and remarked: "What a night for treason, treachery and spoils. I remember a night just like this when I lived in the oil country. Four men were killed, and before it happened I had a foreboding, a premonition of evil, an ill at ease feeling, I could not shake off. When the news came I was not at all surprised and was the only cool man among some three or four hundred people. I have that feeling now, that identical nervous dread; I can tell you, my friends, if we get through this night without something happening—bloodshed, maybe—I will be pleasantly disappointed."

We all looked at our guns. The black-eyed man had instructed the porter not to prepare his berth; so had we.

The night wore on. The "Big 4" were dozing. The train had passed through the long tunnel when the black-eyed man quietly left his seat and disappeared at the forward end of the car, but not unnoticed. McMurchy's sharp eyes had taken note of the movement and it was immediately communicated to his friends. It is needless to say that the four friends had been suspicious of this black-eyed man since he evinced such interest in the two words "road agent."

I drew up the shade and noticed a few patches of snow, and noticed that we were running at rather low speed. About this time the train slowed quite suddenly, and at the same moment we distinctly heard two loud reports. The train moved, perhaps, a hundred feet farther when two or three more shots were fired, then it came to a standstill.

"I told you so," said Courtney; "we are in for it."

"Held up!" said McMurchy, thrusting cartridges into his gun. We all followed his example. McMurchy and Courtney hurried to the front door, giving words of encouragement to our fellow passengers, while Tucker and the writer rushed to the rear door, and throwing it wide open so we could get a good, clean-cut view of persons on the platform and attempting to enter the car, we stationed ourselves in the doorway of the smoking room and grimly awaited events.

Loud voices could be heard forward, and presently a crash.

"They are smashing in the express car," remarked Tucker. At this moment McMurchy appeared and said:

"We have locked the front door. If they force that, we will retreat firing; you help us unless the whole attack on this car is made at the rear, in which event we will deliver our first fire as they come in the door, and you come to our aid if any of them are left."

"We will have to retreat into the smoking-room," said I, as McMurchy hurried back to Courtney's support. We still heard blows being struck, forward by the engine, accompanied by voices. Once there was laughter. We waited Would they never attack our car? When will this suspense end? Had they received information that four desperate men, with shotguns, would defend the rear Pullman?

"Hush! someone's coming," said Tucker, in a whisper. We heard footsteps and saw a light, as from a torch or lantern, cast to the rear of the train. In an instant more a heavy footfall came on the steps of the car. We raised our guns.

A moment of intense anxiety and a man appeared in the doorway. He carried a railroad lantern. He was a brakeman.

"Why, gentlemen! why, gentlemen! What is—what is—the—why, what in the world are you doing?" said he, grasping the doorway for support.

"Ain't you a road agent?" said I.

"N-n-n-o!"

"Ain't we being held up?" said Tucker.

"No, no, you blankety blank fools. Take down your guns, we ain't being held up."

"Well, what is all this fuss and firing about?"

"There ain't been no fuss and firing. There's a freight wreck ahead of us, and the conductor torpedoed the track. That's the firing you blamed fools heard. Say what's the matter with you men? You about scared the life out of me. You'd better put up your guns and go to bed. I am going to put on a red signal, we are liable to be here all night." So saying, the brakeman lit the red lamp and swinging from the car disappeared down the track. We gazed ruefully at each other and then ordered the porter to make up our berths.

At this moment the black-eyed man returned. Just before Courtney lay down he said:

"Tucker, who is Gaines?"

A look of sadness at his ignorance was the only answer, Then continuing his preparations for bed, Courtney sang, for his heart was light.

Where the lobsterlet lurks, and the crablet
  So slowly and sleepily crawls;
Where the dolphin's at home and the shrimp
  Pays long ceremonious calls;
Where the gruhlet is sought by the froglet,
  Where the frog is pursued by the duck,
Where the ducklet is chased by the doglet—
  So runs the world's luck.

When the ducklet's dark doom is decided,
  We will trundle him home in a trice,
And the banquet so plainly provided
  Shall round into rosebuds and rice;
In a blaze of pragmatic invention,
  He shall wrestle with fate and shall re'gn;
But he has not a friend we can mention,
  So hit him again.

He has shot it, that delicate darling!
  And the voices have ceased from the strife:
Not a whisper of sneering or snarling,
  As he carries it home to his wife;
Then cheerily champing the hunlet,
  His spouse was so skillful to bake,
He hies him once more to the runlet,
  To fetch her the drake.

The music of midsummer madness
  Shall sting him with many a bite,
Till in rapture of——

The voice sank lower and lower. Courtney had sung himself to sleep. Happy Courtney and thrice happy everyone else in that sleeping car.

THE CINCINNATI SHOW

(Special Report)

Cincinnati has at last had a dog show. The blizzard struck us on the two opening days (and even then the attendance was good), but the last two days made up for this, as on Monday and Tuesday the large Music Hall was crowded till ten at night to such an extent that it was uncomfortable most of the time. There were over 300 entries in all, and few absentees. Had this been an A. K. C. show, and regular prizes hung up, I would have had 500 dogs here. Many well-known regulars were on hand, among them Roger D. Williams, Wm. H. Clark, Gus Fox, J. Englehardt, J. S. Rockwell, August Froembling, South Bend Kennels, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Rice of Columbus, O., J. E. Dougherty, Ed Reidinger, Frank Reting, Frank J. Vincent, Wallingford & Biddle, Wm. J. Beck, Jos. Becker, Fishback & Baughn, Lewis Finch, Henry Bunning, Dr. H. D. Heywood, Geo. Ewald, R. I. Carter, F. A. Bradley, John Donahoe, and others. The benching was of new lumber. Little's Soluble Phenyle was the disinfectant used, and the dogs were well fed with Austin's Dog Bread. Dr. A. H. King, the veterinary, was on hand every day, and each dog was carefully examined before being admitted. There is no doubt but an A. K. C. show will be given each year hereafter. Mr. Ed. Lackman offers to put up $500 toward a guarantee fund for the next show. Mr. J. Taylor Williams, who judged the setters and pointers, entered four of his beautiful English setters for exhibition, two of them being Flight of Riverview and Belle of Riverview, both well-known winners. There were about fifty elegantly decorated stalls, some of them satin-lined, and some local exhibitors went to the expense of having elegant glass houses built for their small pets. It was a society event in every respect. Mr. Gustave Fox showed a kennel of nine St. Bernards that attracted much attention. The South Bend Kennels sent their celebrated Great Dane Major McKinley, shown in a large especially prepared stall in a conspicuous location, while in a stall beside him was McKinley's Son, a promising youngster full of the quality of his sire and of the same color. These two stalls had a crowd around them all day long, and proved a great card for the show.

Bounce, the Russian corded poodle, owned by Eberhart Pug Kennels, gave a performance afternoon and evening, doing his many tricks to the delight of crowds. The papers here treated us royally, columns every day for a week in advance, articles illustrated with cuts of dogs that were to be here. It would surprise some of our larger shows to have seen such an exhibit—about sixty large dogs, mastiffs, St. Bernards and Great Danes—as we had, and mostly dogs owned here, many of them making their début at this show.

MASTIFFS.—(Al. G. Eberhart, judge.) Had an entry of twelve. Open class had eight. First went to Clifford, a grand specimen, but Grover II gave him a close call, both being good ones and shown in fine condition. Another named Grover was third, and quite a good one, but not so good in head. Nero, fourth, was not far behind, but not so good in black markings, too long in face, but good in body and legs. This dog was claimed by a Miss Davis as one she lost a year ago, but not being certain she finally concluded not to press the matter. This reminded me of my Louisville experience with my Tiger; only I had to give Tiger up In novice dogs, Cæsar, first, is a grand one, shown in pink of condition, and had he been also entered in the open class would have given Clifford a close race. Puppies had two entries; first to Lion, a large dog with good body and legs, but too long faced. Campbell, second, was fair but has a chance yet.

ST. BERNARDS—(Al. G. Eberhart, judge.) The open class for roughs had eleven entries. First went to American Cæsar, owned in Chicago by Arthur Froembling; he is a grand good one and won rightly, he was shown in superb condition, and won special for best in show. Duke and Eden Justice received equal seconds; a close thing. Duke was in superb form but not so good in expression as Eden Justice, who was in nice shape also. Eden Arlstocrat, third, is not so good in head as either, but is young yet; is of good size and bone, a bit too light in flesh, and is nicely marked. Brusch and Sir Edendale received equal fourth; both fair. Grover, reserve, shows good markings and good St. Bernard type, but is undersized. The rest, except one, were fair and in less hot company would go higher than V.H.C. Seven rough-coated bitches turned out. Arline was an easy first, a beautiful bitch of good size and markings, and shown in best of form. equal second went to Silverro and Chequasset Lucretia. Silverro is best in body and size, but has a pair of eyes that are not mates. Lucretia is too small, but aside from this is a good one. Venus, third, was not in show shape, having a litter of puppies, but in right condition she can get a place in fair company. Cleo, fourth, is only fair and was not in condition. Rough-coated novice dogs and bitches had nine entries. Mardo got first place; a really good dog, much improved since our last show in 1891, but not as good expression as he should have, and inclined to act ugly in a show. Eden Justice was equal second with Eden Aristocrat; both described in open class. Brusch, fourth in open, got third here. Novice rough-coated bitches had seven come in the ring. Belle of the Zoo was a good first. Chequasset Lucretia, described above, received equal second here with Donna Palos, a nice specimen. Aurilla T, fourth, was not far behind. In dog puppies, two entries, first went to Edenton, a promising puppy that will make into a good one if he keeps on right; a rare good one for his age and will be large King Botley, second, has good size, but was too thin. Of three bitch puppies Queen, first, is a nice one. Dixie Jr, second, needs age. Third went to Gipsy Girl, fair, but she has good head. There was only one smooth dog in the open class, Lord Keeper, a son of Bedivere; and a good one he is, too, of massive frame, good body and legs, head not the best, but a dog that can stand good company, and was shown in superb shape and is greatly improved since the Louisville show. He was shown also in the novice class. again getting the blue. The red ribbon went to Don Vulcan, who has grown into a right good one and is much improved since Columbus show. Rover, V.H.C.

GREAT DANES.—(Al G. Eberhart, judge.) In the challenge class Major McKinley had a walkover; he was shown in fine condition. In the open class for dogs Anderson's Sandor, a well-known winner and a good one, was an easy first; he was in fine condition. Equal seconds went to Hector and Napoleon; very close and both good ones. Tony, third, is large, tiger-striped, only fair in head, and shown too fat. Nero, fourth, too fat, is massive and has better head, but acted badly in the ring, being of bad disposition and eager for a scrap; he showed badly or might have done better in this class. Reserve, Nigger, is is a large black dog shown in good condition, but falls in head to the others. Except Sandor, all in this class are owned here. In open bitches, Gipsy was absent. McKinley's Son, seven months old, brindled, very large for his age, good head and body and showing much of the quality of his noted sire, won in the dog puppy class; a promising youngster. Second went to Nero, ten months old and a larger puppy, but loses to first in head and character. German Ulmers had two entries, but neither an Ulmer. Cæsar, first, should have gone in the Dane class, as he is really a good Dane, but as his owner imported him as an Ulmer he insisted upon showing him in this class. Bismark, second, is a solid orange-colored St. Bernard, as near as anyone could guess him.

SPANIELS.—(Al. G. Eberhart, judge.) Only one Clumber, Friar Monk, but a good one, and can stand competition; he is the only Clumber in Cincinnati. Fannie, a puppy, was the only cocker shown; and Irish Pat the only water spaniel.

BULL TERRIERS.—(Al. G. Eberhart, judge.) One dog, Dick; quite a good one, too; on the large order, good head and body, but several brindled spots. The only bitch, Nellie, is much more of the type, pure white, but a lightweight and too small.

DALMATIANS.—(Al. G. Eberhart, judge.) Two very good ones, Nellie and Cora, received equal first. Nellie was shown too fat. Cora has best head, best markings.

TOY SPANIELS.—(W. Gale, judge.) Two Ruby Charles were shown, and first went to Pasha who won at the last Chicago show in puppy class; second to Tur

Two Blenheims were entered by Frank A. Bradley, who has just imported them, but they failed to arrive [illegible] the last night of the show and were not judged.

POODLES.—(R. J. Carter, judge.) In the open class [illegible] poodles Bounce, alone, got first. In [illegible] for French curly, Black Jack Jr had [illegible] for [illegible] but is all right for competition. A [illegible] and decidedly promising. In open bitches Queen Zip received first. Puppy dogs had Lord Moughlow Jr for first; good all over, with fine curl. Jessica had a walkover in bitch pupples; has good curl, but legs are tipped with brown. White French toy poodies had an entry of six in three classes. Some beautiful ones were shown. Poll was the best of all and received first in open dogs.

BULLDOGS.—(R. J. Carter, judge.) Toby, a small brindled and white, not enough undershot and faulty in tail, but with compact body, good skull and shown in fine condition, took first in dogs; he was alone; as was Lorna Doone, a good specimen; has a good head, undershot, tail and front, but a bit too long in body.

COLLIES.—(John Hawkes, judge.) In open dogs first was rightly given to Toronto Wonder, and second to Duke of Westminster a pretty dog, but undersized, bow legged in front and not nearly so good as either Moray, fourth, or Scotilla IV, third. Moray is faulty in head but is of great bone, body and coat and was shown in prime condition. Scotilla is a collie all right enough too. In dog puppy class Dazzle, a nice quality youngster, had a walkover; will be heard from later on. The open bitch class had only one entry, Alexine; she received a deserved blue. There was one "bobtail," Nabob, a grand coated and good bodied dog shown in fine condition.

BEAGLES.—(Dr. H. D. Heywood, judge.) A large entry, twenty-nine, and many of good quality. T. J. Ellis showed seven, and Henry Bunning the same. L. Kearns had in two, one of them, Dolly Varden, having done some winning.

FOX TERRIERS.—(J. Englehardt, judge) These were a strong entry as to numbers and quality. It was close between Domo and Hillside Royal, but finally Royal got the blue, Domo taking second. Quite a little fuss was stirred up on this award. Wawaset Baron is a good one too, and got third in this class (open dogs) and first in novice dogs. Quaker Lass, a nice bitch, won in both open and novice classes, and deserved it. Puppies had five entries in two classes, and several good ones among them, especially Frank Vincent's Madge II.

SCOTTISH AND SKYES.—(J. Englehardt, judge.) Only one Skye was shown; an ordinary specimen as a Skye, but a pretty dog. There were two good Scottish terriers, Highland Roy and Jamie II, so nearly alike that equal first went to each.

YORKSHIRE TERRIERS.—(J. W. Mack, judge.) Eighteen were entered, and several really fine ones. Champion Teddy had a walkover in the challenge class; he was not in good coat, but is holding out well for his age aside from this. Prince of Norwood, a great little dog, rightly got the blue in open dogs; age and a longer coat will yet put him a winner in the best company. Lady Fern won easily in open bitches, and is a handsome one shown in good condition. Sport, first in novice dogs and bitches, has a good head, but lacks coat and is too high on leg. The puppies were a fair lot. Teddy Jr, in dogs, is promising and won.

BLACK AND TAN TOYS (under 7 pounds).—(J. W. Mack, judge.) A big showing, nine of these little fellows, was a great attraction; most of them were in decorated cages. Colonel won in the novice class. Dude, a good one, was first in open dogs, and Tootsy, first in open bitches, is a fine small bitch.

ITALIAN GREYHOUNDS.—(J. W. Mack, judge.) Eight entries, and all good. The Colonel, first, is smaller than Prince Jr, second, has better legs and was better shown. Prince Jr is best in head, a bit larger (but not too large), is not so good in legs, and did not show up well when judged, getting his ears wrong; had he shown as well as The Colonel it would have been harder for the judge to decide, as both are fine specimens and away above the average. Every Italian shown was of solid color, and the best lot of eight that I ever saw.

PUGS.—(J. W. Mack, judge.) The well-known Eberhart's Cashier was alone in the challenge class and added another blue to his list; was in good condition. In open dogs Patsy Bolivar won rightly, a corky little pug and a hard one to beat at any show; he was in superb condition and can be depended upon to always show himself at his best. Trot, second, is a good one and deserved his red ribbon. Sir Douglas got third, which was right; he was too fat, but is cobby in body, has great wrinkle and skull, good stern, and is full of pug character. Clp, fourth, is fine in coat, color, body and has the best curled tail of any I ever saw except Cashier's, and it's a close second as to tail. If this dog had a better head he could down a lot of them. In open bitches five showed up. Queen Zitka and Nancy received equal firsts. Zitka beats Nancy in size (being only ten pounds), but was shedding coat and not looking at her best. Nancy is a good one, grand head and wrinkle and good color, but a bit too large and too long in body; however, any pug breeder would like to own her. Ruby E, third, when older, will make a great one if she goes right; is very small, a great head, hardly any nose, too dark as yet, but is young and has a chance to mature into a crack. Is one of the most promising I ever have seen for her age. Toy, fourth, is good in body but falls in head to the rest, and did not show well. Novice dogs had three entries, and Cedric Errol won an easy first; has fine head, great wrinkle, small black ears and good color and tail. Clp got second and Max third. In novice bitches La Belle Senora took the blue rightly, although Cyrene, second, is a little wonder as to quality and size (nearly eighteen months old and only nine pounds in weight). Third went to Toy, a nice one, but Cute Lady is a better one and should have had her place. Bunnie, V.H.C., is fair. Pet, reserve, is better, and had she shown better would have gone higher in this class. In dog puppies a good one in Romeo rightly won. The Boss, second, is a pret[illegible] puppy. In puppy bitches [illegible] small one, won. One black [illegible] good one, in Francis, owned [illegible] Cincinnati; it has no white, [illegible] and [illegible] it lacks wrinkle. It attracted DACHSHUNDE.—(A. G. Eberhart, judge.) They were well represented by thirteen entries. At the last moment it was agreed to make a distinction between terrier and hound species, and a special class was provided for the latter. This reduced the entries for both classes of open dogs to two dogs in each. Feldmann (imported), ten years old, was, in spite of his age, an easy winner over his competitor, Dick; he has a noble head, fine markings, and properly crooked limbs. Dick, second, is a fair specimen; irregular legs and looks of head were against him. In open dogs (terrier species), Reinecke's Pick, an imported dog, black and tan, is but a young dog but of many good points and of great future; however he seemed so evenly matched by Schnapps that the judge gave them equal firsts after a very lengthy and careful examination. In open bitch class Fanny, reddish brown, was the only one entry; a strong, muscular, fair specimen. There were three dog puppies. Pluto, a black and tan, is a handsome puppy, full of spirit, good head and ears, and altogether very promising. His litter brother Don Quixote, black and tan, took second; a good puppy but in poor condition. Clem, also black and tan, third, is fair, of good form and legs, and might have taken first but for a nervous twitching of hind part of body. The winning bitch puppy, Tressie II, black and tan, is well marked, good form, good head and legs, tail trifle too full. Katie, second, light brown, is fair looking and well shaped, but too timid and lacking expression. In the novice class Dreadnaught won. This dog was the youngest in his class; a rare chocolate brown color, and very handsome in all but head, which might be a little broader with nose less pointed. Grover, a reddish brown, a bright, strong, well put up dog, took second. The judge would have given this dog first but for the fact that half his tail had been cut off. Schnapps was given third in this class.

BLOODHOUNDS.—(Al. G. Eberhart, judge.) There were but two entries, both owned by Mr. Roger D. Williams. Breeze, in open dog class, miscarried in expressage and was absent. Vigilant, the well-known winner and often described, had a walkover. She was put down in excellent condition and was one of the attractions of the show.

BORZOIS.—(Al. G. Eberhart, judge.) Danicheff won. He was in superb condition, muscled like a racehorse and hard as nails.

AMERICAN FOXHOUNDS.—(Roger D. Williams, judge.) In the open dog class King Ferguson, a large black, white and tan, won; is over size, slack in loin, good feet and legs. Nellie, winner in the open bitch class, is undersized, light in bone, coat too smooth and devoid of brush, good head and good expression. Pilot, winner in the puppy class, is decidedly the best in the show; good legs and feet and good head. As a whole foxhounds were a weak lot and below the average.

GREYHOUNDS.—(Roger D. Williams, judge.) Undoubtedly the strongest breed in the show; not a weed or a really bad one in the lot. The open dog class had nine entries, quite a good lot, being much above the average. Monk Bishop, although in poor condition, could not be denied and received the blue over his kennel mate, Rome Marble. The latter, while scoring in loin, back and ribs, loses to the winner in head, neck, legs, feet and quality. Montezuma, third, is much like his sire, Middleton, stands well upon good legs and feet, has plenty of dash and fire, is evidently game and shows quality; he loses to those above him in ribs, back and loin. Fountain, a good-looking black, almost a counterpart of Conspirator, lost fourth place on account of bad teeth and being somewhat slack in loin. The open bitch class brought out but two. Mald Marian, a well-known winner, won easily over Daisy, who was light in bone and weak in pasterns, but withal a pretty parlor ornament. Medusa was absent. In the novice class Nero, a muscular, strong, well made hound, showing good bone, quality and breeding, won over Hidalgo, wide in front and weak in feet and pasterns. In the puppy class Fanny Davenport, a clever, trim-built black, scored a bloodless victory.

POINTERS.—(J. Taylor Williams, judge.) In challenge class, the well-known winner Rush of Lad added another win to his credit; he was shown in good condition; a fine dog always, but had a bit too much flesh. The open class for heavyweights had two entries. Stanley, shown in perfect condition, won easily; having excellent shoulders, head, body, loin and quarters and good legs and feet. The Sheriff, second, is full in cheek, nose rather sharp, not good in stifle and feet, but a dog above the average take him all in all. The open bitch class had only one entry, Stella C, a nicely colored bitch, bad in head, and throaty, with good feet and legs; shown too fat. The lightweight bitch class had four entries. Daisy Kent and Queen Kent, equal firsts, are nicely marked, with good heads, feet and legs and stand squarely. Daisy Kent had rather the better head. Second went to Beauty D, a very smooth symmetrically built bitch with good feet and legs, plain in head but good expression. Third, Lady of Rush, is a rather plain little bitch with good feet and legs. Fourth, Pet, is plain throughout, but a nice little upstanding bitch with good legs and feet. The bitch puppy class had only two entries. Graphic's Girl, a nicely marked bitch, won; she has good feet and legs, head houndy, not depth of chest enough, and too slab sided. Lady of Rush, second, is a nice one and a very close second. The novice class had two entries. Daisy Kent was again first, and Pet was second. There was only one dog puppy, Ben Hur, a very racily built, upstanding puppy with good feet and legs, chest and head. Black pointers had only one entry, Dock, rather coarse in head and a bit throaty; he carries some lumber on his shoulders, but has very good legs and feet, a well-ribbed body, and fair general symmetry.

GORDON SETTERS.—(J. T. Williams, judge.) One dog was entered in the open class, Rye, a symmetrical dog, good in body, legs, feet, head, neck and stern, nice tan, and silky flat coat. The bitch class also had only one entry, Hussey, shown in good condition, nice flat coat, light in muzzle, good legs and feet, and a bitch of a good deal of quality.

IRISH SETTERS.—(J. T. Williams, judge.) Challenge class had no entry. In the open dog class first went to Ben Harrison, a well formed dog, a trifle coarse in head but substantially built. Sargeant, second, is flat in ribs and long in body, plain in head, and in fair condition. Open bitches had three entries. Rose won easily. She is on the small order but shows a good deal of quality, beautiful rich red, good well sprung ribs, deep chest, good feet and legs, good head, a very catchy little bitch. Sport, second, is rather long in body, too light in color, and was not shown in good condition. Lillie, third, was shown much too fat and out of condition generally. In puppies Bruce Minor and Duke Echo IV, equal first, are fair young specimens. The novice class had five entries. First went to Nellie G, a capital little bitch built on racy lines, has good quarters, deep chest, well sprung ribs, splendid feet and legs and stands well on them; her weakest point is her head—rather short and light in nose. Second went to Ned, a very well formed dog with good head; he has a strong well shaped back, is well ribbed, deep chest, muscular quarters, good bone, legs and feet and stands squarely. Ben Harrison took third. The other entries were poor.

ENGLISH SETTERS.—(J. T. Williams, judge.) Thirty-three English setters in all and many of them full of quality. No entries in challenge classes. In open dogs ten faced the judge. First prize was captured by Ben Hur Jr, a very symmetrical black, white and tan, standing squarely on good legs and feet; has a well shaped head, carries his ears nicely, good shoulders, stern shapely and carried well, rather light in loin. Chesterford Surprise, a blue belton shown in good condition, was second; he has excellent legs and feet and stands squarely; good loin and chest has a plain head, good symmetry. Third went to Major, a well built dog, rather on the coarse order. Fourth was captured by Pride of the Ridge, a dog coarse at all points, plain in head, out at elbows, and shown too fat. Don L, reserved, is too full in skull, and heavy in muzzle, moves badly behind, but has a beautiful coat. The rest in this class were decidedly on the plain order. There were five in the bitch class. Miss Pick won; a heavily marked black, white and tan of fine quality and shown in nice condition; she has good substance, bone, head and neck and chest. Birdie Clark, second, is a very pretty little black and white bitch, rather too small and close to the ground, symmetrical, has good substance, good feet and legs, and stands squarely; shown too fat. Third, Nettie S, is a fair little bitch of some quality. The novice dogs had nine entries. Chesterford Surprise won, Miss Pick was second, and Birdie Clark was third, all described in open classes; as was Major, fourth. Tony, reserve, a nice looking black and tan, drops behind shoulders and is a bit plain in head, has good feet and legs. Jean's Val, V.H.C., is a nice attractive little dog and will be heard from later. Mack, V.H.C., too fat and coarse but good legs, feet and chest. There were four dog puppies. Spike Wakefield, very prettily marked, won very easily; he is a very symmetrically built puppy, good head (ears a little too high), splendid chest and ribs, good loin, and stands squarely. Spartacus, second, is a racy, well marked puppy, with good legs, feet and loin, head plain, good symmetry. Mark of Ightfield, third, is on the large order and rather coarse; as is Ightfield Monk, fourth. The bitch puppy class had two good entries, and it took the judge some time to decide. He finally settled on Lady Nell, a nicely marked, racely built, upstanding little bitch; her worst fault was her feet. Nell of Ightfield was a close second; she is a puppy of good substance, fine chest and loin, good bone, legs and feet, symmetrical in form, but plain in head.

MISCELLANEOUS.—(Al. G. Eberhart, judge.) Chas. Fleischman entered Herr Feltman, a German forester dog; Peter Schwan entered Hans, a ten-year-old Russian poodle with cords dragging five inches on the ground (dog never clipped); really a good poodle, but he insisted on putting him in this class; and M Kahn entered an eighty-five pound Ossman, called by him a German bulldog—a curiosity, however, which he verily is. And I gave all three equal firsts. All three of these dogs proved great attractions. I am indebted to Messrs. J. Taylor Williams and Roger D. Williams for criticisms on the breeds they judged.

AMONG THE KENNELS—NO. 2

BY E. BARDOE ELLIOTT

It was at the City of the Straits Kennel Club's show at Detroit in 1893 that Mr. C. A. Pratt, the proprietor of the Argyle Kennels, Little Rock, Ark., now world-famed for its St. Bernards, made his initial bow to the kennel world as an exhibitor.

He there showed the enormous son of the late Champion Aristocrat and Lizzie Lee—Prince George, the now well-known smooth—Alton II and two rough-coated bitches, Duchess Lomond and Lady Austin. He managed to score a bloodless victory with Alton II, took a third with Duchess Lomond and got two letters with the other two, but it was generally conceded that Prince George was very hardly used, although he was by no means a "flyer." Mr. Pratt, however, was not discouraged, for having been a prominent exhibitor throughout the country of horses and cattle he already knew only too well the glorious uncertainty of the show ring, and moreover having followed the judging closely and having a quick eye he soon became conscious of the fact that he only had one dog worth owning as a show specimen, and that that one was Alton II, so as soon as the show was over he promptly sent the other three home although they were already entered at other shows, as he came to the conclusion that it would only be vexation of spirit and waste of time and money to show them further, a decision that few exhibitors are able or willing to accept at their first show with regard to their beaten favorites, and more's the pity, for it would be better for their own peace of mind and often for the good of all concerned could they but accept the inevitable with the good grace Mr. Pratt did on this occasion.

He did not rest here, however, for he went on to Indianapolis the following week with Alton II, where he was well rewarded for he came out with flying colors, not only winning first with him but capturing the special for best St. Bernard in the show, beating such well-known dog as Lord Dante, Nun Nicer, Lady Taylor, Lawrence Garza, Lord Milton and others. He then took him to Denver, where he again carried off the blue ribbon, and this being the end of the show circuit he was forced to take a rest, as far as exhibiting was concerned, for the time being. Nevertheless Mr. Pratt could not rest, for he had now thoroughly caught the fever and had made up his mind to own a large kennel of the Holy breed, and that nothing but the best would satisfy him. He, however, determined to go to work steadily to attain his object, and first and foremost decided that he needed the services of a good man to look after his favorites, and luck came his way, for shortly after Mr. Moore and Arthur Trickett parted and Mr. Pratt promptly availed himself of Trickett's services, and it is scarcely necessary to add that a better selection he could not have made. This accomplished, he decided to start by getting a "crack" dog and bitch, and luck again was with him, for Mr. Reick shortly after was dispersing the many well-known winners he had purchased, and Mr. Pratt at once took advantage of the opportunity and showed his earnestness and good judgment by sending Arthur to New York on a mission to bring back the great Sir Bedivere (dead or alive) and that beautiful bitch Rustic Beauty. Sir Bedivere was supposed to be on his last legs, in fact Trickett says he was so bad that he feared he would never stand the long journey from New York to Little Rock, but that he did is now a matter of history as well as the fact that he has since been shown as well as he ever looked, which certainly redounds greatly to Arthur Trickett's credit.

With these two famous and superb animals, and the help of Alton II, Sir Bedivere's three noted daughters, Pratt's Belle, Lady Judith and Judith's Rachel, and others of lesser note, it followed Mr. Pratt got his fair share of winnings last year, and that with the unbeaten Champion Sir Bedivere at the head of the kennel, the Argyle Kennels of Little Rock, Ark., U. S. A., soon became famed the world over; but not even this, nor the fact that he can conscientiously say that he owns the best St. Bernard alive to day could satiate Mr. Pratt, and it was not till he imported Rustic Beauty's famous son and daughter, Le Prince and La Princess, that he was satisfied, and he now says he is going to try and breed some as good as he owns and many will join me in wishing him success.

Going back to 1893 again, it was at the Detroit show the writer first had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Pratt, who then extended him a cordial invitation to pay him a visit at Little Rock, an invitation which has been oft repeated since. So one day last week I determined to do myself the pleasure of accepting his hospitality, and leaving Chicago for St. Louis by the Chicago & Alton, and from St. Louis over the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railway I found myself the following night in Little Rock, and although it is a far stretch, one travels through such lovely country, and the railroads provide such luxurious accommodations that one forgets the distance of the journey, and the time soon flies.

I was well repaid for the journey, however, for Mr. and Mrs. Pratt are the most charming and entertaining of hosts, and Mrs. Pratt is now as enthusiastic an admirer of St. Bernards as her husband, and further I saw the strongest kennel of the breed that it has ever been my pleasure to visit, and a quartet, Sir Bedivere, Le Prince, La Princess and Rustic Beauty, that was indeed worth going anywhere to look upon, and a four that could hardly be equaled in the world.

The following is a list of the inmates, with their pedigrees, description and performances:

Sir Bedivere (19451). Breeder, Mr. Green. Date of birth, August, 1887. By Nero III (Boniface—Bessie II) out of Bena (Bayard—Freda).

This grand dog is, without doubt, the best St. Bernard, and probably the most perfect specimen of any breed that has been produced up to date. His magnificent proportions, immense size, perfect symmetry, and excellent movement, coupled with his almost perfect head, great type and character and intense quality, perfect color, markings and shadings, and beautiful coat, make him a superb animal that once seen is not easily forgotten and indeed a hard one to beat, and it is doubtful if his like will ever be seen again.

At the time of my visit he was looking extraordinarily grand and was as active as the proverbial kitten, and there is not one that will be able to rightly lower this champion of champions' colors.

The following is a complete list of his wins in England: 1888—First, puppy class, Warwick; first in the open class and cup for best in show, Birkenhead; first in class over twelve and under eighteen months, one hundred guinea and gold medal for best dog in show, and two cup and gold medal for best dog in show, and two other cups, St. Bernard Club's Show, Sheffield. 1889—First and two cups, Liverpool; first open class, one hundred guinea cup and piece of plate, Kennel Club Show, Alexandra Palace; first, cup, two gold [illegible] twenty-five guinea cup, for best non-s[illegible] show, Manchester; first, one hundred [illegible] piece of plate for best dog in show and [illegible] dred guinea trophy for best dog or b[illegible] Club Show, Windsor; first in open class [illegible] head; first in open class, two special[illegible] Scottish Kennel Club Show, Edinburgh; [illegible] in challenge class and cup for best in show, Glasgow Kennel Club Show, Glasgow. 1890—first and cup, Liverpool; first and gold medal and twenty-five guinea cup for best non-sporting dog in show, Manchester; first and two cups, Leeds; first and special, Birkenhead; first in challenge class, one hundred guinea cup and piece of plate, and Halsey trophy for best dog or bitch, St. Bernard Club Show, Olympia, London. In this country he has won wherever shown.

Le Prince (E. 36599). Breeder, Smith & Baker, Leeds, England. Date of birth, April, 1892. By Young Bute (Lord Bute—Baroness Cardiff) out of Rustic Beauty (Scottish Prince—Hepsy).

This is another beautiful and typical dog, not so big as Sir Bedivere, but he excels even him in richness of color, denseness of shadings and markings; his color and markings are simply magnificent. He is one of the best formed dogs it is possible to imagine, and is as sound as a bell and a splendid mover. His head is nicely broken up, short and square in face, and very deep in muzzle, a good skull with nice wrinkle, and dark, small and well placed eyes giving the best possible expression, and he teems with quality and has any amount of character. If I can find a fault in him it is that he scarcely seems to me to stand over sufficient ground.

Messrs. Smith & Baker, well known as the owners and breeders of so many crack St. Bernards, say of him: "He is by far the very best specimen we ever yet owned," and as they have owned, among others I can mention, Scottish Prince, Plinlimmon, Baron Cardiff, Prince Regent, Le Premier and last but not least Duke of Florence, this is saying a great deal for Le Prince. Duke of Florence is still owned by Messrs. Smith & Baker, and from the latest Stock-Keeper to hand I see he won at Newcastle-on-Tyne and took the special for the best non-sporting dog in the show, and is described as "a truly grand specimen." So as Le Prince is a better, Mr. Pratt is indeed to be congratulated on his plucky purchase, and above all that he is no "beautiful cripple" as so many St. Bernards are nowadays, but Mr. Pratt has shown his good judgment in this respect particularly, for he has not even a bad mover in his kennels, with the exception of three young dogs that have gone wrong on their legs altogether, and breeders will do well to bear this fact in mind when making their breeding arrangements for this season and that Le Prince's services are at their disposal on very reasonable terms.

Le Prince has won three firsts and five specials, including the champion prize and the 25 guinea challenge cup at Birkenhead; first, Caistar; two prizes and four specials, including the champion prize at Edinburgh; first, Derby; first, St. Helens; first and two specials, Leeds; first and special, Lancaster; first and special, Halifax; first and special for the best of any breed, Bingley; first, Skepton; first and two specials, Market Raisin; first and two specials, Caistor; first and special for the best non-sporting dog, Sale; first and two specials, Crewe; two firsts and two specials and the championship at Edinburgh. He will make his debut in this country at the forthcoming New York show.

Alton II (21770). Breeder, Mr. G. P. Wiggin. Date of birth, April, 1891. By Alton (Plinlimmon—Queen Jura) out of Judith (Keeper—Regina).

This dog has greatly improved in body, loin and hindquarters particularly, since last seen on the bench and will be better the next time he is shown than he has probably ever been before. As already noted he is a smooth-coat, his well proportioned head is detracted from by the lack of shadings; he has a nice, small ear, well placed; good legs and feet, plenty of bone and is a good color. He is proving himself an excellent sire, having sired some very promising youngsters.

The prizes he has won are as follows: First in the puppy class and second in the open class at Boston; first Detroit; first Indianapolis; first Denver; first New Orleans; second in the challenge class at Detroit; second in the challenge class at Chicago; first, challenge, Denver; first, challenge, Des Moines, and first, challenge, Toronto. If this latter win had counted he would now have been a champion.

Argyle Alpha (31414). Breeder, owner. Date of birth, April, 1893. By Alton II (Alton—Judith) out of Lady Adelaide II (Plimlimmon—Lady Adelaide).

This is a promising youngster, much like his sire, but will make an even bigger dog when he is furnished, but at present he needs time to fill out.

He has already won the following prizes: First puppy and first novice, second in the open and special for the best American-bred smooth under eighteen months of age, Chicago; first Louisville; second Des Moines and second Toronto.

Two unnamed dog puppies. Breeder, owner. Date of birth, December, 1893. By Alton II (Alton—Judith) out of Pratt's Belle (Sir Bedivere—Judith). These are two enormous youngsters with bone in proportion to their great size; both are smooths. One is an almost white dog with fawn markings and an extra good head, the other is an orange bodied dog with good markings but not so good in head as his brother, but if anything a taller dog, both unfortunately are so bad in stifles and hocks that it is impossible to show them at present, and it is doubtful if they ever will be sound.

Dog puppy. Breeder, owner. Date of birth, October, 1893. By Alton II (Alton—Judith) out of Duchess Lomond (Ben Lomond—Duchess of Heathfield).

This is another big boned and bodied puppy, with a tremendous loin and hindquarters, good stifles and hocks, has a good rough coat but lacks shadings. He has excellent head properties and nice character. Unfortunately he too is at present suffering from lameness, but his is in the shoulder and he will probably outgrow it.

This completes the dogs and now I come to that sweet bitch, Rustic Beauty (30601). Breeder, Mr. S. W. [illegible] of birth, September, 1890. By Scottish Prince—[illegible] Regent—Moss Rose) out of Hepsy (Rhoderick [illegible] Lena).

This is a very sweet bitch, brimful of qua[illegible]

the sweetest of expressions and a very typical head. Her legs and feet are all that can be desired and her movement has nothing to be found fault with. She is a bitch of good size, and her chief defect is her somewhat curly coat but I was glad to see that her curls were fast disap[illegible]

[illegible] attained high honors on the bench but [illegible] as a brood bitch, having produced [illegible] Princess in the same litter.

[illegible] she made her debut at the Chicago Kennel Club's show thirteen months ago, when she was greatly handicapped by being all out of coat, but nevertheless her great quality, excellent type, and symmetry landed her a somewhat easy winner, from such well-known bitches as Sunray, Alta Berna and Io, who were placed as written. She was next shown at New Orleans, where she won again, and then at New York, where she took third, but most are of opinion that this was a mistake and that she ought to have been returned the winner. She then won first Detroit, first Chicago, first Denver, and then took first in the challenge class at the Specialty Club's show at New York, beating her New York conquerers and taking the special for the best bitch in the show, first Louisville, first Des Moines and first Toronto. In England she has the following wins to her credit: Two firsts and gold medal and special Edinburgh; first Derby; third and medal Manchester; first Thirsh; first and special at Halifax; first Carlyle; first Birmingham; first Wisbeach; first Darwin; first Ripon; first Pontefract, and first Boro'bridge, the only times shown.

La Princess (E. 36658). Breeder, Smith & Baker. Date of birth, April 1892. By Young Bute (Lord Bute—Baroness Cardiff) out of Rustic Beauty (Scottish Prince-Hepsy). As already noted this is a full sister to Le Prince. She is much like her dam, only better. She is a very large bitch, with capital legs and feet and movement, good coat, nice carriage of tall and extra good skull with a deep, short, and squarely cut face. She is deficient in white markings, and does not equal her mother in expression and quality, as although her eyes are small and well set and placed, there is a harshness about her expression that is neither nice nor correct; she perhaps inherits this from her grandam Hepsy, who certainly had not a pleasant expression.

She like her brother will make her first bow to the American public at the New York show. On the other side her wins are: Three firsts, two gold medals and silver cup, Glasgow; first and special, Oldham; second, York; first, Middlesborough; first and special, Edinburgh; first and special, Leeds; first and three specials, Egremont; first and special, Preston; first and second specials, Cardiff; first, Ripon; first, Chorley; first, Worsley, and first and special, Crewe.

Lady Adelaide II (19454). Breeder, Mr. Lees, England. Date of birth, May, 1888. By Plinlimmon (Pilgrim—Bessie II), out of Lady Adelaide (Valentine—Minnie). This is a litter sister to the late Champion Aristocrat. She is a large, good-bodied, upstanding bitch with capital bone and is a good, active mover Her coat and markings are also good, and she has a fairly characteristic head, but she is a bit large in ear and should be deeper in color and shorter and squarer in muzzle and darker in eye. She has won first, puppy, Ayr, third, novice, Edinburgh, 1889; third, open, second, novice and Gold Medal, Glasgow, Scotland, 1890. In this country she has won third Chicago, second Des Moines and first Toronto. She was bred on the 1st and 3rd inst. to Le Prince and should produce some grand puppies by him.

Uarda (16051). Breeder, Mr. D. Mann. Date of birth, November, 1889. By Courage III (Courage II—Flora) out of Cleopatra (Hectar—Blanche).

This is a good bodied, grandly coated bitch, but faulty in skull and muzzle; she should, however, make a more than useful brood bitch, and as she was bred on the 9th and 11th inst. to Le Prince and has already the distinction of having sixteen puppies to Refuge II, Mr. Pratt is not without reason looking forward to a good litter from her by his new "crack."

She has won third in the novice class at New York and special for the best [illegible]can-bred rough-coated bitch, and first at [illegible]

[illegible]reeder, Mr. G. P. Wiggin. [illegible]. By Sir Bedivere (Nero [illegible]per—Regina).

This a good bodied smooth white and orange bitch, with capital bone, legs and feet and a good head, though somewhat overdone in ear. She does not seem to me to have quite fulfilled the great promise of her youth, being now to my mind somewhat dog headed and lacking that tender, benevolent, grand expression so desirable in this breed.

She has the following wins to her credit: First puppy class, Boston, 1893; first, Chicago; first, Akron; second, Louisville; first, Des Moines and first, Toronto.

AMONG THE KENNELS—CHAMPION LE PRINCE

Judith's Rachel (29073). Breeder, G. P. Wiggin. Date of birth, September 1892. By Sir Bedivere (Nero III—Bena) out of Judith (Keeper—Regina).

As will be seen from her breeding this is a litter sister to Lady Judith, and although at present out of shape, having just weaned a litter of puppies by Alton II, I am of opinion that she will beat her better known sister in the near future, if they should meet. She is a large and grand bodied bitch, with a good skull, and deep, square cut muzzle; she has peculiar face markings and is almost white, which somewhat detracts from her appearance, but there is no getting away from her extra good head, great size and capital movement and formation. This bitch when shown in shape will more than hold her own with the best of the smooth coats.

This finished the grown dogs and then I had a look at the puppies, a couple of litters, two months old, numbering four and five respectively, the former by Alton II out of Queen, containing three dogs and one bitch, three smooths and one rough-coat, and the latter by Alton II out of Judith's Rachel—a very beautiful litter, an excellent portrait of which, taken by Mr. Pratt, accompanies these notes. In this litter there are four smooths and one rough, and they are all dog puppies, and all good ones, but the choice of them to my mind is the one that Arthur Trickett has on his knees in the photograph, and if this puppy goes the right way he will undoubtedly be heard from, I think.

AMONG THE KENNELS—LITTER OF PUPPIES BY ALTON II—JUDITH'S RACHAEL

The photograph of Le Prince is an excellent one, although it hardly does the dog full justice, as he of all dogs has nothing to hide in body, legs or feet and should certainly have been taken in a standing position.

The kennels unlike many I have visited are more useful than ornamental, being large, dry and airy with plenty of light and room, but not a cent has been expended in useless ornamentation The whole range is about two hundred feet square and is divided into nine kennels and yards. They are built right at the foot of a hill and have a natural drainage and are well surrounded and shaded by beautiful forest trees, which protect them amply from the intense heat in this part of the country in the Summer months. The dogs' staple diet is meat, and their appearance certainly proved it was agreeing with them, for there was not a sick or sorry one among the lot, and they altogether reflected great credit to Arthur Trickett's care and attention.

Having seen all there was to be seen in the dog line, Mr. Pratt next showed me some of his beautiful little Shetlands, of which he has a large number, as well as a splendid herd of registered Jerseys, and some high class saddle horses and trotters, and after a capital dinner we went for a drive round the pretty town, which is surrounded by beautifully timbered hilly country and must be a glorious sight when the foliage is all out. It was a superb day, just like June weather up north, and my drive and visit came to an end all too soon. However when I bade adieu to my kind hosts it was with the consciousness that I had thoroughly enjoyed my stay and had seen a sight that does not and will not fall to the lot of all to see and that was four such grand pieces of dog flesh as Sir Bedivere, Le Prince, La Princess and Rustic Beauty in the one kennel.

THE LAWSUIT OVER BEAUFORT PRINCE

Fair Haven, Vt.

Editor American Field:—Your readers will remember the replevying of the mastiff Beaufort Prince by a Mr. Fallon at the Boston show last Spring. Many may have thought the case settled when they read Judge Forsaith's decision in the Municipal Court in Dr. Lougest's favor. After the judge had heard the evidence he remarked that Mr. Fallon was a badly mistaken man.

Mr. Fallon took an appeal, which was heard the second time before Judge Blodgett in the Superior Court on January 4, 7 and 8 in Boston. The decision was reversed and the case given to Mr. Fallon. For such a verdict, after the evidence given, there could be two ways to account; the first would be the high culture of the Boston jury made their sympathies with Mr. Fallon, as he is the keeper of the Normal School grounds at Bridgewater; or perhaps the Boston jury system is conducted on the same plan as the New York police has been.

Dr. Lougest employed the best counsel, was at great expense in getting the best witnesses, and no honorable point was left undone to win the case. His dozen witnesses all positively identified the dog then in court as Beaufort Prince, a well-known show dog; and his identity as Beaufort Prince was clearly proved by his breeder (myself), who testified the dog's testicles never came down like other dogs; that when whelped the dog had only one dewclaw—and that on his right hindleg—which I cut off; that there was a scar on one leg, but none on the other. I also showed a photograph of Beaufort Prince taken with Champion Beaufort Black Prince and a litter sister (Vere), from which anyone would easily pick out the dog in court as Beaufort Prince. I also testified that I had seen Beaufort Prince while he was in the hands of Mr. C. P. Fraleigh, the secretary of the United States Insurance Company of New York, to whom I sold him; also that I had seen him while he was owned by Mr. Herbert Mead, the secretary of the Mastiff Club, to whom Mr. Fraleigh gave him; also that I was present when Mr. Mead delivered him to Dr. Lougest, the present owner of Beaufort Prince (though the law has given him to a Mr. Fallon, and besides ordered the Doctor shall pay a bill of expenses of about $700) whose experience is a warning to all dog men to keep clear of law as it is called in Boston, as there is no reason to expect but what what they would be served the same way as the Doctor has been.

I have not a dog in my kennels but what I either bred or imported, and there is not one I could bring one-half the proof of ownership of as did the Doctor of Beaufort Prince. He had the testimony of Mr. Fraleigh, to whom I sold the dog, who testified to the same peculiarities as I did; also to an injury the dog had received in his right hindleg where a small bone was broken, and how he was treated for it by Dr. H. Clay Glover; also that he had exhibited him at the New York show in 1893; also that he had given him to Mr. Mead.

Mr. Mead testified to the same markings and peculiarities of Beaufort Prince as I and Mr. Fraleigh had; also how he had seen him on the show bench in 1893 at New York, where he was exhibited by Mr. Fraleigh, from whom he got him; how he sold him to Dr. Lougest, and he delivered him to that gentleman at the New York show in 1894, where he was entered as belonging to Dr. Lougest; and that he could most positively identify the dog in court as the Beaufort Prince that he had got from Mr. Fraleigh.

Mr. Mead's gardener, who had charge of the dog while Mr. Mead had him, swore positively that the dog in court was the one he had had care of for Mr. Mead, and the one he brought to the New York dog show in 1894 to deliver to Dr. Lougest, and he knew him as Beaufort Prince.

Dr. H. Clay Glover was positive that the dog in court was Beaufort Prince. He had first seen him at the house of Mr. Fraleigh when a puppy. He had treated him for an injury to his right hindleg; there was an injury to the bone in the dog's right hindleg similar to the bone in the knee of a man; there was a displacement or an injured bone which could be easily seen. He called the dog and showed the jury where was the difference between the two legs, the swaying movement of one hindleg being caused by that injury. He also testified that his attention was called to Beaufort Prince's testicles not having come down, and that he had then examined him for Mr. Fraleigh particularly; also that he saw the same dog he treated for Mr. Fraleigh at the New York show entered by Mr. Fraleigh, and that he recognized him then as Beaufort Prince; also that he had seen the dog in court at four different dog shows where he had been the veterinarian, and that his attention had been particularly called to him on account of his having the appearance of being castrated; that he could positively identify the dog then in court as Beaufort Prince.

John Read testified he was the superintendent at four of the shows where the dog in court was shown; at New York, in 1893, his first owner, Mr. Fraleigh, put a card over him in his bench, saying "for sale, apply to John Read;" he was well acquainted with the dog in court and positively knew him as Beaufort Prince since 1893; he knew him by his swayback and his apparent lack of testicles; he had never made a mistake in identifying a dog, and knew he could not now.

The veteran exhibitor and handler B. F. Lewis, with his twenty-three years' experience as an exhibitor and a handler, was there and like the rest swore positively to the dog as the well-known show dog and a brother to Black Prince, and that he had seen him on the show bench since 1893; also that he recognized him by his peculiarities from other dogs, such as his testicles having never come down, his sway back, his peculiar walk, the shrunken appearance of his right hindleg when compared with the other, the peculiar carriage of his ears. He testified how he had examined him very carefully in 1893, when Mr. Mead owned him. Mr. Mead had brought the dog in court (Beaufort Prince) to the Danbury fair to have him (Lewis) buy the dog, and he then examined the dog carefully and he was not mistaken now.

Mr. Geo. W. Glazier swore that the dog in court was Beaufort Prince, the litter brother of Black Prince; that he first saw him in New York in 1893, when he was owned by Mr. Fraleigh, that he had then examined him, with others, because he knew he was a brother to Black Prince, and his testicles had apparently not come down; he had seen him at different shows since then; he was at the Boston dog show when the dog was taken by Mr. Fallon.

Mr. H. C. Innes, a prominent lawer of Boston, was looking at the mastiff and was talking with Jeff, Dr. Lougest's kenneiman, when Fallon first came in to claim a dog. Both testified he was very undecided which to take; that he first was going to claim another dog; then he came up to Beaufort Prince and called him Carlo, and pulled his chain and tried to make friends with him.

Though it was only five months since he had lost him Fallon testified his new Carlo failed to recognize him, and gave a growl and snapped at him. One peculiar part of it is the dog he lost he said was Carlo, but now he is Prince Baudet (he so calls him).

Dr. Lougest and his son Walter both testified how they had first seen the dog at the New York dog show in 1893, exhibited by Mr. Fraleigh; as his dam was a bitch he imported, he gave Mr. Winchell a wash for his eye which his son and Mr. Winchell used in Beaufort Prince's eye; how he could identify him by his likeness to his dam, Gerda, which he sold to Mr. Winchell, by the many other marks and peculiarities that the others had testified to; how he had first seen him in New York when Mr. Fraleigh exhibited him in 1893; how he had bought him of Mr. Mead; how he was delivered to him at New York in 1894 by Mr. Mead; how he had shown him at Chicago, at Detroit, and at Boston, where he was taken by Mr. Fallon last April and in whose possession he had been ever since.

Dr. Stewart, Dr. H. Clay Glover and Dr. Martin all testified that after the dogs' parts had been shaved they had examined him with a microscope; and they could say there were no marks, as there must be if an operation had been performed.

So much for the Doctor's side of the evidence. There was not a weak spot or a flaw from beginning to the end. His twelve witnesses, by their remembering the many peculiarities of the dog, proved positively that the dog before them was Beaufort Prince.

Now for the evidence on the other side. What was it?

Mr. Fallon, to commence with, cannot tell where the dog came from; it was given to him; the person is dead, he says; he says he lost the dog the Thanksgiving Day before the Boston dog show (which was in April). He swore that when he found the dog at the Boston dog show it had the marks of having been castrated, that he could pull it apart and see where the dog had been cut. He and one of his witnesses swore positively that Dr. Lougest said he was the breeder of Beaufort Prince; when in my presence also they swore that there had been an examination in my presence and that of Dr. Lougest; but I can swear there is not the slightest shadow of truth in that.

I did nor hear the evidence on Mr. Fallon's side; it was told me by Dr. Lougest, Dr. Stewart and Walter Lougest. All the evidence I heard on their side was given by the family doctor, who testified very honestly that he knew nothing of castration, had never performed the operation or seen it performed; his testimony was mostly what he thought or imagined, not what he know from practice. Mrs. Fallon knew the dog because it liked children, Mr. Fallon because it liked the horse.

The decision was a complete surprise to all, especially to those who had heard the evidence. The proof was so overwhelming and the identity of the dog in court so clearly established beyond a question that a verdict was expected from the jury, without their leaving their seats, in Dr. Lougest's favor. It will not do to say Beaufort Prince was stolen from Dr. Lougest, because it was done by law as it is done in the Boston courts. To the thousands of people who know Beaufort Prince the case will seem an outrage.

A person can, in Boston, deliberately steal your horse or your dog, whichever he fancies; can walk away with it before a trial; also can continue to retain possession of it after one trial where the court has decided against him, and that he had no claim on the property. If this is the law in Boston I shall keep my dogs out of Boston and Boston courts.

J. L. WINCHELL.

BOSTON.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The case of Fallon v. Lougest was heard in the Superior Court at Boston before Judge Blodgett and a jury, and a verdict was returned on Tuesday, January 8, in favor of Martin Fallon, awarding him at the same time $25 damages. I shall make an attempt to carry the case to the Supreme Court on the plea that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence.

It will be remembered that Martin Fallon, a small farmer of Bridgewater, Mass., claimed the dog Beaufort Prince at the Boston show last April, alleging that it was a dog which he had lost just before the preceding Thanksgiving Day, which dog answered indiscriminately to the names of Isaac, Carlo and Bowwow. The case was tried in the Municipal Court in May, and resulted in a verdict in my favor. Fallon carried the case to the higher court, and, as I have stated above, the verdict was in his favor. A brief resumé of the evidence on which this extraordinary verdict was based is here given.

Martin Fallon, the plaintiff, said the dog he lost was a bull-mastiff, and was given to a son of his (now dead) when the puppy was about two months old; could not tell who gave the dog to his son, nor where it was bred, nor anything at all about the matter, except that it was given to his son. He identified the dog in court by its general appearance and its seeming familiarity with his house; when taken to his home it seemed to know the horse, etc. In the lower court he swore there were "no particular marks" on the dog by which he identified the dog; but now he swore to the identity of the dog by two marks, one on each ear, which he said had been caused by burns received when a puppy. These marks neither Fallon nor any of his witnesses mentioned at all in the lower court. He also swore that on the very day that he removed the dog from the bench at the Boston show he saw "raw sore on the dog's scrotum, that he pulled it apart and that blood and matter came from it, where his testicles had been cut from him." Fallon's wife, his daughter and his son-in-law corroborated his testimony as to the general appearance of the dog; none of them saw the raw sore and none of them knew whence Fallon's son got the dog. Some of his neighbors were called, but identified the dog only by his general appearance; some of them did not know the difference between a mastiff and a bloodhound, and none of them were familiar with different breeds of dogs—mastiffs especially. Some expert evidence was called in the lower court on his behalf, but in the Superior Court the only expert evidence called for Fallon was Dr. Blodgett's, of Boston, who would not swear positively that there was any scar on the scrotum of the dog, and would not swear positively that the dog had been castrated. This was, in short, the whole of the evidence for Fallon, who claimed the dog.

I produced Mr. J. L. Winchell, of Fairhaven, Vt., president of the Bloodhound Club and life member of the American Mastiff Club, who positively identified the dog as Beaufort Prince, that he bred the dog from Gerda by Beaufort, and that he sold the dog to Mr. Fraleigh, secretary of the United States Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Fraleigh's deposition was read in court. He positively identified the dog as Beaufort Prince, the dog he bought from Mr. Winchell and sold to Mr. Mead. The dog's testicles had not descended.

Mr. Herbert Mead, of Lake Waccabuc, secretary and treasurer of the American Mastiff Club, breeder of mastiffs for thirty years, and examiner of pedigrees for the American Mastiff Club, testified positively to the identity of the dog: "He is Beaufort Prince, the same dog I bought from Mr. Fraleigh, and sold to Dr. Lougest at the Westminster Kennel Club's Show in New York, 1894. Besides his likeness to Gerda and Beaufort, I can identify him by his ingrowing eyelash, his peculiarity of having no testicles, and an injury to his right leg."

I myself positively identified the dog as being the identical dog I saw in New York, 1893, and bought in 1894.

Mr. Walter Lougest positively identified the dog as the one he took in at the shows at Detroit, Chicago and Boston after his purchase in 1894.

Mr. Glazier, of Salem, positively identified the dog.

A man in the employment of Mr. Mead positively identified the dog as having been in his care at the time the dog belonging to Fallon was said to have been lost.

Ben Lewis, of many years' experience as a dog expert, positively identified the dog.

John Read, late superintendent of dog shows, also positively identified the dog.

Dr. H. Clay Glover, of New York, positively identified the dog as the dog he had examined and admitted to various dog shows since 1893; he also positively identified the dog as the dog he attended professionally when it was in Mr. Fraleigh's possession. The dog had a dislocated patella, and an ingrowing eyelash on the right eye, which he pointed out in court. He swore the dog had never been castrated.

Dr. Martin, of Franklin, government veterinary inspector, swore positively that the dog had never been castrated.

Dr. James Stewart, of Boston, also swore most positively that the dog had never been castrated, and that the marks on the dog's ears could not by any possibility have been caused by burns.

Mr. Chas. H. Innes, a Boston lawyer, positively identified the dog as Beaufort Prince.

S. Jeff, of Boston, positively identified the dog as Beaufort Prince, saying: "He is the same dog I saw Mr. Mead deliver up to Dr. Lougest at the New York dog show in 1894, and is the same dog I saw at the kennel club show at New York in 1893."

Every witness that saw the dog at the Boston show and at the trial in the lower court swore most positively that it had no marks on the ears then and no open wound on the scrotum or any other place, yet in spite of all this positive evidence the verdict was given against me.

Whose dog is safe under these circumstances? Not only have I lost my dog and been put to a very great deal of trouble and expense, but my reputation as an honest breeder and exhibitor has been placed in jeopardy through the verdict.

The lawyer for Fallon charged every one of the witnesses with swearing falsely, and that their testimony was nothing but manufactured evidence, given by dog men gathered together from all parts of the country to bolster up this case and get the dog for a poor farmer.

How will Mr. Fraleigh, Mr. Mead, Mr. Winchell, Dr. H. Clay Glover, Mr. John Read, Mr. Glazier and all the others like this charge about manufactured evidence? How can any exhibitor send a dog to any show in safety after this, if a dog with an undoubted pedigree, registered, traced from his birth, never out of the possession of members of the American Mastiff Club and one so well known as Beaufort Prince, can be taken away from such a well-known breeder and exhibitor as myself?

SPANIEL CLUB'S EXECUTIVE MEETING

A meeting of the executive committee of the American Spaniel Club was held at the residence of the Treasurer, Dr. S. J. Bradbury, 110 East Twenty-second Street, New York, on Saturday evening, January 12.

The meeting was called to order at 8:30 p. m., by President A. C. Wilmerding. The other members present were Messrs. R. P. Keasbey, S. J. Bradbury and E. M. Oldham.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

The Treasurer reported a balance in bank of $170; due from members $130, and all bills paid.

It was resolved that the annual meeting of the club should be held on Wednesday, February 20, at 4 p. m., at Madison Square Garden, to be followed by the club's annual dinner, and Messrs. Oldham and Keasbey were appointed a committee to make the necessary arrangements.

When the order of new business came up Mr. Oldham addressed the president as follows: "Mr. Wilmerding, it it my very pleasant office this evening to wish you, on behalf of the members of the American Spaniel Club, every conceivable happiness that the interesting and holy state on which you are about to enter can confer. You have, as we all know, from the first formation of the club, always used your best efforts to advance its interests, and to-day we are pleased to think it stands second to none in the kennel world; and we feel, as it has been in part through your efforts that this desirable end has been attained, the voice of the club should be heard on an occasion when you are about to take the most important step in life. In the name of the American Spaniel Club, with the best wishes of its members, I take great pleasure in presenting you with this piece of plate as a souvenir commemorative of the occasion. Wishing you and your intended bride health, wealth and, last but not least, every happiness."

Mr. Oldham then presented a handsome piece of plate engraved as follows: "Presented by members of the American Spaniel Club to their President, A. C. Wilmerding, January, 1895."

Mr. Wilmerding replied as follows: "Mr. Oldham and Gentlemen:—I am quite overcome and hardly know what to reply. Your very beautiful token has taken me completely by surprise. While I have always served the club with my best efforts, as I think you all know, yet I do not feel that I deserve so handsome a remembrance at your hands. I shall always cherish it and value it highly as coming from a body of men whom I can never do aught else but respect and esteem. Accept my thanks."

THE UNITED STATES FIELD TRIALS CLUB'S TRIALS

(Special Telegram.)

WEST POINT, MISS., January 21, 1895.

The United States Field Trials Club's trials at this place did not begin until half past one to-day, owing to a hard rain in the forenoon. The grounds were in fair condition, considering the continued rains since January 1. The cover is rather heavy on a part of the grounds. Plenty of birds were found under adverse conditions—fifteen bevies in the short afternoon. The work of the dogs was barely fair, but the work for them was hard on account of wet grounds. The attendance is large and the following are among those present: Major J. W. Renfroe, Atlanta, Ga.; Phil M. Essig and Mr. James, Natchez, Miss.; J. E. Wells, Knoxville, Tenn.; J. L Adams, St. Marc M. Mundy and D. C. Rowland, Louisville, Ky.; C. W. Zimmerman and wife, Alabama; Dr. Mead and wife, Michigan; J. M. Freeman and J. E. Horn, Bicknell, Ind.; P. T. Madison, H. A. Comstock, S. H. Socwell, Indianapolis, Ind.; Henry K. Lee, J. P. Doan, New Castle, Pa.; A. M. Young, Manchester, Tenn.

Nearly all the prominent handlers are present, including Avent, Rose, Nesbitt, Stafford, Stoddard, Blankenbaker, Purcell, Buckel, Johnson, Mayfield, Bond, Lewis, Richards, Gray and Titus. The latter has done good work locally to further the interest of the trials.

The Pointer Derby had nine starters. Bad weather since the latter part of December interfered seriously with the preparation of the young dogs. The following is the order of running, with brief comment:

Charlottesville Field Trial Kennels' Delhi with T. L. Tinsley's Roderick L. Delhi was best in speed and ranges well as in point work. Roderick seemed entirely off nose, flushing everything he came to. He was energetic in his work.

Charlottesville Field Trial Kennels' Tippe and H. K. Devereux's Tamarack Jr ran next, being quite even in range and speed, but Tamarack had the best of it in work, being quick, stanch and accurate.

L. W. Blankenbaker's Lad's Lady and Major J. R. Purcell's Staunch George made a rather poor showing. Lady had little opportunity for point work and was ordinary in speed and range. Staunch George did some flushing and was unsteady to wing.

Hempstead Farm's Don and W. B. Stafford's Rex were the fourth brace, both doing some point work. Don's total absence of style handicaps him. Rex was quick with good style at times, showing unsteadiness.

W. I. Love's Love's Kent showed badly in speed and range in a part of his race, but after finding birds unproved his chances with some good point work. As seen alone he will go down again to be tried with company.

The following will be continued in the second series, running in following order: Delhi with Tamarack Jr.; [illegible] Hempstead Don; Rex Fast with Love's Kent; [illegible] must be given another trial.

WEST POINT, MISS., January 22.

The Pointer Derby was continued and finished to-day. The weather was delightful and plenty of birds were found. Delhi and Tamarack Jr ran first, giving a good exhibition of speed, range and hunting qualities. Delhi did most of the point work. Tippoo and Hempstead Don were next, Don doing the point work. Tippoo disobeyed, generally hunting at will, and was weak in point work. Rex Fast and Louis Kent, next, ran fairly only and pretty evenly. Staunch George and Lad's Lady were now brought in and ran separately. George did nice, clean work; Lady did nothing very creditable. In the third series Roderick T and Rex Fast ran a short trial, the latter doing best. The final trial was between Staunch George and Love's Kent, the latter doing the most point work. The awards were: Delhi, first; Tamarack Jr, second; Hempstead Don, third; Rex Fast fourth; Love's Kent, fifth. The Setter Derby had fourteen starters, running as follows: Lady Mildred with Dotlet; Tom Beggs with Jock Scott; Dashing Novice II with Lady Clare; Cynosure with Tony's Gale; Dixie's Flag with Nellie Fox; Joe Cummings with Tony Boy; Clementina with Wun Lung's Pride. Three braces were finished. Lady Mildred was much the superior of Dotlet at all points. Tom Beggs and Jock Scott were good enough in speed and range, but did not show so well in point work; Jock was best in range, Tom Beggs doing best on birds. Lady Clare and Dashing Novice II ran a pretty good trial. Lady Clare was the best in pace and range, and was quick but not always accurate in her point work.

J. M. TAYLOR.

JUDGES FOR THE CHICAGO SHOW

The Mascoutah Kennel Club's show will be provided with an array of judging talent such as is seldom brought together. The club has not followed in the old groove either, and consequently among the thirteen (!) judges will be found one or two debutants, besides others who seldom tread the sawdust. Specialists are the order of the day, and for each of several breeds the judge is a well-known breeder and fancier; when this has not been done the breed is handed over to Mr. John Davidson, with the exception of the "toys," which are to be intrusted to Mr. T. F. Rackham. Canada furnishes two of the judges; Chicago, New York and St. Louis are represented; and the rest are drawn from half a dozen different states, as may be seen from the following list:

St. Bernards, Mr. R. J. Sawyer, Menominee, Mich.
Mastiffs, Mr. Arthur Trickett, Little Rock, Ark.
Great Danes, Mr. G. Muss-Arnolt, Tuckahoe, N. Y.
Pointers, Mr. B. F. Seitner, Dayton, O.
English setters, Mr. W. B. Wells, Chatham, Can.
Irish setters, Gordon setters, Newfoundlands, borzois, deerhounds, bloodhounds, greyhounds, foxhounds, Chesapeakes, beagles, all terriers—except fox terriers, bull terriers, Yorkshires, and toys—schipperkes, Old English sheepdogs, Dalmatians, and miscellaneous, Mr. John Davidson, Monroe, Mich.
Collies, Mr. J. A. Long, St. Louis, Mo.
Fox terriers, Mr. August Belmont, New York.
Field, cocker, Clumber, and Irish water spaniels, Mr. Andrew Laidlaw, Galt, Can.
Bulldogs, Mr. E. A. Woodward, Chicago.
Bull terriers, Mr. Wm. Mariner, Milwaukee, Wis.
Dachshunde, Mr. Jos. Wedekind, Chicago.
Poodles, pugs, Yorkshires, toys, King Charles, Blenheims, Prince Charles, ruby, and Japanese spaniels, and Italian greyhounds, Mr. T. Farrer Rackham, East Orange, N. J.

MAJ. PURCELL'S REPLY

WEST POINT, MISS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I have read in the AMERICAN FIELD Mr. Avent's challenge, under the heading of "At Last a Challenge Accepted."

His proposition, altogether different from the one I mailed him before Christmas, I respectfully decline, first because at the time he names to run the match Lady Margaret will have been six weeks pregnant.

I stated in my letter to him that she had been bred, but I was anxious to test the combined qualities of this brace in actual competition for two or three hours, and I named January 14, 15 and 16 as the latest date I would feel justified in running her against Chevalier.

My proposition was to run under the Southern Field Trial Club's rules, which I believe to be the most perfect to test the merits of a bird dog. One essential point is the privilege of flushing birds by command. It is true handlers generally do not adopt this mode of training, but it nevertheless remains a fact that a dog that will flush at command and be steady to wing and shot is more perfectly trained (and more usefully trained) than one that will not stand that test.

I wish to add that Mr. Hitchcock would have made, in my opinion, an excellent judge and entirely satisfactory to me. I also thank Mr. Avent for what seems to be an effort to accommodate me, even on the conditions named, but the handicap on "Marg." is too great to run so good a setter as I think Chevalier to be. I might add that Lady Margaret was very seriously cut in the the throat and ear by barbed wire yesterday afternoon, and she will not be able to work for several days.

NOTES

THE Mascoutah Kennel Club has adopted the plan of sending out to the press, for notice, revised proofs of the premium list for its show. This is the proper course to pursue; for otherwise the reading notice usually given to a premium list is of little or no benefit, hundreds of copies of the list itself being already in the hands of the fancy. As we stated two weeks ago, the prize list has been cut down and the entry fee reduced to $3; but on the other hand the lists of "specials" are longer than usual. For St. Bernards (each variety), mastiffs and Great Danes, we find the following provided: Two challenge classes (two prizes, $15 and $10), two open classes (four prizes, $15, $10, $5 and $3), two puppy classes (two prizes, $5 and $3), and a novice class ($5 and $3); but only one puppy class for the Danes. With the exception of the novice class and the second prize of $10 in the challenge classes a similar provision is made for pointers (divided by weight) and the three varieties of setters; while the prizes and classification for collies are the same as for pointers and setters, with the addition of two novice classes (two prizes, $10 and $5). Three challenge classes ($10), five open classes ($10, $5 and $3) and a puppy class ($5 and $3) are allotted to cocker spaniels; the prize moneys are the same for bulldogs, bull terriers and beagles, but their classes are two challenge, four open and a puppy, bull terriers also getting a novice class of $10 and $5; and the same prize moneys are offered for borzois and greyhounds, their classes being two challenge, two open and a puppy. For smooth fox terriers we find two challenge ($10), two open ($10, $5, $3 and bronze medal), two puppy ($5 and $3) and two novice ($5, $3 and bronze medal) classes; and a similar classification for pugs, except that here there is but one puppy and one novice class, with a silver and a bronze medal as third and fourth prizes in the latter. A challenge class ($10) and two open classes ($10, $5 and $3) form the portion for American foxhounds, English foxhounds, deerhounds, and Scottish, Irish, Dandie Dinmont, Skye, Yorkshire, black and tan, and Bedlington terriers; with the exceptions that black and tans get two challenge classes, and Bedlingtons and English foxhounds none. Field spaniels are provided with four open classes ($10, $5 and $3) and a puppy class ($5 and $3), Irish water spaniels with two open classes (same prizes), and Clumber spaniels with one open class (same prizes); and there are two challenge classes ($10) for all spaniels over 28 pounds. With two challenge ($10) and five open ($10, $5 and silver medal) classes poodles cannot complain; neither can "Bostons" with four open ($10, $5 and silver medal) and two novice ($5 and $3) classes; nor Dalmatians with two open classes ($10, $5 and $3) and a puppy class ($5 and $3) Bloodhounds, wirehaired fox terriers and dachshunde get a challenge class of $10 and two open classes of $10 and $5, the last named also finding a puppy class of $5 and $3. For Newfoundlands there is but one class ($10 and $5), but Chesapeakes get two open classes of $10 and $5 and a puppy class of $5 and $3. Old English sheepdogs and schipperkes each have one open class of $10, $5 and $3. King Charles and Blenheim spaniels each find two open classes ($5, $3 and silver medal), with a challenge class ($5) for the first named. The Prince Charles, ruby, and Japanese varieties each have an open class of $5 and $3. Toy terriers other than Yorkshires are divided into rough and smooth haired, with two classes of $5 and $3 for each division. Italian greyhounds are allowed a challenge ($5) and two open ($5 and $3) classes; and for miscellaneous breeds a class ($5 and $3) is provided for each sex. That Mr. George Hill is superintendent has been mentioned two or three times already in these columns, and two weeks ago we announced that entries would close on February 16. Spratts Patent will bench and feed. To mention all the specials, many of which are very valuable, would consume too much space, but they may be summarized as follows: Mastiffs, 11; St. Bernards, 20; Great Danes, 8; collies, 12; Boston terriers, 10; fox terriers, 9; bull terriers, 8; cocker spaniels, dachshunde and pugs, 7; beagles and bulldogs, 6; English and Irish setters, poodles and Yorkshire terriers, 5; greyhounds, pointers, Gordon setters, field spaniels, Irish water spaniels and toy terriers, 4; borzois, deerhounds, foxhounds, Clumber spaniels, Skyes and black and tan terriers, 3; King Charles and Blenheim spaniels, 2; other breeds (with following exceptions), 1; old English sheepdogs and Japanese spaniels, 0. The kennel prizes are included in the above; they are: For mastiffs, St. Bernards (each variety), Great Danes, borzois, deerhounds, greyhounds, foxhounds, pointers, all setters, collies and dachshunde, $15; for field, cocker, Clumber and Irish water spaniels (each), poodles, bull terriers, beagles, smooth fox terriers, black and tans, Skyes, Yorkshires, pugs and Italian greyhounds, $10 Probably more specials will be added, and, if so, will be announced in these columns. Premium lists will be printed and ready for mailing by Saturday of this week. They will be eagerly awaited and closely scrutinized, and we hope the entries will then commence to flow in steadily. It is confidently expected that the local specials will bring out a goodly number of Cook County's 50,000 dogs, and such being the case entries should reach the thousand mark. We wish to call attention to the following very sensible clause in Section VI of Additional Rules: "No exhibitor will be permitted to change the number or location of the stall allotted to his dog." Take it all round, it is a very good premium list. Of course, everybody will not be quite suited with it. The man whose fancy does not run to collies will probably ask very emphatically why that breed should be favored with two novice classes with prizes of $10 and $5, when his particular fancy only gets one of $5 and $3, or perhaps none at all; and foxhound owners might—and with some justice—point out that it is not fair to require them to show ten animals for a kennel prize of $15 when four of any other breed will suffice. But take it all through—classification, prizes, specials and judges—it is certainly the most liberal premium list we have seen for an entry fee of $3.

THE sportsmen of this country will be interested to learn that Antonio has become the property of the Eldred Kennel, having been purchased last week from Mr. H. Hulman Jr., of Terre Haute, Ind., by Mr. C. H. Phelps Jr., of Philadelphia, for himself and Mr. Theodore Sturges of New York. For the convenience of breeders he will stand at stud, as seen by reference to our business columns, at Clifton Station, Delaware Co., Pa., a suburb of Philadelphia, where Mr. Phelps resides. The kennel itself is located at Eldred, Sullivan Co. New York, a locality chosen on account of its high location and dry, well drained ground. This kennel has been in existence since 1892. This country has hardly produced a dog that has as good a combined record of bench winner, field trial winner and sire of winners, as Antonio, for a dog of his age, and the surprise is, that when his record in these matters is worked out it is so good as the following shows: Starting as V.H.C. in the Washington show in March, 1892, he is next winner of fourth prize in the open class in New York show, February, 1893, under Tallman. His next wins are, first in open class and first in field trial class, Washington, 1893, and first in open class New York, February, 1894, under Major Taylor. He is next shown under Francis G. Taylor at Philadelphia show in March, 1894, when he won first in open class, first as best English setter in show, first as best English setter with field trial record and winner of Ashmont Trophy as best dog of any breed in the show. His field trial record ranks high also. He divided third with Fred Gates in the All-Age Setter Stake, Central trials, Lexington, N. C., 1890, with 23 starters, and was always in first place afterward, as follows: First in All-Age Stake, Louisiana Sportsmen's Association's trials, Lafayette, La., January, 1891, with 16 starters; first, All-Age Stake, 20 starters, in Southern trials, New Albany, Miss., February, 1891: first, Champion Stake, and winner of American Field Cup, Eastern Trials, High Point, N. C., November, 1891; first, Free-For-All, winning the prize of $1,000 in Central trials, which were open to all dogs regardless of previous winnings, defeating the following famous winners: King's Mark, Rip Rap, Maid of Kent, Paul Bo, Count Eric and Chance. This event was run in four-hour heats. High as Antonio's record is as a bench and field winner he has more than sustained it as a sire of field trial winners. His get have been before the public less than fifteen months, the first appearing in the United States trials at Bickneil, Ind., in November, 1893, five of them, viz.: San Antonio, Nellie H's Lady, Rodfield, Daisy Hunter II and Antoinette, three of them being placed and winning a first, second and third. Including the past year, 1894, sixteen have started, viz.: San Antonio, Nellie H's Lady, Rodfield, Daisy Hunter II, Antoinette, Markel, Misty Morning, Tony Boy, Dash Antonio, Nellie Fox, Lady Mildred, Tom Beggs, Iriquois, Tony's Gale, Antonia and Antovista, winning eleven times, three firsts, three seconds, three thirds and fourth twice under such judges as Wells, Stoddard, Freeman, Wallace, Taylor, Bradley, Davidson, Bell, Kern and others. In all instances there was a good field of starters. This is a wonderfully good record for a dog in the stud about three years and doing little until within about two years past. Certainly Antonio has proved himself the best of the Roderigo—Bo Peeps living and must now take the place left by his famous sire, Roderigo. Being a dog of fine substance and of great setter character it is thoroughly shown in his get for both bench and field purposes.

OWING to the Westminster Kennel Club going to press somewhat earlier than usual with its premium lists many special prizes were omitted. In addition to those already published the Westminster Challenge Cup (value $500), contributed by Col. J. Ruppert Jr., Mr. William C. Reick and the Westminster Kennel Club, for the best American-bred St. Bernard sired in America and born on or after March 1, 1890, will be offered for competition. A friend of the Westminster Kennel Club offers $20 for the best St. Bernard in the show. Mr. George Elliott, of the Elliott-Washington Steel Co., New Castle, Pa., offers a handsome silver cup (plated) for the best Irish setter dog in the show that has been placed at any public field trial in the world; also a handsome silver cup (plated) for the best Irish setter dog that has been placed in any public field trial (to be shown with two of his progeny, and the merits of the sire and progeny to be considered). Mr. C. Albert Stevens' special of a silver cup, already announced in the premium list, is for the best American-bred bull terrier dog (not dog or bitch) under twelve months of age that has never before been exhibited; in addition to which he also offers a silver cup (value $50) for the best two bull terrier bitches entered and owned by one exhibitor. Mr. H. W. Smith, secretary of the Fox Terrier Club, writes as follows: "We have got up a list of specials for your show and I am only waiting to have Mr. Young send me on notices of his special sweepstakes for wirehaired fox terriers so that I can send them all out together." Mr. Young is the originator of a special sweepstakes for "wires," which will be as follows: "The American Fox Terrier Club's Special Sweepstakes for American-bred wirehaired fox terriers. Purse $100, in two equal divisions. Division A, for dogs and bitches born previous to January 1, 1894. Division B, for dogs and bitches born on and after January 1, 1894. Open to members of the American Fox Terrier Club only. Entry fee $2. Prizes for each division: 1st, $20 and 50% of one-half total entry fees; 2nd, $15 and 35% of one-half total entry fees; 3rd, $10 and 15% of one-half total entry fees; 4th, $5. Entries will close February 4, with Jas. Mortimer, superintendent, Room 2, 59 Liberty Street, New York." All indications point to a record show entry. Applications for premium lists, etc., have been received from several prominent breeders and exhibitors in England, one of whom is our old friend "Scotch" Baillie, who now superintends Mr. Robert Chapman's well-known kennel of Gordon setters, pointers, spaniels, etc.; another is Mr. Edwin Booth, favorably known in the St. Bernard fancy as the late manager of Col. J. Rupert Jr.'s kennel; then comes Mr. Francis B. Craven, the owner of the well-known collie Doon Perfection and other cracks; also Mr. Sam. Woodiwiss is expected with an all-round team of greyhounds, Old English sheepdogs, bulldogs, etc. We have liberally supplied the English fancy with premium lists, and there will be, no doubt, many English exhibitors at our coming show.

New York. JAS. MORTIMER, Supt.

ON December 26 and 27 the first kennel show held in Oregon took place at the building of the Portland Universal Exposition. It was an unqualified success, for taken as a whole the exposition has been little short of a failure, and on the nights upon which the canine exhibition took place a large number of people were in attendance. The exhibition could hardly be called a kennel show, in all that that term implies, for it was an exhibition only—no competition and no judging. Some one hundred and sixty very good dogs were shown, and there is no doubt that the exhibition was but the forerunner of future dog shows at which the entries will compete for awards. Mr. Carrol E. Hughes and Mr. J. M. Sanderson were the prime movers of the affair, and it was due to their painstaking efforts that so many good dogs of so many different breeds were displayed to our citizens. The people of Portland hardly know what to expect from a kennel show, but many good dogs of various breeds have come among us within the last few years, and a bona fide show should bring together from four to five hundred entries. Following I give a list of the different breeds shown which I trust will prove of interest to some: Pointers, several good dogs; Irish setters, represented by Patterson's Polly, Beau Brummel and several other registered dogs of great merit; English setters, Winfield Noble, a dog well known in the East and but lately imported to Oregon by Mr. J. M. Sanderson, Loda, Bluffer, Blue Monday, and others of worth; Gordon setters, two fair representatives; English retrievers; field spaniels; Irish water spaniels, represented by such good dogs as Fannie, O'Donohue's Dick, Barney O'Connor, Colleen Bawn and several others; Newfoundlands; bulldogs; greyhounds; deerhounds; foxhounds; mastiffs; St. Bernards; collies; Great Danes; Mexican hairless; Spanish poodles; Spanish pugs; cocker spaniels; English Derbys; fox terriers; pugs; bull terriers; Irish terriers; Scotch terriers; Yorkshire terriers; Skye terriers; one fine specimen of the Russian corded poodle; Japanese pugs; black and tan terriers, and Spitz.

Portland, Ore. THOS. G. FARRELL.

THE attention of owners of Gordon setters is called to the prizes offered at the New York dog show at Madison Square Garden, February 19 next; entries to close February 4. In addition to the $320 in cash prizes offered by the Westminster Kennel Club (same as to English setters) the Gordon Setter Club of America has increased its cash prizes to $40, and now offers $5 each to the best, second best, third best and fourth best Gordon dogs and bitches in open classes; also the American Field Silver Vase (cost over $100) for the best Gordon setter exhibited which shall have been the property of a member of the club for six months continuously previous to the close of New York entries; vase to be won three times before becoming the absolute property of the winner. Both vase and the $40 are offered only for competition to members in good standing and whose annual dues are paid up before the close of entries, February 4, next. The annual meeting of the Gordon Setter Club of America will be held at Madison Square Garden, New York, on Wednesday, February 20, at 7:30 p. m. (the second night of the dog show) for the election of officers and members and the transaction of such other business as may then come up. Members are requested to send in their annual dues (five dollars) and the names of those to be proposed for membership, to the undersigned at 938 Prospect Ave.

New York. L. A. VAN ZANDT, Secy.-Treas.

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of January 19 appeared an article signed Plover, comparing the three pointers Strideaway, Kent Elgin and Lad of Rush, which is one of the most interesting and instructive articles on subjects pertaining to dogs I have read for a long time. Although I have never before knocked for admission to your columns (though I weekly derive great pleasure from their perusal), I wish to thank the author and yourself for the facts so entertainingly and distinctly set forth. One article of this kind by an unprejudiced and experienced observer does more to place a breed or an individual in its proper light before the public, than columns of braggadocio and windy challenges from those whose only object is to boom a stud dog. I presume, of course, that Plover will be replied to in more or less emphatic and accurate articles, from the owners and admirers of the different animals he describes, but I have no doubt that he will be amply able—armed as he is with such an array of facts—to maintain the position at which he has so logically arrived. I hope to read in the near future many more articles from the pen of so gifted a writer, and hereafter when I hear the mellow whistle on the upland I shall say, "hurrah for Plover!"

Brooklyn, N. Y. C. N. W.

ANYONE who has perchance forgotten the date of closing of entries for the New York show can always find it by referring to the Westminster Kennel Club's advertisement in our business columns. The date is not now far distant, and exhibitors will soon have to make up their minds what to enter. It is no use after the show is over to say, "If I had entered Jumbo he would have been in the money sure, and might have been first." The thing to do is to enter Jumbo and give him a chance; we all know that a "New York win" is more highly prized than any other (unless it be a Chicago blue ribbon), and usually a third or fourth at Madison Square Garden is a higher indication of merit than a first at a small show. Then there are the kennel prizes; for every breed a kennel prize of $20 is offered, so exhibitors may well be liberal in the matter of entries. We regret to hear that Mr. Jas. Mortimer has been laid up with an attack of the grip, and no doubt he will appreciate it if entries are sent in promptly instead of nearly all being crowded into the last day or two.

IN an obituary notice of Result and Regent, two famous fox terriers, our English cotemporary the Stock-Keeper tells of a tremendous blunder made some years ago in connection with an offer from the present President of the A. K. C. for Result, and we cannot help wondering "what if the offer had been accepted?" At the Ryde show in 1889 Result was placed second to his daughter Rachel by Mr. Vicary. It was the first time for many shows that Result had had his colors lowered, but this only added glory to his successes, for it established the fact that he was able to produce stock equal to himself. "Among the visitors at this show," says the Stock-Keeper, "was Mr. A. Belmont, of New York, who desired to take Result back with him to the States. After leaving the show Mr. Belmont wired to Mr. G. Hopkins to treat for Result, and to offer '1,000' for him. This '1,000' was intended by Mr. Belmont to mean dollars, but Mr. Hopkins offered £1,000, and that was declined by Messrs. Clarke, who refused to part with Result at any price, and as a consequence his victorious daughter went to America."

IN the case of Mercer vs. Mills for libel the charge was that the characterization of Mr. Mercer's act as a fraud by Dr. Mills in his presidential address before the C. K. C. in 1893, in entering Mr. Jos. L. Little's Clumber spaniel, at the Ottawa show of 1891, without the owner's knowledge and consent, by which the classes were divided and an additional prize won by Mercer, was libelous. When the case came up for trial, a year ago, Chief Justice Armour threw out the case, but a second trial was granted on the ground that it should have gone to the jury. The case has been again tried in Ottawa, Canada, before Chancellor Boyd. Mr. Little was present and testified. The case was fully gone into and able counsel employed. The judge charged against the plaintiff, and after a short deliberation the jury rendered a verdict for the defendant, which the court accepted with costs against the plaintiff. The judge stated that the whole case turned on whether Mr. Mercer's act was a fraud or not. And so ends this case.

WE have been expecting it for the past few weeks, and here it is: "I beg to advise you that we shall hold our eleventh annual dog show in Mechanics' Hall, Boston, April 16, 17, 18 and 19." This from Mr. D. E. Loveland, secretary of the New England Kennel Club. Now we should like to hear similar news from Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Washington, Columbus, Louisville, St. Louis, Omaha, and half a dozen other wide-awake up-to-date cities. It's no use talking, a place that does not sport an annual dog show nowadays need not try to be a first-class town; as the New York man said, "why, even Chicago can do that." Joking apart, there is a whole month between the Denver and Boston dates, and it ought to be utilized.

THE Pittsburg Athletic Club is very much in evidence just at present, as it has announced its intention to apply for membership in the American Kennel Club if the Duquesne Kennel Club does not decide before next Friday whether it will give a show or not this year. If the Duquesne Kennel Club will not give a show then the P. A. C. will, and wants it to be held under A. K. C. rules, and will hold it this coming Spring. The P. A. C. does not want to conflict with the D. K. C. and therefore has given the latter club till February 1 to decide, which we hope it will do, as some good Spring dates are still open.

A MEETING of the executive committee of the Canadian Kennel Club will be held at the Queen's Hotel, Toronto, on Friday, February 8, at 3 p. m., and it is of the utmost importance that a full attendance be present. The business to come up will consist of: (1) Agreement pending with the American Kennel Club. (2) To receive the auditor's report. (3) To receive new members. (4) Miscellaneous business. Members are requested to make a special effort to be present, and we hope they will respond to the urgent call sent out.

MAJOR J. W. RENFROE, president of the Southern Field Trial Club, has returned to his home, Atlanta, Ga., after an absence of fourteen months at Tacoma, Wash., where he is a government officer. He will remain until after the Southern trials, when he will return to Tacoma. He is much pleased with the Northwest. He expects to return to Atlanta next Winter to attend the exposition and the dog show.

MR. THOS. H. WEBB of Peoria, Ill., has sold, through his advertisement in the AMERICAN FIELD, his fine bulldog, Webb's Monarch, to Mr. Jno. E. Jewett of Buffalo, N. Y., who purchased him as a present for his father, Hon. Edgar B. Jewett, mayor of Buffalo, for a house companion. Monarch is a well-bred dog, combining the blood of Champion British Monarch and Champion Rustic King.

To replace my beagle Ilwaco, which I lost by hanging last Fall, I have bought from the Hornell-Harmony Kennel Royal Dick (35179), a 12¼-inches dog by Royal Krueger—Baby W. Dick is a credit to his breeding, and won second in the 13-inches class at the Northwestern beagle trials in 1894.

Oshkosh, Wis. G. A. BUCKSTAFF.

As Major J. R. Purcell might think it a little to wait until after the U. S. trials to run [illegible] and Lady Margaret match, I have written [illegible] that I would run him any day during the [illegible] any time that the judges would not need [illegible] hours.

Hickory Valley, Tenn. [illegible]

WE have a fox terrier bitch named Hotfoot Sis (31069) which we bought from Mr. I. Shoenthal of Orange, N. J. The name is now claimed by Mr. William Cober, Kenosha, Wis. Mr. Shoenthal had her registered last July, and we therefore claim the name.

West Orange, N. J. LLEWELLIN PARK KENNEL.

I AM in receipt of one hundred and fifty dollars from Mr. J. M. Avent, as forfeit money to bind a match between his English setter Chevalier and Major J. R. Purcell's pointer bitch Lady Margaret; said match to be run at West Point, Miss., immediately after the conclusion of the trials of the U. S. F. T. Club.

Indianapolis, Ind. P. T. MADISON.

THERE is nothing slow about the Portland, Ore., fanciers; it appears they have "Spanish" poodles, "Spanish" pugs and "English Derbys" out there. If new varieties are going to come swarming in like that the fame of the Boston terrier will soon be eclipsed.

THE sportsmen of Atlanta, Ga., are agitating the subject of holding a bench show in connection with the Great Exposition which will open in that city September 1, and from the interest already shown in the matter a show may be looked forward to.

KENT ELGIN, the celebrated pointer, is dead. The particulars to hand are very meager, a telegram, which arrives just as we go to press, merely says: "Kent Elgin was received at Birmingham Saturday at half-past one, and died that night very suddenly."

MR. E. T. WEIANT, secretary of the Western Kennel Club Company, informs us that Mr. I. Bremer of New York has donated as a special prize at the Denver show a handsome collar for the best Colorado bred and reared rough-coated St. Bernard dog.

APPLICATION for active membership in the New England Kennel Club has been made on behalf of Mr. H. F. Church of Taunton, Mass., by Mr. J. Newman, seconded by Mr. D. E. Loveland.

MR. F. C. LOWE, one of Great Britain's foremost field trial supporters and brother of our Mr. H. C. Lowe of coursing fame, will judge the pointer classes at Cruft's great show this year.

EXHIBITION and auction sale of paintings by the late J. M. Tracy. All sportsmen know Tracy's paintings. No American painter excelled or even equaled him in depicting animated sporting sketches, or in faithful pictures of dogs, horses and other animals. Prints of Mr. Tracy's pictures are very plentiful, but the coming sale is the largest collection of his original works ever shown together. Abont 150 of his best and most characteristic paintings will be on exhibition from Monday, February 18, until Thursday, February 21, at J. B. Norman's auction rooms, 238 Fifth Avenue, New York, and the sale will take place on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, February 20 and 21.

FIXTURES

Aberdeen Coursing Club's first meeting, Aberdeen, S. D., first week of April. J. H. Davis, secretary.

North Dakota Coursing Club's second annual Spring meeting, Oakes, N. D., second week of April. A. P. Slocum, secretary.

American Waterloo Cup meeting (first), Huron, S. D., October 8, etc. F. B. Coyne, secretary, American Coursing Club.

Altcar Coursing Club's third annual meeting, ——, October 15, etc. Entries for Altcar Produce Stakes close March 1. T. W. Bartels, secretary.

Kenmore Coursing Club's third annual meeting, ——, October 22, etc. C. F. Weber, secretary.

Cheyenne Coursing Club's first meeting, Great Bend, Kan., October 29, etc. Ira D. Brougher, secretary.

WE are glad to hear from Mr. A. P. Slocum that the North Dakota Coursing Club will hold its second annual Spring meeting during the second week in April; and he promises to notify us at an early date as to judge and slipper. That the Aberdeen Coursing Club will hold a meeting about the same time is also welcome news. Of course, we have no idea at present how large these will be, but if they are likely to be about the same as the meetings in the Dakotas last Spring, we would suggest that a whole week should not be devoted to each meeting. Whichever meeting is held first might commence on Wednesday, and the other meeting on Monday of the following week; this would give ample time (Saturday and Sunday) between meetings, for Oakes and Aberdeen are only some fifty or sixty miles apart. While on the topic of the time between meetings we might refer to another case, but an opposite one. For some weeks the initial of the Altcar Club's [illegible]red in our "Fixtures" as October [illegible]esday of the week following [illegible]p meeting, and it struck us as [illegible]tes; but a few weeks ago the [illegible]cutive committee, called our attention to the fact that October 16 was wrong and asked that we change the date in our "Fixtures" to October 15, which we did. The reason why we thought October 16 a good day for the Altcar Club's meeting to commence on is that more than the usual allowance of time is necessary between a meeting held in South Dakota and one held in western Kansas or Colorado. No one who has not made the journey from Huron to Goodland knows how wearisome and tiring it is to men and greyhounds; for the former it does not matter so much, but on the latter it is particularly hard, and they need a thorough rest and a chance to freshen up after such a railway journey. Should the meeting at Huron, which will begin on a Tuesday, not be concluded in three days it will be impossible to leave before Saturday morning, which means arriving at Goodland, or some such western point, in the sma' wee hours of Monday morning, and greyhounds that have made the trip should not be asked to go to slips on the Tuesday. We hope the committee of the Altcar Club will take this under consideration and see whether their meeting cannot just as well be commenced on October 16. There is no reason on earth why meetings must begin on a Tuesday, and if the Altcar Club's next meeting is run through as smartly as the last was there will be time enough, should it begin on Wednesday, to get on to the meeting following.

ALTHOUGH Mr. Luse is giving up his kennel, which is offered for sale in our advertising columns, he will, in a measure, continue to take an interest in coursing, and many will be glad to know that the Cheyenne Coursing Club is not to suffer from his retirement as an active courser. He always undertook a big share of the preliminary work for the meetings at Great Bend, and no doubt he will again lend a hand when the time comes. Knowing that he was the chief factor in organizing the new club and thinking his withdrawal, even though temporary, might mean the projected meeting's abandonment, we wrote him anent the matter and in reply received a few interesting lines, as follows: "Business will necessitate my being away from home during the Summer, and the coursing season is just when I should be looking after my collections; also my experience is that unless one does his own training he will get left. When I say I am going to retire from the coursing field I don't mean that I won't witness some of the sport, but on the contrary would expect to witness a meet or two. And as for the Cheyenne Club, it will go ahead just the same; and I will also continue my assistance as far as possible to the other clubs. I have been having some fine sport with the coyotes lately, but unfortunately I lost two of my dogs while out just after a big snowstorm. Living Yet was one of them; and it was the strangest thing I ever heard of. In the first place the jack-rabbits were just like a drove of sheep where we were hunting, and there was not one minute during the day but what there were from one to fifty hares in sight of the greyhounds. Of course we had to lead the dogs on horseback, and I don't know what killed the two unless death was caused by nervous prostration. They did not run a hare during the day."

WE are very sorry to hear that Dr. J. M. Norman has lost all but three of his imp. Babazoun—Princess Marie (imp. Dingwall—imp. Miss Kitten) saplings from distemper, for we know he thought the world of them and was counting on being well represented by them in puppy stakes next season. It is all the more discouraging because two out of the three remaining have to go to Messrs. J. H. Le Moyne and Chas. Barrow, leaving the Doctor only one. Let us hope that one will prove a greyhound of the highest class. Princess Marie, herself, seems to be going great guns, judging from a letter from Dr. Norman, in which he tells us how she recently showed her heels to three or four others at one of the weekly outings of the Denver sportsmen; and he concludes his letter with: "We had put our dogs in our buggies for home and we were hitting the road at a 2:40 gait, when McGibbon, who was horseback, raised a hare while he was going in a swinging gallop. Marie jumped out of the buggy, falling head over heels, and got up with her head in the opposite direction from the hare; in the meantime it was at least two hundred and fifty yards away, going like a demon with McGibbon after it as fast as his mare could carry him. Nevertheless, the little bitch, single-handed, overtook it, made several drives to kill, and forced the gentleman into a hole. Now don't you think her quite good? She never quits while the game is in sight, and the greyhound that leads her at the end of the course has not run with her yet." From what we saw of her at Goodland eleven months ago we always did think she was quite good, and have felt sorry that she was retired as a brood bitch so early in life.

TRALES turned up last Monday (January 14). He was brought into town by three or four cowboys who live sixteen to eighteen miles southeast of here. He had lost twenty-two pounds in weight during his absence of six weeks, and from all I can learn he has been secreted or held for a reward. All I could find out from the parties that he came in with was that he "just came to them." They tried to appear very ignorant of the affair and seemed very much surprised to know that they had a stolen dog in their possession. All but one of them kept out of my sight and he had very little to say about it. They are all on the tough order and none too good to hold a dog in hope of receiving a reward.

Guthrie, O. T. ED. H. LYON.

WE have been favored with clippings from a couple of St. Louis daily papers, telling of the prowess of a young black bitch named Diana; she may be an uncommonly good greyhound, there is no telling, for she is one of Mr. Lowe's famous Lord Neversettle—White Lips cross, but if so it will be a pity should she never get a chance to show her mettle anywhere except in the "park" at Brentwood. Diana belongs to Mr. Chas. Robinson—who during the past twelve months must have bought more greyhounds than any two men in the country—so there is reason to hope she may be seen at some of the open meetings next Autumn.

DURING the past two weeks we have had several opportunities to talk with Mr. Edward F. Dent, son of the famous Northumberland trainer, about coursing matters in England, though it is over a year since he left the land of his birth. Mr. Dent Jr. has been trying his hand at cattle ranching in Texas, but, coming to the conclusion that it is "not what it is cracked up to be," determined not to continue the exchange of cash for experience, and is now on his way to the Old Country, after spending a fortnight in Chicago, a few days in Philadelphia and a week in New York.

KINDLY announce that a Spring meeting of the Aberdeen Coursing Club, of Aberdeen, S. D., will be held "early in April." We are unable at this time to mention exact dates, but have fixed upon Tuesday, April 2, and following days, provided we can get a judge for these dates. We are anxious to get this matter before the public as soon as possible, hence ask you to announce our meeting in the above manner until we can furnish you exact dates, which we can probably do before your next issue.

Aberdeen, S. D. J. H. DAVIS, Secy.

EVERYONE will be pleased to hear that Mr. Lyon has got old Trales back safe and sound; he certainly deserved to after the vigorous manner in which he followed the matter up.

GREYHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by Mr. W. S. Phillips, Jeanette, Pa.

A MUCH DISCUSSED QUESTION

BY ARMIN TENNER

Does a projectile—elongated lead bullet—when fired perpendicularly into the air and up to a distance of 2,000 or 3,000 yards, at the moment of returning to and striking the ground possess the same velocity or force at impact as imparted to it upon quitting the muzzle of the gun?

This question is frequently asked and has recently been extensively discussed among students and sportsmen. It has also been submitted to the American Testing Institution by various parties, and considering that the question involves a general interest, I have concluded to answer it through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD.

The question must be treated from a theoretical and also a practical point of view, and by pursuing such a course we find, as it is often the case, that theory and practice do not agree. According to the laws governing a free falling body the latter will, during the first second of its travel, drop a distance of 4.9044 meters, and owing the acceleration, it will double its velocity during the next second, i. e. drop 9.8088 meters.

To drop a distance of 2,000 meters the body would consume a time equal to 20.2 seconds, and applying now the formula as, for instance, laid down by G. Koch, namely, $v = \sqrt{2\text{-}g\text{-}s} = \sqrt{2\text{-}9\text{-}_{8088}, 2{,}000} = 198.8$, it would have a terminal velocity of 198.8 meters upon touching the ground.

Following the laws pertaining to a free falling body in a vacuum, a bullet shot perpendicularly into the air would return to the muzzle of the gun or ground at the same rate of speed or velocity, and with the same penetrative force as imparted to it at the moment of leaving the muzzle. In other words, the projectile would, in such a case, continue to rise until its own weight and its velocity would neutralize each other. Koch illustrates this fact by the following formula, in which v stands for velocity, g for the acceleration of the falling motion through gravity in one second, and t for the number of seconds of the time of flight looked for.

The projectile would reach its highest point when $v = g.t$, therefore after $t = y \div g$ seconds, its distance from the muzzle after t_1 seconds is $v.t_1 - g \div 2 = t_1 2$. Considering this value equal to 0 gives the number of seconds after which the bullet has again returned to the muzzle: $t_1 = 2v \div g$. The bullet therefore consumes in returning $v \div g$ seconds; its rising point is $v2 \div 2g$; its terminal velocity upon its return v, or equal to its initial velocity. This is the theoretical side of the question. When we come down to practice matters assume quite a different aspect, because here we must take into consideration also the resistance of the air as an obstructive factor in both directions of travel.

On account of the resistance offered to the bullet it cannot rise sufficiently high in order to regain in returning by way of its accelerated motion its original velocity or force at impact. Practical experiments did and will demonstrate that, for instance, a spherical bullet fired perpendicularly up into the air returns to the ground with a comparatively low velocity, and that it will not penetrate a one-inch pine board; for the simple reason that it did not reach a point 2,000 meters high; for if it had, it ought to have regained in falling a much greater penetrative force.

It has been shown that the terminal velocity of a free falling body and dropping 2,000 meters is 198.8 meters. The initial velocity of a modern military rifle bullet is—taking the French Lebel rifle as an example—632 meters. A bullet imparted with such a velocity will travel a distance of 2,000 meters in about 7.834 seconds; its terminal velocity is 160 meters; whereas a bullet falling the same distance will consume 20.2 seconds, and its terminal velocity is 198.8 meters only. Its force at impact when touching the ground is very much less than that imparted to it at the moment of leaving the muzzle of the gun. The question as put must, therefore, be answered in the negative.

NOTES

THE New Orleans (La.) Rifle League held its annual meeting for the election of officers and the transaction of other important business on the evening of January 15, the following clubs being represented by one or more delegates: Arnoults, Southerns, Expectations, Eagles, Eurekas and Unexpecteds. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the selection of the following gentlemen: President, Wm. North, of the Arnoults; vice-president, S. E. Pelayo, of the Unexpecteds; recording secretary, H. E. La Clerc, of the Expectations; financial secretary, J. A. Bourge, of the Southerns; treasurer, R. H. Lytle, of the Arnoults. Later in the evening after the business of the league had been completed, refreshments were served, President Loret of the American Club officiating as host and delivering the address of welcome.

RAPID CITY, S. D., and vicinity, like most Western towns, boasts of not a few good shots with the rifle, and as these men have no regular range to shoot over, they recently, in order to determine who in the town was the best long distance shot, prepared a target with a bullseye seven by nine inches and placed it 100 yards away. Turkeys, pigs and chickens were offered as prizes and some good shooting was witnessed. Not a few bullseyes were made by different participants, and great sport was had, and when the shooting ended and the wins were counted up, the honors of the day were accorded to Charles S. Hunt, he having won more first prizes for the number of shots fired than any other man on the ground.

THE executive board of the Western Sharpshooters' Union held a meeting a few days since in Milwaukee, Wis., the home of President John Meunier, at which the following branches of the society were represented: North Chicago Schuetzen Verein, Peru Schuetzen Verein, Omaha, Milwaukee, Joliet, Davenport, Chicago Sharpshooters' Society, and Cincinnati Rifle Association. It was decided at this meeting to hold the next festival of the union in Milwaukee, and although the date for same was not set it is thought that it will take place during the latter part of July.

THE Lady Miller Rifle Club in a contest at Hoboken, N. J., recently for medals, made the following scores: Miss Volk 226, Miss Mamie Miller 225, Mrs. Wilson 222, Miss J. Wilson 210, Miss Kloepping 219, Miss Engel 210, Miss Casey 214, Miss Gaw 214, Miss Yourman 216, Mrs. Frame 213, Miss Harener "rest," 222. Miss Miller, Mrs. Volk and Mrs. Wilson were the winners in the three classes.

IN the first telegraphic match between the Missouri Rifle and Pistol Club of St. Louis, Mo., and the Columbia Rifle and Pistol Club of Rochester, N. Y., the scores were: St. Louis 4,371 points, Rochester 4,105 points, the first named club winning the match by 266 points.

PISTOL SHOOTING

THE WASHINGTON GUN CLUB

WASHINOTON, D. C.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Perhaps the readers of your journal think we have not a gun club in Washington, D. C. Well, we have, just a few, in this glorious city of taxation, absurd, experimental and contradictory laws and disfranchisement. We have a club of about sixty members, representing hundreds of thousands of dollsrs in the aggregated wealth of its members, and although the readers of the AMERICAN FIELD seldom or never hear about us, we are still in the ring.

Target shooting does not enthuse us here very much. We have tried all the angles of shooting, all the divisions of the money, McMurchy and other systems. One fellow who was cashier tried to start a system of returning the high guns their entrance fee and keeping the balance for his part of the work. It is needless to say that one experiment of that kind was sufficient. Still we do not seem to take to targets. We have a few enthusiasts who engage in the pastime of shooting live pigeons. The S. P. C. A. compels us to desert our club grounds and we emigrate to Virginia. The boys with the big roll are the faithful ones. When the fever is on, heat or cold does not stop them. Occasionally a knight of the road drops into town, and then, of course, traps are out, birds are gathered up, and they are off to old Virginia. We have had as our guests such genial companions as Du Bray, Parks, Bartlett, Bond and others.

When live bird "Jimmy" gets the right leg of his trousers rolled up, displaying a calf that Sullivan or Corbett might envy; old reliable "Billy," with two left boots on; big-hearted "Henry," from whose prauks and jokes no one escapes; our sedate "funeral director," whom the aforesaid "Henry" takes special delight in raising the devil with, such as challenging Dick's load and produeing from his cartridge box a 4-gauge shell; our genial friend "DeWitt," who keeps them looking to their laurels lest he gather in all the ducats and glory; Joe Hunter, a fit running mate for "Henry," and our worthy president, who uses so much diplomacy in killing as well as in missing them, and all the other boys who have no particular fad except to enjoy themselves, get together, then we have a jolly crowd that defies wind and weather.

During the year 1894 we had twenty-two live bird shoots, requiring nearly 3,600 to fill the traps. We have very good grounds, and when we get possession of them we will improve them to our liking. Below you will find the score of almost all the shoots. One or two of the early scores were lost in the shuffle, but later on the "purveyor" retained all scores for reference.

"OLD BAD LUCK."

THE KNOXVILLE GUN CLUB

KNOXVILLE, TENN.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The fourteenth annual meeting of the Knoxville Gun Club was held on December 29, 1894, for the transaction of general business and the election of officers. The old officers of the club were unanimously re-elected for the year 1895, as follows: President, S. B. Dow; vice-president, T. C. Eldridge; captain, S. Van Gilder; treasurer, J. C. White; secretary, R. Van Gilder.

The report of the secretary for the year 1894 was read and approved. It was the consensus opinion of the members present that the Knoxville Gun Club received and disbursed more c[illegible] any other gun club in the country. It is a well conceded [illegible] the club is the "livest" club in the country and has [illegible] the past to elevate and build up the great sport of [illegible] than any other gun club.

What club was it that four years ago started [illegible] scheme, with $500 in 1892, then $1,000 in 1893, then [illegible] then $1,500 in 1895, or a grand total of $1,000 in [illegible] let other clubs show up their records and see wh[illegible] where they ought to be at. We wonder if de[illegible] turers fully appeciate the past efforts of this c[illegible] We know—we are glad to say—that the vast co[illegible] gentlemen who attend our meetings are pleased and happy beyond question with our endeavors to give them a shoot that is equaled by none (they all say so, so do not get angry, my fellow shootists), a shoot that one can attend and be treated as a gentleman and where dropping for place (the agitating question of the day) is known but by few.

Now, to the dealers and manufacturers we say, we are going to give them a chance soou to see how liberal they can be toward advancing the cause, and say by their —— how they appreciate the club's past and present efforts, backed up for May, 1895, by over one hundred of the representative shooters of this country. Dealers and manufacturers, friends of the club, come to the aid of a club that has put thousands of dollars in your pockets by increased sales of ammunition, etc.! We are glad to note in the past a few liberal friends, but this season of 1895 the club wants the largest meeting ever held in this country. The scheme, you say? The club adds $1,500; one hundred men will give $10 each, making $1,000, and all we ask is for the manufacturers to subscribe the small sum of $500, making a grand total of $3,000 added money.

Our friends, the shooters, what say you? Do you not think you are entitled to some consideration? Our friends, the dealers and manufacturers, what say you? Will it not be money well spent for the good will of one hundred and over representative men of this country?

Now, I know that such an appeal will not go unnoted by one and all, because the time is ripe and the cause just for the best meeting ever given by any club, as our club has the entire confidence of the shooting fraternity at large and the credit of knowing how to run a tournament conducted upon business principles.

The Knoxville Gun Club was the only club, for years, that had "the sand" to add $1,000 cash. When other clubs saw our success, and consulted our methods, both financially and in point of attendance, they commenced in 1894 to "go and do likewise," and this season, 1895, see what good results are being daily brought to light. The Knoxville Gun Club has reason to be proud of such direct results, combined with the aid of all friends throughout the whole Union—as the shooters themselves make or mar the pleasures and success of any tournament—we are certainly very appreciative of the efforts of our friends, and beg right here to say: Boys, May, 1895, will be a daisy. Already seventy-four names are enrolled on the $10 list, payable March 1, 1895 (to be sent to R. Van Gilder, secretary). All who want to be on that list and for $10 desire to be able to participate in a $3,000 shoot had better hustle along right quick, as no one will be allowed to contest who is not down or who has not paid his $10. This is final. Boys, you know what that means so do not delay the game. But to other matters pertaining to the club. The accompanying table is self-explanatory.

January, 1894, the club decided to hold weekly shoots and issue a certificate of merit to the highest score made, the member holding at the end of the year the greatest number of certificates to be winner of $50 given by the club. Any holder of a certificate could be challenged by any other certificate owner upon depositing a fee of 50 cents for second and third prizes. This plan has done more to create rivalry and interest than any yet devised. Upon examination of table we find the following winners: Jno. W. Conner, first prize, $50, holding 25 certificates; R. Van Gilder, second prize, $35, holding 22 certificates; A. E. Mead, third prize, $6, holding 5 certificates. The fight for first place was close between Messrs. Conner and Van Gilder, Van Gilder holding up to the last two shoot twenty-five certificates to Conner's eighteen. Mr. Conner, by magnificent shooting, making 216 out of 225, won seven certificates and on challenges reduced Van Gilder to twenty-three to his twenty-five, which, with only one other week to shoot, virtually gave him the match, amid much excitement and applause. Such shooting form is rarely shown. But "Old (?) Uncle Billy Wagner's" celebrated loaded shells—the Leader—and E. C. powder did the work, as, of course, the man who "p'inted" the gun had nothing to do with the case.

A further examination of the table shows that A. E. Mead has developed some (?) speed shooting his new Parker, Sir Jos. Whitworth fluid steel gun, as the table shows his per cent. is highest for the number of his wins. A further examination shows that Conner and Van Gilder shot at 1,925 targets and averaged 94.16 per cent., a pretty fair average for any two amateurs; and Mead comes along with 650 targets averaging 95.91, or making the three men shooting at 2,575 targets average for the three 94.75. What club can show up to this bona-fide record? All the boys who have shot at our targets, as thrown, know they are screamers. Ask them. A further examination of the table shows the popularity of a justly popular gun—the L. C. Smith—while Mead's increased skill shows that the new Parker pigeon gun is one to be depended upon as a deadly shooter. As to powder, E. C. was strictly "in it;" as it was the only common factory to the three winners of all the certificates, we might ask, was it the old reliable E. C. that did it? A casual glance will show that the Winchester, Blue Rival and Leader are the [illegible] Why? Well, just guess.

Thus I bring to a close a short resume of the Knoxv[illegible] for the year '94, and I hope others will follow our exa[illegible] all the boys see what they are doing to build up the gre[illegible] trap shooting. We all love to read about what our frien[illegible]

ing and the ever obliging editor of the shooters' best companion, the AMERICAN FIELD, is ever ready, we are told, to publish all that interests his patrons.

R. VAN GILDER, Secretary.

NOTES

[illegible] in this section to usher in the New Year [illegible] dal shoot of the Independent Gun Club [illegible] re invitations had been sent out to friends [illegible] to partake of a feast such as only our Bart [illegible] of Fritz Bub can prepare. The latter's name is a guar[illegible] mething good, and if anyone ever wants to taste a bouillion that would bring a dead man back to this vale of tears, Fritz is the boy that can make it. And such a soup as we had New Year's Day was worth going miles to taste. It makes me smack my lips even now. Then the venison and coon and rabbits stewed and baked, done just to a turn, were a feast fit for the kings. After dinner came the medal shoot, O. Heineman winning first, while John Loos, August Thebus and Al Blome tied for second medal. The following day we had our annual election of officers when the following gentlemen were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mr. Val Holm; vice-president, Otto Heineman; secretary, F. E. Winkler; treasurer, C. M. Glaser; custodian, Edgar F. Glaser; first field captain, B. M. Baldwin; second field captain, John Loos; executive board, Charles Krebs, Ed. Leopold, Aug. Thebus, Val Holm, Ed. F. Winkler and C. M. Glaser. I was sorry to note that so few of our St. Louis friends answered to the call. In fact they had but one representative, Mr. Joe Lenhardt. Jolly good natured Joe, he always has a place in the hearts of Belleville shooters, and our latchstring is always out for him.

Belleville, Ill. ELKIE.

AT the time our team won the state trophy from the Lansiug Rod and Gun Club, of Lansing, Mich., the latter club arranged a regular program of extra events. In one of these they offered as first prize a silver cup, which I won on a score of 25 straight. Mr. J. E. Nichols said he would have the cup suitably engraved and send it to me, but since that time, August 22, 1894, I have not heard anything regarding the cup. Although I have written several letters, to none of them have I been accorded the courtesy of an answer. Now I care uothing for the intrinsic value of the cup, but having won it fairly in a very hot contest, I wish to ask the members of the Lansing Rod and Gun Club, through the AMERICAN FIELD, to give their reasous for withholding it.

Battle Creek, Mich. ED. HALLADAY.

THE fourth annual meeting of the Lancaster (O.) Gun Club was held recently, when prizes were awarded for 1894 and officers elected for the ensuiug year. The officers elected were: President, Frank Miller; vice-president, James McManamy; secretary and treasurer, Dr. C. W. Outcalt; captain, H. R. Boving; directors, C. Cannon and W. B. Cox. A committee composed of E. P. Boyer, J. McManamy and W. B. Cox was appointed to make arrangements for an outing the coming Summer to be held at some point on the lakes. J. F. Cherry, with 93 per cent., was awarded the prize in Class A, while Frank Miller secured the B Class prize with 74 2-5 per ceut. After the meeting the trophy winners footed the bill for a splendid dinner for the entire club.

AT the annual meeting of the Audubon Gun Club, held on Thursday, January 10, the club decided to hold its regular monthly club shoots for a prize to become the property of the winner at each shoot, as was doue the past year, and in addition to these monthly prizes the management donated two fine prizes for first and second best average scores in the year's contests. The membership of this, the leading trap club of Chicago, is now full. The regular shoots of the club take place on the third Wednesday of each month.

Chicago. W. L. SHEPARD, Secy.

PRESIDENT W. L. SHEPARD of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association has selected his board of directors for 1895, and the officers of the club now stand as follows: President, W. L. Shepard; first vice-president, W. J. Edbrooke: second vice-president, U. J. Hludert; secretary-treasurer, H. B. Meyers; board of directors, R. B. Organ, chairman, L. M. Hamliue, A. C. Paterson, Abner Price and C. S. Wilcox; law committee, W. N. Low, chairman, Frank A. Johnson and R. S. Mott. Correspondence and other business connected with the association should be addressed to the secretary to insure prompt atteution.

MR. CHARLES COCKBURN of Toronto, Can., who shot a 50-bird match with Capt. J. L. Brewer of New York, at Hamilton, Ont., last week and who was beaten by just one bird, protested against the match or the stakes being given to Capt. Brewer, on the ground that he (Brewer) had used more shot than the rules under which the match was shot allowed. On examining some of the Captain's shells the referce found them to contain 1½ ounces of shot by weight, instead of 1¼ ounces, and reserved his decision, while the stakeholder held onto the stakes.

THE Allenville Gun Club's club house at Canton, Mo., was recently destroyed by fire caused by an overheated stove in the abseuce of members who were hunting in the woods adjacent thereto. Loss about $500. Most of the members of the club are residents of St. Louis.

THE Maplewood Gun Club of Maplewood, N. J., will hold an all-day tournament on Washington's Birthday, February 22. Programs will be issued and mailed to all trap shooters in the vicinity of Maplewood iu a few days.

ON Wednesday afternoon of this week, Mr. E. D. Fulford of Utica, N. Y., was to attempt to kill forty-five out of fifty of Frauk Class' birds at the Morristowu Driving Park, on a wager of $100. Class backs the birds.

THE Fremont (O.) Gun Club has consolidated with the Christy Gun Club of the same place under the name of the latter club, the consolidation making a membership to the Christy club of about forty.

THE Phœnix Gun Club has just entered on the third year of its existence, and its members rejoice to know that it is in a very prosperous condition.

Phœnix, Arizona. B. M. GREGORY, Secy.

MR. FREDERICK G. MOORE, a prominent New York trap shooter has resigned his membership in the Carteret Gun Club of that city.

THE Rochester Field Club will hold an all-day shoot upon its grounds at Rochester, Pa., on February 16.

THE HAMILTON TOURNAMENT

HAMILTON, ONT.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—This is the day preceding the first day of the annual tournament of the Hamilton Gun Club. Already the shooters are beginning to arrive from all parts of Canada and the United States. All of the American cracks are here, and Canada is not far behind in her supply of the above. The big $700 guaranteed purse and stake race is the drawing card. There is also a prospect of some of the cracks coming together in a match of some kind. This helps to increase the attendance somewhat. Walking around to the different hotels I ran across Chas. Wilmot, Port Hope; J. Geddings, American consul at Port Hope; E Andrews, Saldinia, N. Y.; D. Miller, Woodstock; J. Parker, Detroit, Mich.; Geo. Briggs, Toronto; H. McMurchy, Fulton, N. Y.; J. L. Brewer, New York; T. W. Morfey, Paterson, N. J.; E. Carleton, Clinton; A. J. Bright, Seaforth; Capt. Money, Oakland, N. J.; J. Wheeler, Paris; J. A. R. Elliott, Kansas City, Mo.; A. P. Pope, Oleau, N. Y.; H. Bates, Ridgetown; Dr. Harrison, St. Catherines, Ont.; George Mosher, Syracuse, N. Y.; E. D. Fulford, Utica, N. Y.; D. A. Upson, Cleveland, O.; F. Van Dyke, New York; J. Wayper, Hespeler; H. R. Sweeny, Albany, N. Y.; R. O. Heikes, Dayton, O.; E. H. Rounds, Buffalo, N. Y., C. "Cox" (Cockburn), Toronto; Sydney Fairburn, Minnedosa, Minn.; M. Mayhew, Utica, N. Y.; Dr. Blackall, Clinton, Ont.; T. H. Robinson, Toronto; F. Baxter, St. Catherines; H. Eddy, Scotland, Ont.; [illegible]ey, Syracuse, N. Y.; M. D. Camp[illegible] Ont.; and J. S. Kirkwood, D. C. [illegible] John Crooks, W. Fitch, A. Smyth, [illegible]cher, C. Forsyth, H. Graham, John [illegible]etts, members of the Hamilton Gun

The weather is quite cold and there is lots of snow, but the arrangements on the grounds are quite complete and comfortable for the shooters. One set of live bird traps and one set of five target traps are to be used. This tournament is to be more of a live bird tournament than a target tournament, consequently the arrangements for running off the target events are not very complete. The birds here are always good and the man that kills straight is sure of some good money. All the live bird events are to be straight shooting, the high guns to take the money. This makes everybody shoot to the top.

Tuesday, the first day of shoot, opened up cold and cloudy, with occasional bursts of sunshine, making a very bad light on white birds. The birds to the different squads varied, some being veritable corkers and others duffers. E. D. Fulford was the only straight to-day. This event (the $700 guaranteed purse) will probably last all day to-morrow. A great many straights were made in the target events, and nobody was a winner to any extent.

Wednesday, the second day, it was clear and cold. The large event was finished to-day, with E. D. Fulford, J. A. R. Elliott and H. Bates straight. The scores below will show the results. The target events were run off the same as the day before. If the management had had sufficient help they could have thrown at least a thousand more targets than they did.

Thursday, the third day, was considerably warmer. The stake race was finished to-day with Rolla Heikes with his Winchester pump and John Stroud each 15 straight and $123 in their inside pockets. An extra sweep was shot, after the stake race. Target sweeps were kept going all day. Most of the shooters stayed over, as there were prospects of several matches being shot on the morrow. To-night the following matches were made: R. O. Heikes and Thos. W. Morfey, 50 birds a man, $50 a side; Kirkwood and Smith of Hamilton, 25 birds a man, $25 a side; Thos. W. Morfey and John Stroud, 25 birds a man, $25 a side, 15 yards boundary; John L. Brewer and C. Coburn, 50 birds a man, $50 a side, one barrel, 26 yards rise, gun below the elbow, H. and T. traps.

Friday morning. All the matches made last night were shot to-day. The scores below will show the results of all the shooting.

ITINERANT.

GLOVER VS. BREWER

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—For some time it has been known to a few people of local sporting knowledge that there had been some talk of a shooting match at live birds between our Mr. Sim Glover aud Capt. John L. Brewer. Finally, through the efforts of Mr. E. C. Meyers and H. M Stewart the match was arranged and took place on Monday, January 14, at the driviug park in this city. The day previous to the Monday on which the match occurred was a most disagreeable one, snowing hard and the wind blowing a perfect gale all day, interfering not only with street car traffic, but causing railroad trains to be laid off, and those which did run were many hours behind time. All this had a very depressiug effect upon the sportsmeu in this section, and not one thought any match would come off.

Monday opened up a dirty, disagreeable morning, and until 10 o'clock was about as unpleasant as could be imagined. Old Sol then put in an appearance, and though he looked as if peeping through cheese cloth managed to shed sufficient warmth to somewhat temper the weather and make it possible for the match to take place.

There was a strong wiud blowing across the traps, and it was so cold that the first few birds could scarcely fly, and no good birds were had until the crates were taken to a warm place, when they were much better. The birds were a fair lot and some of them remarkably swift flyers. I do not believe I can do better than to give the report of the match as it appeared in the Rochester Herald of January 15, as its reporter covered the whole ground pretty well, and here it is:

"Sim Glover, the small and popular trap shooter of the Rochester Rod aud Gun Club, covered himself with more glory yesterday wheu, in a match shoot with Capt. J. L. Brewer, who claims to be champion of the world, he scored 94 birds out of 100. His opponent's score was 90. All the members of the club are naturally elated over the work done by their representative.

"The doughty little shooter was at no time feazed by the fact that his antagonist has been on earth much longer than he and has won some of the highest honors in the world at trap shooting, winning, he claims, not only the world's championship, but the championship of Australia.

"In shooting at the 100 birds apportioned him Mr. Brewer had occasion to use his second barrel far more often than his antagonist. While Glover is only credited with killing 94 birds, there actually fell before his unerring aim 98. This would be remarkable work for the best of days, and for yesterday, considering the coldness of the weather and the bleak wind which was blowing, the record is something extraordinary. Of the birds killed by him four fell dead outside the boundary. As regards the number of birds killed by Capt. Brewer the same may be said, for he actually killed 95, five of them falling dead out of bounds.

"The methods pursued by the two men were quite different. As soon as the trap was sprung and the bird took wing Capt. Brewer in nearly every instance fired both barrels, killing only twenty-one birds with the first barrel. Glover, on the contrary, as a rule, gave his bird an opportunity to rise and obtain direction, then brought it down, doing it 49 times with the use of only one barrel.

"The match was shot under revised Hurlingham rules, 30 yards rise and 50 yards boundary, five unknown traps five yards apart.

Capt. Brewer won the toss for the first shot and got a bird from No. 1 trap. The bird flew low to the right quarter and was killed with the first barrel a few yards from the trap. Glover's first started from No. 5 trap and flew to the left quarter, low, requiring both barrels to kill it. Brewer's second was to the left quarter and low, while Glover's went to the right quarter. The birds for both in the third round flew to the right quarter. Brewer killed his fourth before it had risen two feet from the ground, while Glover's was most difficult, the bird, as soon as liberated, flying to the right quarter at a rapid pace. Brewer's next bird was a fast straightaway, while Glover's was an easy one to the left. The sixth and seventh birds were also easy for each man. But on the eighth bird each man had some work to do. Brewer's was a rapid incomer and Glover's went to the left quarter and then turned to the right before being brought down.

The first high bird to fly was Brewer's twelfth, a slate-colored pigeon. As soon as liberated it arose and flew high to the left quarter, being brought down fully 30 yards from the trap. Glover's thirteenth went high to the left and Brewer's fourteenth was a pretty incomer. Capt. Brewer had a hard shot on his sixtecnth bird, a left-quartering driver flying high.

Up to this time neither man had missed a bird. Glover went to the score to shoot his sixteenth bird. It started from the trap and sailed gracefully to the right and, although badly wounded by both barrels, it got outside and fell dead, giving the first miss to Glover, His next three birds were incomers and were all easily killed.

"Capt. Brewer missed his twenty-first bird. It was a fast-incomer and flew high and dropped dead out of bounds. His twenty-third he also lost, apparently not hitting it at all. It was an incomer and landed on the judges' stand, where it was captured by a crowd of jayhawkers such as usually infest such places. Glover's twenty first bird was a low left quarterer, and his twenty-eighth a low right quarterer. His twenty-ninth was a swift, low incomer, as were also his thirtieth and thirty-first. His thirty-fourth went straightaway, high and swift, and was a pretty shot. Capt. Brewer's twenty-seventh was a left-quartering driver which flew high. His thirty-fifth left the trap, flew to the right quarter and then circled around and was killed in the left quarter. His thirty-sixth was a swift and low incomer, as was also his forty-fourth. His fifty-fifth started for the left quarter and was killed in the right quarter.

"Up to the forty-seventh bird Glover had missed only one and had shot two strings, one of fifteen birds straight, the other of thirty birds. His forty-seveuth bird was a teaser. It was a low, swift incomer and he shot under it both times.

"Capt. Brewer had missed two birds in the first fifty-five. He also missed his fifty-sixth, which started from the trap toward the left, nearly straightaway, and making a circle it struck some electric light wires and fell dead seven feet out of bounds. His sixty-fourth fell dead out of bounds. While Capt. Brewer was falling behind in his score, Glover was killing his birds as fast as they took wing. Most of them were low and swift, aud when the sixty-eighth bird was reached the sport had become monotonous. His sixty-eighth kill was the prettiest of the day. As the trap was sprung he discovered that the safety on his gun was at 'safe.' The bird was one of the liveliest, and by the time the marksman had lowered his gun and pushed the safety catch forward the bird was at least th rty yards away. He brought the bird down, however, using both barrels, and was loudly applauded for the feat.

"Capt. Brewer, for some reason, missed his seventy-fifth, seventy-sixtb, seventy-seventh and seventy-eighth. The seventy-fifth and seventy-sixth were low drivers to the left, the seventy-seventh to the right, while the seventy-eighth was a high right quarterer circling to the left. He also missed his eighty-third, the bird falling dead out of bounds. His eighty-sixth was to the right, fast and low, and his eighty-eighth fell out of bounds to the right. His ninety-seventh was close to the grounds, a fast incomer.

"Glover had a fast and low to the right for his eighty-seventh. He missed his ninety-first, but this did not discourage his friends. His ninety-fifth was a left-quartering driver. He missed his ninety-seventh, which was low and to the right.

"When each man had fired his last shot the crowd gave three cheers for Rochester's champion, and Capt. Brewer at once challenged him to shoot another match, same rules to govern, for $100 a side, to take place on Monday, January 21. Forfeits were posted at once, and unless something unheard of turns up, the match will come off."

Previous to the match a couple of sweepstakes were shot, 5 birds, entrance $3, with following results:

No. 1.—Rickman 3, Norton 3, Myer 5, Glover 4.

No. 2.—Same as before: Stewart 5, Bartou 3, Skinner 4, Myer 4, Glover 5, Rickman 5, Norton 3. All ties divided.

It is understood that the day that Brewer and Glover shoot, Stewart and Myer will have a match at 50 live birds for $25 a side. This contest will excite considerable interest, as both men are popular and good shots and they will certainly kill some of their birds.

THE HELL GATE GUN CLUB'S RECORD

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—At a meeting of the Hell Gate Gun Club held last week at the hostelry of its efficient secretary, Mr. Eugene Doeinck, No. 1998 First Avenue, N. Y., all the officers of the previous year were unanimously reëlected for 1895. Owing to the distance from headquarters to the shooting ground of the past year—Lippach's Dexter Park—it was decided that the future shooting meetings take place more adjacent to Harlem. It is probable that a shooting ground at Astoria will be selected.

Mr. Lippach of Dexter Park has always treated the club properly, as he does every gun club of the many that shoot on his grounds, and several of the members doubt the advisability of changing, but the wish of the majority must be respected. Mr. Lippach has been supplying birds of a superior quality since he became the lessee of Dexter Park. Mr. J. A. R. Elliott, who has been shooting there a bit lately, will vouch for this.

The averages of the members of the club have been comparatively low the past year. This is another voucher for Lippach's drivers. The club contests for the year consisted of six live bird and Empire target contests each, shot in alternate months. The point handicap system governed these events and every member was handicapped according to his presumed ability. The result of this shows that it is a good system for marksmen of mediocre ability and no "soft thing" for the "sleepers." Thus it will be noted in the appended table that an average of 45 per cent. beat out an average of 95 per cent. for first prize in the inanimate target schedule. It was decided also that the target contests be eliminated from the schedule of this year and the shooting be confined to live birds only, on account of the lack of interest by the members in smashing the flying disks. Handicap rises also governed at live birds, 25 and 28 yards for 12-gauge guns, 27 and 30 yards for 10-gauges. Averages compiled on a basis of two or more shoots, 10 live birds per man each shoot, for eight prizes, are as follows:

Number of live birds shot at by club during year of six club shoots, 1,350; number killed 837; missed 513; average percentage killed .620; average attendance of members 22½ each contest.

Mr. Louis Miller, then proprietor of Dexter Park, contributed a prize valued at $25 for competition during the year, to be given to the member making the greatest number of first barrel kills. Mr. Eugene Doeinck won this prize, using his first barrel only on thirty-five of his forty-eight kills, J. H. Voss standing second with thirty-two out of forty-eight, and Weber and Thau following in order with thirty each out of forty-five and forty-nine respectively. Mr. Miller sold out his interest to the present efficient proprietor, Mr. Herman Lippack, in the latter part of the year, but presumably his offer stands good. Mr. Doeinck has not yet obtained this prize from Mr. Miller, although the last live bird shoot took place in November last. Mr. Doeinck has written Mr. Miller but the latter has not yet replied.

Following will be found the averages in the inanimate target contests for the same year, at 20 targets per man each club shoot.

	Points Handicap	Empires Shot at	Broken	Points Made	Percentage of Kill	Prize Won

Mr. J. H. Voss, who made the greatest number of points and won first prize in the live bird contests, used a Smith gun and Du Pont's Smokeless. Mr. H. Thau, winner of second, used the same make of gun and Walsrode powder. Mr. L. H. Schortemeier, with the high best average, used a Smith ejector gun and E. C. powder.

In the inanimate target contests the winner, Mr. P. Woelfel, used a Smith gun and Walsrode powder. Schortemeier, winner of second with the high average of 95 per cent., used his Parker gun as he always does at targets, with E. C. powder to push along the shot. The officers of the club for this year are: President, J. H. Voss; vice-president, F. Trostel; financial secretary, P. Woelfel; recording secretary, E. Doeinck; treasurer, C. Weber.

CLIMAX GUN CLUB

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The initial shoot and annual election of the Climax Gun Club for 1895 were held on the club's grounds at Fanwood on January 16. The day was one of the most disagreeable imaginable, a cold rain, which afterward turned into snow, keeping many away. The weather conditions, however, did not deter fifteen members from facing the score. The annual election followed the shooting, the following gentlemen being elected officers for 1895: President, R. B. Manning; vice-president, Charles Smith; secretary and treasurer, D. H. Terry; captain, T. H. Keller. The secretary and treasurer's reports were most encouraging, showing the club to be in a prosperous condition, with 41 members on the roll.

In the distribution of prizes the following were the fortunate ones: Joseph Zeglio, $5 in gold and a pair of Quimby hunting shoes; W. Squires, the same; R. B. Manning, $5 in gold and a leather gun case; V. Swody, the same; D. H. Terry, shooting blouse; W. Terry, gun case; Scott, shell box; C. Smith, hunting hat; D. L. Darby, leather vest; Thos. Brantingham, shell box; W. Pierson, hunting cap; James Goodman, hunting cap; "P. Jay," hunting leggings.

The scores of the January shoot and club record for 1894 are herewith given. During the year 3,800 Empire targets were thrown, and the same target was adopted for 1895

EVENT No. 1.—Club contest, 25 single targets to scratch men, bird handicap, known traps, unknown angles.

THE MAPLEWOOD GUN CLUB

The Maplewood (N. J.) Gun Club opened the season of 1895 under very favorable conditions. The club has two contests each month, viz.: Medal shoot, one for each of three classes, A, B and C. Conditions: 25 single targets per man, one man up, unknown trap. This shoot takes place the second Saturday in each month. The fourth Saturday in each month is the day for the contest for the silver championship cup, value $20. This is shot under a handicap system.

The shoot on January 12 was for the medals and as the scores show the shooting was of a high order, Warren Smith breaking straight (Boiling Springs must look out for him). W. H. Drake was breaking in a brand new L. C. Smith. (He thinks his score will be examined by the Boiling Springs club.) Dr. Jackson, "old reliable," was not shooting quite up to his form on the Maplewood grounds. The B and C class men did well as the following scores will show.

KICKAPOO.

HILL VS. THE BIRDS

In his match which was shot at the Morristown Driving Park, at Morristown, N. J., on January 16, in which Mr. Hill backed himself against the birds, Mr. Hill scored 31 out of 38. The snow which fell during the match had its effect upon the birds, making them much slower and easier to kill, though perhaps harder to judge accurately, than would have been the case had the day been bright and clear. The score:

Hill.....1222022222 2222222012 2222020200 22222220—31

Following the above race five 5-bird sweepstakes were shot by those present, the scores made out of a possible 25 being as follows:

KENNEL

H. G. H., St. Paul, Minn.—I have a three-year-old English setter dog that seems to be lively and healthy in every way, but when he exercises he pants very hard. He did the same last Fall while hunting, although he is a great goer, and his nose seemed to be first-class all the time. He pants almost as much now as he did in the Summer time; his appetite is irregular. Have tried him with areca nut and castor-oil, at different times, but he don't seem to have worms. It does not seem to affect his hunting, unless it is that he cannot stand quite as much work as he could eight or ten months ago. Please prescribe. Ans.—Possibly some trouble with the heart; you had better consult a local veterinarian.

HARD TACK, St. Louis.—Ans.—(1) Gem was dam of Gath's Hope, Ruby D and Gath's Mark; all field trial winners. (2) We do not understand why your paper does not come to hand promptly. We have your correct name and address on our mailing list and you ought to get your paper evrey Thursday. Our other St. Louis subscribers (and we have a great many) get their papers all right, and it is very evident to us that there is something wrong at your end. You had better complain to the local postal authorities. If you will let us know what issues you have not received we will again send you copies.

F. W. P., St. Louis, Mo.—Ans.—From your description we infer the trouble is chorea; give five grains of iodide of potash three times daily, for ten days; then give five drops of Fowler's Solution three times daily for ten days, then increase the dose one drop daily until thirty drops are given at each and every dose, continue this for one week then decrease in the same ratio.

J. H. V., Rock Rapids, Ia.—Ans.—(1) Our advice is to use the same common sense that you would in purchasing a horse, or anything else. (2) The pedigree and number of the sire aud dam are all right—though Lizzie Hopkin's number is 3738; not 8364, as given by you—but of course we cannot say positively that the puppy offered you is bred as represented.

HUNTER, Dallas, Tex.—Ans.—(1) The contentions of your friends are groundless. We said "a class for red and white Irish setters," not red or white; there are not and never have been white Irish setters. We hope that is decisive enough to convince your friends. (2) Volume I of the Stud Book was published in 1879.

E. H. M., Sheldon, Ia.—Ans.—(1) Which Belle? There are a number of that name. (2) Romping Girl is not registered. (3) Snip is by King Noble (Count Noble—Rosalind) out of Lelith (Allen's Baby—Madam Drue). (4) Lillie Bee and Flitters are not registered.

J. A. D., Oakmont, Pa.—Ans.—After a fast of eighteen hours give one and one-half grains of powdered areca nut to the pound weight of the dog and one hour after give two ounces of castor-oil; repeat this treatment in seven days. Feed but once daily, then at night.

T. F. R., Springfield, Ill.—Ans.—Give one and one-half grains of the iodide of potash three times daily for six consecutive days, then give the one-hundred-and-fiftieth part of a grain of the sulphate of strychnine three times daily.

C. W., Columbus, O.—Ans.—After a fast of eighteen hours, give one and one-half grains of powdered areca nut to the pound weight of the dog, and in one hour after give two ounces of castor-oil; repeat this treatment in seven days.

G. W. M., Des Moines, Ia.—Ans.—Sciatic rheumatism. Take fifty grains of the iodide of potash and four ounces of water; mix and give a teaspoonful three times daily; also give ten drops of cascara segrada once daily.

W. W. C., Boston, Mass.—Ans.—For six consecutive mornings give twenty-five drops of the fluid extract of pinkroot aud senna; also, as a tonic, give three grains of the citrate of iron and quinine three times daily.

H. F. L., Indianapolis, Ind.—Ans.—For six consecutive mornings give seven (7) drops of the fluid extract of pinkroot and senna, and for a tonic give one grain of the citrate of iron and quinine three times daily.

G. E. S., Elwood, Ind.—Ans.—It is not likely to prove fatal; neither can we encourage you in the use of remedial agents as the disease is usually very obstinate in yielding to treatment.

C. A., Palmyra, Mo.—Ans.—For six consecutive days give one ounce of castor-oil and twenty drops of cascara segrada; aud to the cankered ear apply tincture of iodine three times daily.

J. H. H., Norwich, Conn.—Ans.—This is caused by hardened fecal matter accumulating in the rectum; have a qualified veterinary remove the accumulation and treat the case.

W. B., Ava, Ill.—Ans.—The ovaries were not removed, otherwise your bitch would not come in heat; have the work done by some person qualified to do it and she will be all right.

F. P., Gloversville, N. Y.—Ans.—Wash out the ear with tepid water and apply tincture of iodine daily. For the eczema, give him fifteen grains of the sulphate of soda daily.

E. E. B., Atlanta, Ga.—Ans.—The symptoms are those of eczema of the ear; take twenty grains of the sulphate of zinc and four ounces of water; mix and apply once daily.

A. K. W., Kansas City, Kan.—Ans.—Some of the very best results have been obtained by the closest of inbreeding; aud, on the other hand, a great deal is charged against it.

R. T. S., Detroit, Mich.—Ans.—Hugo, not Victor Hugo, was shown at Cincinnati in 1884 by John E. Long of your city, who can probably give you the desired information

E. S., Axtell, Neb.—Ans.—(1) Antonio was whelped in December, 1886. (2 and 3) We cannot say; write and ask his breeder, Mr. J. M. Avent, Hickory Valley, Tenn.

J. G. T., Philadelphia, Pa.—Ans.—It is nervousness; try the effect of one-fourth part of a drop of the fluid extract of belladonna four times daily.

E. H. W., Cincinnati, O.—Ans.—Give him one hearty feed of cooked meat daily, and keep a muzzle on him between feeding hours.

J. S., St. Joseph, Mo.—Ans.—Goiter. Give him one grain of iodine three times daily, and apply tincture of iodine daily to the enlargements.

K. D., Deadwood, S. D.—Ans.—Chronic chorea; follow directions given in this issue to F. W. P., St. Louis, Mo.

J. L. R., Houston, Tex.—Ans.—No dog named Gloan ever won at a public field trial in America.

G. E. L., Philipsburg, Pa.—Ans.—Follow advice given in this issue to J. A. D., Oakmont, Pa.

W. G. C., Greenfield, Ill.—Ans.—Just as soon as possible after they are whelped.

SUBSCRIBER, Helena, Mont.—Ans.—Gastritis, with cerebral complications.

J. O. W., St. Joseph, Mich.—Ans.—Apply tincture of iodine twice daily.

W. A., Tiffin, O.—Ans.—Give three grains of quinine three times daily.

F. W. G., Chicago.—Ans.—Salem is not registered.

TRAP

W. W. B., Salem, Ore.—In a recent issue of the AMERICAN FIELD in a report of a shoot the writer speaks of "reversed" birds. Please state what is meant by "reversed" birds. Ans.—"Reversed birds" is when men are shooting the rapid fire system and the man at No. 1 trap gets a target from No. 5 trap, No. 2 man gets a target from No. 4 trap, No. 3 gets a target from No. 3 trap, No. 4 gets a target from No. 2 trap and No. 5 gets a target from No. 1 trap, the men moving down the line to the right after each shot the same as when shooting rapid fire, known traps.

SHOOTER, Waukesha, Wis.—Ans.—As near as we can understand you, the scores should be as follows: A scored 8, penalized 4, score allowed 4; L scored 8, not penalized, score allowed 8; G not penalized, scored 6, score allowed 6, thus giving the turkey to L without a shoot off with anyone.

COURSING

W. S., Traer, Ia.—Ans.—The rules are practically the same here as in Great Britain, but the American Coursing Board has never yet published copies for sale.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under 'Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman. Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

At the special request of many gentlemen who have placed themselves in my hands for instruction in the Art of Shooting, I have written this treatise. I have endeavored to meet the special requirements of those who are anxious to become proficient in the art, and who have hitherto been unable to obtain, in a precise form, the information necessary for studying the first principles of shooting at moving objects.

I have had the honor of coaching many gentlemen, and have carefully studied the points especially requiring attention that have cropped up from time to time while giving instruction. I hope that those who favor me by studying this treatise may quickly gain the knowledge so essential for the making of an average if not a brilliant shot.

I have purposely refrained from touching on the several merits of any class of gun—being a gunmaker myself; and, indeed, so many good works on the subject have been written, that it is really unnecessary.

I trust that authors from whose writings I have made extracts will pardon me when they recollect that I have at heart one object, viz., the advancement of a manly sport which gives pleasure, health and occupation to many, and to the patronage of whose followers I am indebted for many pleasant days.

DEATH OF WOLFRED N LOW

Colonel Wolfred N. Low, than whom there was no sportsman in Illinois better known, died last Sunday morning, January 27, at half past one. He had been ailing for sometime past from a complication of stomach and throat troubles which culminated in a serious attack of acute bronchitis, December 26, 1894, confining him to his bed from which he never arose. His untimely demise is universally deplored by the fraternity of sportsmen, among which he numbered his friends by the hundred. We have known him intimately for twenty years and the news of his death came like a thunder clap out of a clear sky, and we, in common with the sportsmen of the country, mourn his loss, and sympathize with his widow and son.

He was unselfish to a fault, sacrificing himself and his interests in the service of friends—a fact to which many can testify. Whether in his office, in the lodge room or on the open thoroughfare of life, he was always ready and willing to listen to an appeal and advise with a friend; the word "no" was not in his vocabulary—a fatal weakness. Alas! that such generous men as he are not made of sterner stuff.

Col. Wolfred N. Low was born at Sycamore, De Kalb County, Ill, in 1847, being in his forty-eighth year at the time of his death. After a thorough course in the local schools he entered Oberlin Law College, Oberlin, Ohio, from which he graduated with honors. He then commenced practice in Chicago, where he has resided ever since. His office was always a rendezvous for sportsmen, and no matter how important a case might be, if the question of shooting was brought up he would stop work on his case and talk shoot as long as the best of them. Then, when the shadows would lengthen along his office rug, and the gas lights gradually supersede the light of day through the building, and his sportsmen friends drop out and away to their homes one by one, the Colonel would return to his desk after a hasty supper and work out his arguments during the hours when he should have been sleeping. Being a member of half a score of clubs, much of his time evenings was spent in attending meetings, and being of large frame and strong build he never realized the inroads disease was making upon him until too late. At the time of his death he was ex-president of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association, ex-president of the Union Veteran League (serving through the war as a volunteer in an Illinois regiment), past commander Columbia Post, G. A. R., a member of the Cumberland Gun Club, Prairie Gun Club, Eagle River Hunting and Fishing Club, Calumet Heights Gun Club, Chicago Bar Association and Hesperia Lodge, A. F. & A. M. He was president of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association twice, 1888-89 and 1893-94, and chairman of the law committee of the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association continuously since May 30, 1883.

The funeral services were held last Wednesday, at 11 a. m., at the Hesperia Lodge rooms, 72 Monroe Street, Chicago, in accordance with the Masonic rites, the body lying in state, in full uniform, from 10 to 11 a. m. After the Masonic services Columbia Post, G. A. R., took charge of the funeral and the remains were interred with full military honors in Hesperia Lodge lot, at Rosehill Cemetery.

THE state fish commissioners of the several states who have submitted their reports to the governors of their respective states will confer a favor on the AMERICAN FIELD by forwarding copies of same to this office.

DEER SHOOTING IN VIRGINIA

BY THEO. W. BIRNEY

When half a dozen city men forsake their desks for a holiday in the woods, they can extract more amusement from the novelty of their situation than the average plodding citizen would think possible. Last Fall, I was one of a party that determined to go down in "Ole Virginny" and kill all the game in Alleghany County, and the amount of fun we had on that trip would have added materially to our adipose tissue if we had not been kept as lean as racehorses by the climbing we found it necessary to do.

Like the poor family in the doleful little ballad, we were seven There were two lawyers, one minister, one dentist, one druggist, one cog in the wheel of Uncle Sam's government, and one youth with architectural aspirations. We all left Washington by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, at 2:25 Saturday afternoon, headed for the home of the "Field," but deserted the train that night at Alleghany station, only 240 miles from our homes. We had traveled through much beautiful mountain scenery, and had passed within twenty-five miles of the finest bath house in the world, though probably most of those who may read this never heard of it. It is at Hot Springs, right in the mountains, and not a great way from old Charlottesville, once the home of the immortal Jefferson. The railroad company has made a Summer and Winter sanitarium there, over the naturally warm springs that gush perpetually from the earth, and has put up, at a cost of $150,000, a white marble building where you can get anything, from a twenty-five cent plunge to a five dollar mud bath. It is curious to see this palace in the midst of the wilderness. But to return.

We spent the night as guests of a mountain hotel keeper, and rose on Sunday morning in ample time to pack our goods in a big wagon and take the road by 10 o'clock. We had been joined by Fred, our colored cook, and by George Hardeman, one of the deer drivers whom we had engaged beforehand. With the latter were his two dogs, Buck and Joe. We had brought three hounds with us, and our second driver, when he came, contributed another, so we were well fixed in the canine department. About 1:30, after a tramp of ten miles, as we computed it, but only six according to country measurements, we reached the log house we had rented for our stay. We found it all our fancy had painted it, and more. It was luxurious! Two rooms and an attic in the main building, and only two broken window panes; a cabin of one room, close to the first, with fireplace complete; a stable with straw in the loft, and a hen house for the dogs. Also an addition tacked onto the main building and used a combination kitchen and refectory. We took possession instanter, and had dinner. Then we walked about and talked of the deer we would kill the next day. Somebody saw four wild turkeys, and somebody else found a deer track which, on inspection by a committee of investigation, was declared to have been made by a pig.

Soon after supper we retired to woo the god of slumber on bed sacks stuffed with straw and placed on canvas cots. The firelight flickered on the rough walls, and glimmered enticingly on gun barrels and hunting accouterments, so that we fell asleep amid golden anticipations.

Breakfast time arrived at 5 o'clock a. m., and half an hour later we were off for the stands. All of these were on the creek, and the most distant one was four miles from our temporary home. The youth who drew that one looked enviously at the rest of the party as they dropped off along the way, but he was to have his reward. The writer found a warm spot where he could place his back against a tree and hang his feet over the bank, and he watched the rosy dawn grow into the glorious day in the most approved poetic fashion. As instructed, he kept one eye constantly on the stretch of deep water above him, and the other on the shallows forty yards below, for the deer might come in at either spot.

About nine o'clock I heard the dogs give tongue on the mountain opposite, and cocked my rifle and gazed with increased zeal at the creek as the sounds approached, only to hear them turn away and grow fainter. Then came two reports from far up the creek. "Bang!" and in a moment, "Bang!" again; then silence. An hour passed, and there came a hail from the road. I went up and joined lawyer No. 1, the youth, and one driver. On asking the news, the first named said solemnly:

"Do you see anybody here who looks as if he had missed a deer?"

I looked from one to the other. The youth's red face betrayed him. A big doe had galloped through the water right in front of him, with the hounds in close pursuit, and had continued to gallop in spite of the discharge of both barrels of his 10-gauge shotgun. Vain for him to claim that he had knocked her down with the first shot; to wonder how she could have gotten up, and to suggest that she had probably fallen dead a short distance up the mountain. Incredulous smiles, jeers and gleeful references to severed shirttails were the only answers. And that night the youth humbly submitted to the mutilation of his garment by a specially sharpened bowie in the hands of the dentist, and the first emblem of failure fluttered from the front door of our cabin.

Daylight the next morning found us occupying the stands below our house, and the two drivers beating the big mountain before it. The dentist and the youth had positions not very far apart, and the former patronizingly told the latter that if a deer entered at his crossing he must let it pass and come to him (the dentist), for if the youth fired he might only turn the animal away, while if allowed to proceed down stream it would without doubt meet its death from the unerring weapon of the tooth extractor. The dentist's post was at one side of a deep pool which was shut in on the other side by a precipitous cliff, so that if a deer once got fairly into the water, escape for it was well nigh impossible. About 11 o'clock those of us below heard the dogs leave the mountain and take a course toward the creek, and in a few minutes came the roar of the dentist's shotgun. Once, twice, three times! The baying of the hounds ceased and we took our way homeward with confident anticipations of venison for supper. But again were we doomed to disappointment. We found the dentist seated humbly on the ground, while the youth stood near and grinned. Another doe had crossed below the former's stand, had loped up the opposite beach in plain view, and with a plunge had taken water at the pool about fifty yards below the expectant hunter, with her head set to swim right past him. But the situation was too much for the dentist; he lost his presence of mind and gave her a load of buckshot at long range. She only dodged, and turned toward the nearest shore. Even then he might easily have killed her had not the buck ague seized him. He owned up afterward that as the doe scrambled up the bank, his knees knocked together, a mist swam before his eyes, and his gun barrel wobbled like a reed in the wind. The second and third loads flew high, and pork was our portion for another day. We escorted the unfortunate man home amid remarks in which gloomy sarcasm predominated; but the youth exulted openly and whetted his knife on every good stone he came to. It was unanimously voted that he should officiate at the sacrifice which took place that night, and he performed his duty most satisfactorily to all except the victim, who complained that his last shirt was ruined forever. To add to his discomfiture, lawyer No. 1, who has a poetic nature, "did him up" as follows:

"A dentist bold is Doctor S,
Whose other name is Bill,
And he hied him forth to the Raven Rock
A lordly buck to kill.
But when a doe pranced down the beach
And in the water paddled,
He taken with buck fever was,
And all his brain was addled;
His breath came short, his knees they shook,
His teeth they did the same,
And when he tried to shoot the deer
He overshot his game."

On Wednesday the luck changed. Lawyer No. 1 had a yearling buck run to his stand and he put a bullet through him with neatness and dispatch, and then joy reigned in the camp and venison steak smoked on the cheerful board. A second deer crossed at an unexpected place that same day and was not even seen.

Thursday the dogs brought two more down from the mountain. The first, a big buck with antlers like a rocking chair, led the hounds far down the ridge, their music echoing for an hour through the clear air, and [illegible] water a mile below our farthest stand. He was met by a countryman shortly after crossing, and was [illegible] his way very leisurely along the railroad. The second headed for lawyer No. 2, but [illegible] who heard the dogs coming seized his rifle, ran out to a well-known crossing in the woods, and bagged our game without so much as an apology. We were told that we should be thankful he did not shoot the dogs as well.

On Friday lawyer No. 2 and the writer concluded they would hunt turkeys. We had a terrible day's work with small profit. Oh, those Virginia mountains! They are the steepest of their kind, and their summits are like wills o' the wisp which a man may pursue indefinitely. To hunt over them comfortably one should have leather lungs, cast-iron legs and claws on his feet, and even then he would probably wish for wings. We saw one fine flock of turkeys but they eluded us, and we reached home fagged out only to hear that the cog in the wheel had run into a bunch not 300 yards from the cabin, and had knocked one down with small shot. My companion's disgust at this piece of luck was too great for words. He had a grievance also against those of the party who had had opportunities to kill deer. This was the third season he had been in search of big game, and he had never yet got a shot. Not to be outdone by his brother disciple of Blackstone, he appeared at the supper table and gave expression to his feelings in verse as follows:

DEER SHOOTING IN VIRGINIA—HE CAME ALMOST STRAIGHT BACK, AND, WITH HIS BROKEN LEG HANGING, CLEARED A FIVE-FOOT FENCE

"'Twas ever thus! from year to year
I've seen my fondest hopes decay.
I never waited for a deer
But what he ran some other way.
I ne'er did after turkeys roam
And tire my legs and tear my clo'es
But what some cuss who stayed at home
Had a whole flock fly past his nose."

Saturday was a great day. The druggist and the drivers covered themselves with glory, and there was meat galore to send to the folks at home. I was on one of the lower stands and heard the dogs give tongue on the big mountain north of me. They were running high up, and their excited voices gave the echoes no rest; now loud, as they crossed some prominent rise, now faint, as they passed behind a knob. It made a hunter's blood tingle to follow them in imagination and see the faithful beasts struggle over rocks and through bushes, climb ridges and sweep down hillsides as they followed, with unerring accuracy, the traces of the flying quarry. Presently came two shots in quick succession from the mountain. I listened for Buck's deep bass and Fanny's shrill treble to [illegible] a good sign that the deer was dead [illegible] the cry was taken up again in [illegible] whole pack headed straight for [illegible] excitement began. First "crack!" [illegible] then in quick succession "crack!" "crack!" "crack!" A pause; then four more reports, coming as fast as a man could work the lever of the gun; then a series of ear-splitting whoops scarcely long enough for one to draw his breath, in the midst of which the four dogs opened again with a fierce clamor which made one's heart jump in his bosom. I hastily left my stand and ran up to the next one where were the minister and dentist. As yells worthy of a Comanche Indian were still coming from above us, we judged that help of some kind was wanted, and, while the two "docters" made tracks for the scene of excitement, I hastened back down stream to inform the cog that he needn't hold his stand any longer as it was evident that we were "not in it." He was around a bend and had heard nothing but the shots. Just as we started back the circus began again. "Bang!" from a shotgun; "crack!" "crack!" from a rifle, mingled with a chorus of yells, yelps and barks; then a long-drawn whoop of triumph, and the tumult ceased. We knew the fun was over and amused ourselves with speculations as to just what had happened and how. On one thing we agreed, namely, that somebody had done an awful lot of missing and that there would be more shirttails on the door that night.

Half way to camp our curiosity was satisfied. We came up with the dentist on horseback, with one deer strapped in front of him and another behind, and as proud as if he had killed them both. It seems that the four dogs had started two deers and had divided forces. Fanny and Music pressed their game so closely that she left the mountain and came flying down an old wood road that led to a sawmill. As chance would have it, one of our drivers had taken this road in order to reach the creek, there to wait for his dogs, and the doe almost ran over him. He gave her the two barrels of his shotgun and she fell dead at his feet. The dogs were almost at her heels, but just as they reached their master the other two crossed the road in full cry only a short distance up the mountain, and Fanny and Music at once gave tongue and joined them, all four sweeping along the ridge on the trail of the second deer. It was soon after this that Damon, the driver, began to whoop for assistance to get his game down the mountain. Meantime, George, the other driver, guessing from the sounds of the chase that the second deer had turned up stream and would take water near the camp, ran through the woods for a full mile and a half, and reached the bottom just in time to see the animal crossing a large field toward the creek, two hundred yards away. He shelled him with his Winchester until he was out of sight, but succeeded only in breaking a foreleg below the knee. He was then joined by the druggist, who waded the creek and put the dogs on the trail on the other side. The deer had lain down only a short distance away and they soon had him up amid a wild medley of bays and barks. He came almost straight back, and, with his broken leg hanging, cleared a five-foot fence like a bird in full view of both hunters, with Fanny not twenty feet behind him and the other dogs close up. Then there was some more shooting, together with yells of encouragement to the hounds, who were straining every muscle to close the gap between them and their prey. The bullets of George and the buckshot of the druggist alike flew wild, but the four-footed pursuers were more sure. They overtook the buck in the middle of the field and pulled him down in an instant, the gigantic Buck fastening in his flank teeth which pierced the tough hide and left a wound that looked as if made by a rip saw.

Though we drove out one or more deer each day thereafter, only one was bagged, and that one, by the decree of an all-wise Providence, which passeth understanding, fell to the gun of the youth. By virtue of having missed one chance, he was made to take a stand where no one imagined a deer would cross. But one did go right there, and the youth, burning to wipe out the stain on his record, waited until he saw the whites of its eyes, aimed low and pulled both triggers at once. He had sixteen buckshot in each barrel, and we found twenty-six of them in the deer, so there is no doubt that even a coroner's jury would have said that the youth was responsible for the death which ensued. As he strode up the road, following lawyer No. 1, who had the deer before him on the horse, you could see pride and gratified ambition in every movement. Even one of the drivers said to me as we saw them coming:

"I'll bet the youth killed that deer; look how he r'ars back!"

Well, to shorten this long story, we quit the hunting ground on Wednesday—ten days after our arrival—carrying home with us all the small game we could get together in the last two or three afternoons. This consisted chiefly of pheasants and squirrels, the latter being plentiful all about our cabin.

I may add, by way of a poscript and eye-opener, that Mr. H. W. Fuller, general passenger agent of the Chesapeake and Ohio, to whom I am indebted for many courtesies, told me that eight years ago the express books showed that there were shipped over his road during the season from Milford, a station not far from Alleghany, twenty-one hundred saddles of deer. How is that for game butchery? Though we must remember that Milford is the shipping point for several counties. Nevertheless, Mr. Fuller is actively engaged in an attempt to secure legislation which will preserve the Virginia game, an example which might well be followed by the managers of other railroads, both in this and other sections of the country.

Washington, D. C.

SECOND ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL GAME, BIRD AND FISH PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

Among the many valuable suggestions offered by members of the National Game, Bird and Fish Protective Association at its recent meeting, as to the best game and fish warden system, and the protection and propagation of game and fish, many new, novel, and even radical ideas were advanced, as will be seen by a perusal of those published herewith, which, in addition to those published last week, form an interesting collection.

We would be pleased to hear from any of our readers as to which they think the best, bearing in mind that the game of the country is fast disappearing from a condition or disease which might be aptly termed "each man for himself," and, like the surgeon about to eradicate a felon, we must cut to the bone.

George W. Strell, vice-president, Chicago: "The best system of protecting game and fish, after laws just to all Americans have been enacted, is the non-political paid game warden system. Spoils of office is one of, if not the greatest, menaces of our government, and wherever this practice prevails there will we find incompetence and lack of patriotism, the so-called servants of the people forgetting that their first duty is to the public. The fees-from-fines system is positively detrimental to the enforcement of game and fish laws, for the reason that it opens avenues for blackmail by subtle persons, and discourages after a while the most enthusiastic warden by the arrested culprits taking continuances, necessitating a duplicate amount of money and time to prosecute, and then, if the violator is discharged or imprisoned, there are no fees to collect, and the warden gets no pay for doing his duty, though the public is benefited by his work.

"I believe that each state should have an honorary game and fish commission, consisting of three representative citizens, one to be elected every two years and to hold office four years, with office at the capital. Said commission to serve without pay other than necessary expenses in attending meetings and mileage. The reason for this is that it would bring the question of game and fish protection and propagation directly before the people in a manner, and often enough, to impress them with the importance of it, and thus act as an educator and create a sentiment which would make the enforcement of the laws easier, for without a responsive sentiment a law is a dead letter. This commission should have the power to appoint a secretary to attend to the office work for the commission, superintendents of fish hatcheries and game preserves (breeding grounds); a chief state fish warden and a chief state game warden, with not less than eight deputies for each chief. All these appointive offices should be run strictly under civil service rules.

"Inasmuch as the state supplies fish and game either by propagation or protection, I see no injustice or trampling on the rights of American citizenship in enacting a law compelling every person who shoots for the market or fishes for market, during the legally constituted open seasons only, to take out annually a separate license for each pursuit, to cost not less than $5; and every adult desiring to shoot and fish should pay an annual license fee of 50 cents for that privilege, said license fees to be paid to the county clerk and turned into the state treasury and credited to the state game and fish fund, to be expended as the commission directs. Half the fines should go into this fund also, and the other half into the common school fund of the county in which it is assessed. The salaries for the different appointive officers should be fixed by the commission, and in no instance should be less than $800 nor more than $1,800 annually, with mileage. Any violations of either law, occurring in the district of any deputy, and not prosecuted after information has been given, should be sufficient cause for reprimand, and upon a second complaint, dismissal. In this way every sportman's association would have a hand on the lever of protection. I do not believe in depriving any American citizen of the right to eat game and fish by purchase, and therefore do not favor non-export state game and fish laws, for if the above system was put into effect there would be plenty of game and fish for all, for it has been demonstrated in overpopulated Europe that where protection during the close season is rigidly enforced, venison is sold in the open markets 75 per cent. cheaper than it is now being sold in the United States. The market shooter or fisher can afford to pay the license because he is out for profit; the pleasure shooter or fisher can afford it for the greater opportunities afforded to gratify his desire nearer home, and because if he can afford to indulge at all he can afford the license fee. There is not a pleasure in this world but what must be paid for in some way, as for instance membership and dues in any club. Why not make the state our club and pay to it our dues?"

E. D. Magoon, vice-president, Muskegon, Mich.; "I believe in a state game warden appointed by the governor, at a good salary. The chief warden to appoint special deputies, selected from different parts of the state, one deputy for each 200,000 population, they to act as he may direct, and to receive proper pay for time rendered. State warden to appoint local county deputies, not to exceed three in any one county. It would be glory enough for any state which will during 1895 place upon its statute books the law passed by our last legislature: Act 196, Laws of 1893—'An act to regulate the possession, use, transportation and sale of game.' It is full of good horse sense and when enforced is the grandest fish and game protective law ever conceived. The people want to be educated regarding fish and game. Make a liberal use of printer's ink in 1895. Give them copies of this law and good sensible reading why the fish and game need their protection."

W. T. Dennis, vice-president, Richmond, Ind.; "We have no game. Fish generally protected and the laws enforced."

G O. Dodd, Watertown, S. D.: "I approve of a state game warden on a salary, with authority to appoint deputies. Birds in this part of the state have been fairly well protected this season. The slaughter of birds is in the southern part of the state, where they are trapped by the thousands and shipped to eastern markets. A state game warden could stop this. Shorten the season for the sale of game in eastern markets, increase the membership of the N. G., B. & F. P. A. and great strides will be made in the good work."

Capt. John Fowler, secretary, Louisville, Ky.: "My view about the game warden system is that the state should employ them, and we will endeavor to get it done at our next legislature; if not will try and see if our state association will not raise an assessment to provide for same. We can get good reliable men at $1 per day and the 40 per cent. of fines which is allowed by law. The Kentucky State Association here has done much good. After five years of hard work we finally got a fair fish and game law passed. We have prosecuted several cases of violation of the fish law and several of the game law, and in the large cities of the state have been able to get the police to act for us, which has had good effect. Our association will endeavor at all times to advance the interests of the legitimate sportsmen, and are always willing to lend a helping hand to the National Association. The National Association ought to have a placard put up in all the principal cities in the United States, to let people know that there is such an institution."

G. E. Delevan, Estherville, Ia.: "Unfortunately this state does not have a game warden and the violations are numerous. Without the local authorities take the matter in hand poachers go unpunished. There is not any appropriation for the protection of game except fish in Iowa."

B L. Osborn, Washington, D. C.: "The game laws of the District of Columbia don't amount to much, as the game is about exterminated. But there is a law to prevent the sale of game out of season, which should be enforced, as game can be bought from cold storage at any season of the year, especially during the long session of Congress as the 'lawmakers' are the greatest 'lawbreakers,' demanding game all the year around. The laws of Maryland are better enforced than those of Virginia; many counties in the latter state have no game laws. I have no experience with the warden system. The Capital City Gun Club appointed a committee of three and the sum of $25 for the express purpose of prosecuting a certain dealer here, who deliberately sells game in violation of the law. The money has never been used and the committee has done nothing My individual idea is, to offer a direct reward to be paid on the conviction of the lawbreaker. I have the notion that would be the quickest and most efficient way to reach him and others equally as guilty. There has been nothing done here, as far as I can learn, for game protection. The shooters have to seek for their recreation in other states, Virginia, North Carolina, even as far down as Florida, consequently they lack interest in the matter. The only shooting in the district is railbird, beginning September 1. The principal thing to do here is to prevent the sale of game out of season, which has been killed in other states. The true sportsmen of the United States should seek cooperation and make a generally uniform game law, that is, have the season open on all game alike. Give us two months in the year from October 24 to December 24, that would protect the game on Christmas Day, also would keep rabbit hunters from shooting feathered game out of season, also allow all game to get its growth, and put the shooter on his mettle. There are thousands of heads of game killed, quails, prairie chickens, etc., that are not fit to use after being killed. I am speaking now of the small game such as the majority of shooters seek. Bears, deer, turkeys etc., I am not posted on, but should judge from the various controversies in the different papers that they suffer equally from the hands of the pot-hunters and lawbreakers. I regret not being able to attend your meeting. Will surely do so should it ever come nearer this way."

Mr. Edward M. Blanding, vice-president, Bangor, Me.: "I believe the best men possible should be secured for wardens; that they should spend their time in the woods, patrolling the game regions, and receive therefor a fixed salary. I am rather inclined to believe that wardens should give bonds."

A. J. Klofanda, vice-president, Eau Claire, Wis: "I believe in paid game wardens. Each state should be divided into districts and a game and fish warden appointed for each, with one head game and fish warden, having office at the Capitol, the chief warden to visit his deputies at least twice a year. As far as the Badger State is concerned, we need some changes in the game laws, especially the deer law should be changed. I was in hopes that when the last deer law was passed, making the open season the month of October, that our deer would get the needed protection on account of the warm weather making the shipping of venison difficult and unprofitable. So far the law worked well and the amount of venison shipped to market was very small in comparison to former years, when the open season was in November. But the great objection to the open season being in October is the number of does and fawns being killed. I have seen shipments consisting of 148 carcasses and among them were only five bucks, the rest were all does and small fawns. The bucks do not run so early in the season, but are mostly in dense thickets, and the does, with their fawns, are near meadows and creeks and easily found Later in the season the bucks commence to run and the does are in hiding. I have hunted deer myself and this conclusion is from my own observation. We have been killing the goose that laid the golden egg. I would therefore favor a change in the law, making the open season from October 15 to November 15, or better yet, two weeks only. Does and small fawns protected at any time of the year, for at least eight years. And if does and fawns were protected, there wouldn't be so many accidents every year, one gunner shooting another, mistaking him for a deer, as the hunter would have to be sure and see what he is shooting at. Hunters from other states to procure a permit on payment of $10 to the state game warden, and the moneys so collected to be used for propagation and for better protection of game and fish. I should also favor a law licensing every gunner in the state one or two dollars a year, and the moneys so collected to be used as above stated. Trout fry should not be 'planted' in our creeks so early in the Spring as was formerly done, but later in the season, as the creeks run over the banks, after early Spring rains, and the fry can be found sticking to old rushes or brush, dead and dry, after the water subsides. The 'fishermen,' especially 'anglers,' have one consolation in the future scarcity of game and fish, and that is the fish hatchery; but the gunner is dependent on 'natural' increase only and the outlook for the future is surely not very bright. But with uniform state laws (of different states) enforced by good game wardens and supported by a large membership of the N. G., B. & F. P. A., we may preserve whatever game is yet left to future generations. Children in our public schools should also be taught to love Nature and its beauty; the fields, forests and streams and their habitants, the birds, game and fish, and learn how to protect them for future generations, before it is too late."

THE GAME AND FISH LAWS OF MASSACHUSETTS

In their report to the state legislature the Commissioners of Inland Fisheries and Game of Massachusetts say that during the past year 104 arrests have been made for violation of the fish and game laws, and that fines amounting to $1,675 have been paid to the state. In addition to the above the Commissioners say:

"With the increasing population and improved methods of capture many of our laws should be revised if we wish to retain our game. So scarce has it become that many means have been forced to purchase or [illegible] water for preserves in order to obtain need[illegible] This is the natural consequence of laws [illegible] sufficient to maintain and increase our [illegible] where it would benefit the public.

"Three months' shooting and six months' fishing in a thickly populated state like Massachusetts is altogether too much, and, if not checked, will in a short time destroy all we have. Our trout streams are kept up only by artificial stocking or by being closed to the public by the owners because of the excessive fishing, which would render them valueless. Our woods and many of our streams are as capable of sustaining game and fish as ever they were.

"A bill allowing the sale of artificially reared trout at times when the wild trout are prohibited by law has been before the legislature for three years; one year it failed to pass the senate, and twice it was vetoed. The history of legislation does not furnish an instance of more persistent effort to pass a law which, if enacted, would be of no benefit to anyone, while its effect upon the trout in the wild streams would be disastrous.

"The carp has evidently come to stay; by no means can it be eradicated from our waters. Its increase is phenomenal, especially in the Great Lakes, where tons of them are taken and sold, at wholesale, at about the same price as codfish.

"Woodcocks have been very scarce; in places where they have been plenty, not a bird is now to be found. Quails, under the protection of the law passed by the last legislature have increased so that it is not unusual this Fall to find bevies of from thirty to sixty birds. If they survive the Winter they will be abundant next year. Ruffed grouse are disappearing from the state. The reports from all parts of the state show conclusively that unless something is done for their protection there will soon be none to protect."

The commissioners recommend that the open season for all inland game be from October 1 to December 1. They also recommend a more stringent law for the protection of lobsters, a longer close season for trout, the prohibition of taking or having in possession trout less than six inches in length, a law for the better protection of game, a law prohibiting the killing or having in possession—except for purposes of propagation—any Mongolian, English or golden pheasants for a term of five years, also a small appropriation for their propagation.

The work of the commission has increased to that extent that a headquarters and a permanent clerk are required.

QUAIL SHOOTING IN CALIFORNIA

San Francisco, Cal.

Editor American Field:—Recently I was invited to take a hunt with that well-known sportsman A. B. Truman, Esq., and his double brace of dogs, namely, Champion Patti Croxteth, Clay, and Cricket, all three pointers, and Nemo, an Irish setter. After a ride of fifty-five miles behind Mr. Truman's Electioneer mare Lottie, we found ourselves at McGlauflin's ranch, a few miles from Mt. Hamilton. The following morning we arose about 6 o'clock and had our breakfast, after which we procured two saddle horses to carry us to the best quail locality, about three miles away.

On our arrival we staked our horses and let down our first brace, Patti C and Clay. After hunting hard for one and a half hours we flushed a bevy of birds from the top of a small laurel tree. They flew to the opposite side of the cañon and settled in some low sage. Mr. T— then called both dogs up and worked them around to the leeward side and within five minutes I had the pleasure of seeing the great prize winning pointer bitch, Patti Croxteth, pointing and Clay, another pointer that I believe has no license to be second to any, backing. Really it was a sight worth going another fifty miles to see. We flushed the bird and brought it to grass, both dogs standing to shot, and Clay retrieved to order in grand style. We then hunted for the rest of the birds, but they had left for some unknown resort. We then worked along to the head of the cañon, where we again found birds and had several points and backs, but the birds were so wild that they would not lie well enough to give us a successful day's shoot. Nevertheless, what birds we did get were over good points and two of the best dogs I have ever see work together, and I must say I have been out with the best of them.

The next day it rained so hard we could not try Nemo, the Irish setter, and Cricket, the whelp of Patti C, satisfactorily, still I wish to say that they are natural born field trial winners, especially Nemo. He has more bird sense, range and bottom than any puppy I ever saw. After running him over thirty miles he did not tire, but seemed to be as fresh as any, and I am sure we will hear from him in some trials in the near future.

If it had not been for the continuous rain we [illegible] have had one of the most pleasing quail shoots [illegible] season. I hope I may have the pleasure again [illegible] shooting over the same double brace of fine fielders.

RECAPPING SHELLS

BURLINGTON, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I would like to call the attention of some shooters who are recapping the Rapid [illegible] manufactured by the United States Cartridge Co., [illegible] points of interest, especially the one thing that is so much dreaded, that everlasting hang-fire.

To those who insist on gathering up the empty cases that accumulate at shooting matches or tournaments, and especially those who select the Rapid, let me say that if they use a decapper that has a short needle they should see that the stem runs up at least nine-sixteenths of an inch above the plunger, otherwise the long cavity in the pocket will be crushed down, which will destroy the purpose for which it is intended.

Another point that should be taken into consideration, and a very important one, is to by all means use the U. S. No. 3 primers with the monogram stamped on them. The advantage of this primer is, that the fulminate responds quickly to the firing pin, and the long cavity in the pocket gives a chance for the gases to become thoroughly ignited before reaching the powder and extending up into the body of the charge, giving it a quick and thorough ignition, burning the powder from the center outward with increased combustion, this constituting one of the prime and quite essential factors when using nitro powder.

The base of the U. S. Rapid shell is of the same diameter, the circumference being the same as the interior of the barrels. This is also the same with the new Climax shell and will be appreciated by those who do not care to pay a fancy price for their empty cases.

CARE OF YOUNG PHEASANTS

ROBINS ISLAND, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A number of gentlemen have lately written me to know if it is best to take the young pheasants away from the hen as they are hatched, and I will answer them through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD, as it may benefit others as well.

Never remove your hens until the birds are well nested, guarding the nest to keep any that may be hatched before the last chick is strong enough to leave the nest. Never take the first chicks hatched, from the hen; it is wrong. Nothing is so beneficial in strengthening a chick as the heat of the hen's body. Let feeding alone for the first twenty-four hours after the first bird is hatched. The large quantity of yolk that is drawn into the chick within the last twenty-four hours of its confinement in the shell is sufficient for its wants during the time specified.

Next, have your coops set on dry turf two or three days previous to the young pheasants being hatched; it will save a little annoyance when wanted, and also keep the ground dry, which is so necessary on the first shift from the nest. If your turf is not of a sandy nature sprinkle a little sand where you intend to shift your coops. Shifting the coops daily is very beneficial to the birds.

A MORE potent argument, or one that should appeal to the good sense of the people of this country regarding the preservation of game and the establishment of public game preserves, is hardly needed than the recent report of the United States Consul General at Berlin, Germany in his report, which should command not only the attention of sportsmen, but that of social economists as well, he says: The abundance and excellence of venison cannot fail to impress persons who live in German cities. It is a common dish all the year round, and its price is so moderate that only the poorest classes fail to taste it now and then. The reason for this is the high cultivation of forestry and the care with which deer are bred, fed, and protected from poachers. Considering the excellence of venison as food and the small cost of rearing deer under protection, it is in America especially that steps to form practical deer parks might be easy and of profit. In the neighborhood of great cities the supply of water has to be regulated by the preservation of large districts of more or less mountainous and woody country. In New York, for example, the Croton watershed and the Adirondack reservations might be easily used as deer preserves, and the annual killing and sale of animals of the proper sort would furnish an income far beyond the aggregate salaries of overseers, foresters, and guards. In Germany great success has attended the crossing of the American wapiti with the native deer. The Consul calls attention to the recklessness with which in our country the wild animals have been destroyed, bringing its own punishment, and he urges that our reservations be stocked with wapiti and Virginia deer, and the herds then regularly [illegible] to supply the markets with [illegible] food. Were the people of this [illegible] question of game protection and [illegible] interest and zeal that they should [illegible] supplied with game of all kinds, from the deer to the smallest of game birds, at nearly half the present cost; and then the people of large cities like New York, Chicago and Philadelphia, who now seldom taste game of any kind, owing to the high prices asked for it, could eat of it the same as they do now of beef, pork, veal, mutton and the different varieties of domestic fowls. The cheapening of game meats would, during the season when these meats are in market, also lessen the price of other meats to such an extent that the very humblest citizen could indulge his appetite to a reasonable degree. No civilized country on the face of the globe has been more reckless in the destruction of its wild game than has ours, and it is now high time that a system of economy should be inaugurated.

CORRESPONDENTS of the AMERICAN FIELD in various parts of the country seem to think the wild fowl are nearly exterminated. While it is doubtless true that game of all kinds is decreasing at an alarming rate, I am inclined to think that the ducks and geese are holding their own remarkably well. The main flight of water fowl seems to be moving farther West every year. During the month of February, last year, the writer put in four weeks' steady duck shooting in the vicinity of Oklahoma, and could the editor of the AMERICAN FIELD have seen the numbers of ducks flying North, he would have arrived at the conclusion that there were enough left for breeding purposes for years to come. For three days the air seemed full of ducks and geese. The ducks were principally pintails and mallards. Protect the game, prohibit the sale, shorten the open season. Do anything to attain this end, but never, under any circumstances, tax the poor man's gun. Like Senator Palmer of Illinois, I believe that those are best governed who are governed the least. In the language of President Cleveland, unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation. A gun tax is an unnecessary tax, and therefore an unjust tax. There is not a state in the Union, except, perhaps, South Dakota, but what can easily raise the money necessary for game protection without going to any such extreme and un-American measure as that advocated by the ex-game warden in his recent address to the National Game, Bird and Fish Protective Association.

Des Moines, Ia. C. H. K.

I HAVE read many sportsmen's books written by sportsmen who were not scientific, and by gunmakers who were not sportsmen, and have not obtained the satisfaction from them that I hoped for. It occurs to me that Mr. Armin Tenner would be the very man to write a scientific book for sportsmen. I know of no one else as competent, and I believe he would find such a ready sale for such a work that he would find it very profitable. He could write a scientific work about the numerous guns—both rifle and shotguns, ammunition of all kinds, giving us the best loads, etc., the different trajectories of balls, and the thousand and one other items that a scientific sportsman would like to have good authority on. Our shooting brethren write many nice articles on "The Choice of a Gun," "Good Loads," etc., but many of them are not authoritative and are not exact or to be depended upon, because the authors have not had enough experience and have no scientific facts to base their judgment on. Too many of them jump at conclusions and publish them as facts. Let Mr. Tenner write a book on everything that pertains to the gun and I will be his first patron.

Eufaula, I. T. G. R. RUCKER.

THE New York State Association for the Protection of Fish and Game has had the amendments made to and changes suggested in the existing game law of the state, as agreed upon at the annual meeting of the association held at Syracuse on January 10, printed in pamphlet form so that they may be sent to sportsmen in all parts of the state for consideration and suggestions, or for any points of value in the protection of game not touched upon at the annual meeting. In this way it is hoped to get a law enacted that will, as near as is possible, meet with the approval of all sportsmen, and one that when once it becomes a part of the statutes will not only be respected everywhere and by all true sportsmen, but also be rigidly enforced all over the state. Considerable time and much earnest thought have been given to this matter by some of the most prominent sportsmen in the state, and it is believed that what has been suggested is for the good of all sections and the greatest protection of game of all kinds.

MR. W. P. BROWN, formerly a resident of Chicago, but now of Turtin, Southern California, in a personal letter dated January 9, speaking of the weather there said it was so warm that children were playing around outdoors barefooted, and that while he could pick flowers from his front yard he could see snow on Mt. Baldy, seventy-five miles to the north. Speaking of game and shooting he says thirty minutes' drive takes him to the bay for ducks, twenty minutes will carry him to the foothills where quails and cottontails are plentiful and one-half day's ride will take him to the large cañons where deer, mountain lions and wildcats can be found without much difficulty, and that if he does not go shooting as often as once a week he feels that something has gone wrong.

I HAVE just returned from a three weeks' hunt at Harrisburg, Ark. Ducks, the main object of my trip, were fairly plenty, the recent cold snap driving them South. The mast is good this year, and they look for fine shooting about the fifteenth of February. Deer are plentiful. Over 500 were shipped from one station this year. Quails are abundant. I brought back home with me three deer, twenty-seven ducks and sixty-three quails. We had a few days of extremely cold weather, but Crees' Camp Stove kept our camp warm and comfortable. At Dexter, Mo., I saw a fine flock of wild pigeons. A native on the train said they were the first he had seen for years.

Champaign, Ill. H. B.

A VERY sad accident happened last week near our county line. Mr. H. T. Rodgers and Mr. James Harrington, brothers-in-law and best of friends, were out bird hunting, one on either side of a hedge. A bird flew toward Mr. Harrington which Mr. Rodgers shot at, not seeing Mr. Harrington. The load struck Mr. Harrington in the face, knocking him to the ground and putting out both of his eyes. The sad accident has cast a gloom over the entire community.

Bennettsville, S. C. T. S. EVANS.

THE sportsmen of Moline, Ill, recently organized the Moline Game and Fishing Club with a charter membership of seventy-five. The officers elected for the ensuing year are: President, K. A. Barnard; vice-presidents, Arthur Stephens and Henry Sellmer; secretary, E. E. Morgan. The organization starts out with the brightest prospects, and will doubtless do much good work in enforcing the game and fish laws of the state.

MR. J. M. KILLEN of Pueblo, Colo., will please accept our thanks for two photographs of the result of a rabbit killing crusade. One shows a string of 172 jack-rabbits shot in one day by one man at Lamar, Colo.; the other shows a double string of 5,142 jack-rabbits shot in two days, December 21 and 22, 1894, at the same place, by a party. There is meat enough shown in these two photographs to feed the poor of any city for a week.

CHARLES WEICHSLER, for a number of years game and fish warden of St. Clair County, Mich., has resigned. The board of supervisors of that county recently reduced the pay of game wardens to $5 a day, and Mr. Weichsler did not think the pay commensurate with the duties of the office and consequently sent in his resignation.

THE Tacoma (Wash.) Rifle, Rod and Gun Club has arranged to procure fifty Mongolian pheasants with which to stock that part of the state, and Colonel Snell, vice-president of the club, has drafted a new game law that he will attempt to have enacted into a law at the next sitting of the legislature of Washington.

A GROCERYMAN at Egg Harbor City, N. J., named Louis Stueber, sold rabbits out of season. He was arrested and Justice Gould fined him $20 for each rabbit found in his possession. As he had twenty-five the fine amounted to the neat little sum of $500. Rather a costly experience but none too severe a punishment.

GAME WARDEN HAMPTON, of Michigan, in his biennial report states that, notwithstanding about 2,000 non-resident hunters visited his state the past year and killed, together with resident hunters, about 8,000 deer, mostly in the Upper Peninsula, the indications are that deer are slowly on the increase in that state.

A PARTY consisting of Mr. J. F. Hutchinson, of Boston; A. M. Tucker, Lexington; N. L. Chaffin, Arlington; Capt. Harrison Aldrich, Somerville; Mark E. Tucker, wife and daughter, Linn; John P. Tucker and G. A. Abbott, Bangor, left the city of baked beans on January 25 to spend a month quail shooting in the South.

THE rapidity with which the game of Maine is being decimated is patly evidenced by the statement, recently made, that Messrs. Sumner L. Crosby & Co., of Bangor, have mounted 265 moose, deer and caribou heads thus far this season, and have on hand yet to be completed some 250 heads.

THE Farmers' Game Protective Association of Bergen County, N. J., it is said, has purchased 200 rabbits and turned them loose near Hackensack, N. J. The rabbits were procured in Michigan and therefore should thrive in New Jersey.

MR. W. S. BURTIS, Freehold, N. J., has made arrangements to get 2,000 live quails from Texas and the Indian Territory, which will be turned loose in Monmouth County, N. J. The birds were contracted for at $3 50 per dozen.

We would be much obliged to such of our readers as may have the opportunity, to send us copies of bills passed by the various legislatures in session this Winter, concerning game, fish or canine matters.

WORCESTER FUR COMPANY'S WINTER MEET

(Special Report.)

There are few events in the calendar of the New England fox-hunter that are anticipated with as much pleasure and remembered with as much satisfaction as the annual meets of the Worcester Fur Company. This is the oldest of the fox-hunting organizations of New England and its membership list includes a long array of names well known in business and political circles. A large proportion of these gentlemen are enthusiastic hunters, and the pleasure of meeting them in the field, of hearing the story of the last successful hunt, of seeing some noted hound and comparing his work with that of his rivals, of hearing the latest joke on some member of the fraternity, makes the yearly hunts popular occasions and brings together sportsmen fron far and near.

This year's Winter meet, or "snow hunt" as it is usually denominated, took place on January 24 and 25. For the first time in the history of the club the exeoutive committee decided to devote two days to the meet. This was done in the hope that at least one of the days would show good hunting conditions, but the expectations were not fulfilled. Both days were clear and cold with a cutting northwest wind which made the heaviest clothing a necessity. The snow too was covered with an icy crust which would bear a fox but was not strong enough to hold up a hound; in consequence the feet of many of the pack were badly cut and their tracks marked with blood. The scent lay poorly at all times; what driving there was was slow and irregular, and only those hounds that possessed excellent noses and great perseverance were able to do anything at all with the game. Under these circumstances the meet, considered simply as a hunt, cannot be regarded as a success. The fierce cry of the pack in sharp pursuit and the soul-stirring rush of the eager hounds were wanting; but as an occasion of renewing old friendships, of forming new ones, of greeting friends that one does not meet half often enough, and of having a thoroughly enjoyable time in congenial company, the snow hunt was assuredly a great success. And the fact that the Worcester Fur Company failed to secure a brush for the first time in its history did not detract an iota from the general good fellowship and hilarity of the occasion.

Among all the good hounds that were in the hunt there was none that won such general applause as the beagle Little Drive, owned by E. L. Walling, of Brown University. The little fellow was busy every moment, and was among the few hounds able to carry the trail on the crust and not discouraged by the unfavorable hunting conditions.

The club's headquarters were at the Tourtellotte House, in Millbury, where the proprietor, John M. White, owner of Logan, Aggie, Fly and other good hounds, had a cordial welcome for all. Many arrived on Tuesday evening.

Wednesday the sun rose in a cloudless sky, and when the horn sounded at six o'clock there was no wind, but the temperature had fallen during the night and a heavy crust covered the snow. However, with the thermometer marking 24° it was thought that the sun might soften the crust and give the hounds a chance to do good work But our hopes came to nothing, the thermometer fell steadily, the wind rose, and the afternoon was bitterly cold. The scent was bad all day.

The party which had spent the night at the Tourtellottte was rapidly augmented in the morning. Many came from Worcester by train, and others arrived in sleighs from all directions. Hunters and hounds crowded into barges, and at 7:45 were off for the Merriam district, which had been chosen as the scene of the day's sport. After a ride of six miles we drove up at E. A. Esterbrook's farm, and a few minutes later the neighboring hills and fields were so covered with sportsmen that it seemed impossible for a fox to escape should one be started. But foxes are whelped under lucky planets and not one was in danger during the day. John M. White put in Logan, Aggie, Slick, Fly, Ned, Ben, Diamond K and Ring a mile or more south of the farm; not far away, on George Hill, Mr. Walling cast off the beagles, Little Drive and Belle Dimon, and the foxhound, Hunter; further north President J. R. Thayer loosed Duff and Dick; W. R. Dean put in Dime, and A. W. Walls added Joe to the pack; Geo. Goddard cast off Joe J; Frank Stone, Ranger; S. R. Newton, Spot and Tick; J. B. Stewart, Peter; and D. W. Bradt, John. H. W. Smith was also at hand with two fox terriers, but unfortunately there was no call for their services. In addition to those already named there were on the runways Fred. Bucklin, D. S. Jackson, C. H. Steele, C. B. Holden, A. W. Hunt, E. T. Whittaker, O. M. Ball, W. C. Hamilton, J. A. Williams, C. W. Walls, W. Smith, H. W. Wyman, E. T. Smith and J. W. Mascroft, from Worcester; Geo. H. Waite, Leicester, Mass.; W. R. Hager, Southbridge, Mass.; C. A. Barber, Spencer, Mass.; Geo. Pogue, Grafton; and many others whose names I was unable to obtain. The hounds of Mr. White and Mr. Walling soon packed and encouraged all by trailing rapidly into cover, but they quickly lost the track and then scattered over the country. Soon one gave tongue further to the south. The others harked to him, and after a few minutes' hard work a burst of music told that the game was up. The pack at once divided and two foxes were hustled out of the cover. Belle Dimon, Hunter and Ben drove one northward, and the rest of the pack carried the other in the same direction. For perhaps five minutes the cry of the pack was inspiring; then it began to decrease in volume, and it was not long before the hounds had but little more than a cold trail. Now and then they would carry it for a few rods in beautiful style and then lose it, only to find it again after wide casting and much hard work. Both of these foxes were lost after a desultory run of a couple of hours.

Meantime Dime and Ranger started a fox in Esterbrook's swamp. Other hounds harked to them, and soon there were eight in the pack; but it was only by persistent work that they could make any headway at all. For four hours they drove slowly with many breaks and losses, and then the fox led off for Upton and was seen no more. While this fox was running a second fox was sighted taking refuge in a small swamp, and about one o'clock Joe J, Ben and Dime were caught and cast off where Reynard was last seen. They soon jumped him, but the drive that followed, like all that had preceded it, was slow and unsatisfactory. Little Drive was in this run, as he had been in others, working energetically and carefully and frequently taking the lead from his larger rivals. By three o'clock most of the hounds were caught and the party was on its way to the Tourtellotte. Here their numbers were reinforced by "Uncle Nathan" Harrington, T. F. Smith, J. A. Smith, C. H. Howe, G. C. Whidden and D. M. Earle, of Worcester; and Alvin Fisher, Charles Pierce and Paul Wheeler, of West Rutland, Mass. The hungry sportsmen needed no second call when dinner was announced at 8:30, and never was a fine spread more enjoyed than on this occasion. After voting to hunt the Purgatory district in Sutton on Thursday the party adjourned to the smoking room and the talk was of hunting and hounds till a late hour.

Thursday was a glorious Winter's day, clear and cold, with the thermometer at six above zero. It was, however, evident, that the hunting conditions were to be no better than they had been on Wednesday, and it was a small party that left the Tourtellotte for the grounds at 1:30. Headquarters were made at the Gates farmhouse and the hounds were divided into two packs. One was put in near Cady's and trailed slowly to a jump. Then there came a repetition of Wednesday's dull sport. This fox ran toward Purgatory and was lost near the far-famed den. Meantime the second pack was cast off not far from the Gates place. They soon found a track warm enough to be worked, and, picking it slowly along, started their fox. This fellow also headed for the rocky ground about Purgatory. The trail quickly grew cold and finally was lost altogether. The hunters meantime were stationed in the woods and covered the runways as best they could. Sheltered by the thick growth they did not feel the icy wind as they did Wednesday on the bald hills of the Merriam district, and, despite the low temperature, none complained of the cold. A number of stray foxes were seen. Logan was caught by Mr. White and put on the hot track of one and followed for a couple of hours. The hounds, with one or two exceptions, were willing workers. Little Drive, the beagle, again distinguished himself and did some pretty word, taking one fox away from the pack and getting a lead of a mile or more. The difficult following served to show his keen nose and persistence to the best advantage. By two o'clock the desultory driving was at an end. The party gathered at the Gates place, the barge was loaded and we fairly flew over the icy roads to the Tourtellotte.

As a hunt the second day's work was no more of a success than the first had been, but a couple of amusing incidents will make it long remembered by all who were fortunate enough to be present. Not long after [illegible] had begun two of the party were standing [illegible] ing listening to the distant pack. Sud[illegible] appeared, coming directly toward th[illegible] came till only twenty yards away. T[illegible] erans, whose shot it was, gave her both [illegible] and made a clean miss; the other was so sure his companion would kill that he had not prepared to shoot. Then the fox sat down on a knoll, a hundred yards away, and looked at the two hunters, and the two hunters looked at each other. About this time a third appeared; he has the reputation of being a dead shot and he made a few facetious remarks which were received with the disdain that they merited. The trio then went off together, and a few moments later were walking along the base of a "horseback." Suddenly a hound cried a fox and a red body dashed through the brush at the top of the "horseback." The dead shot fired just as his companions shouted, "Don't shoot; it's a dog." The expression on the hunter's face as he dashed up the almost perpendicular hillside will never be forgotten by those who were there. When it was found that the crack shot had fired at Aggie, and moreover, had missed her clear, the merriment of his two companions knew no bounds. Here was a combination of circumstances which called for no end of good-natured "guying," and the fun was fast and furious. The halls of the Tourtellotte never echoed more hearty laughter than on Thursday evening, and those who missed the second day's hunt lost more real fun than falls to the lot of the ordinary hunter in six months.

At an early hour partings were said, and the "snow hunt" of 1895 came to a merry end.

BRADLEY,

NOTES

MR. JOHN H. WALLACE JR., a fox-hunter of Town Creek, Ala., sends us a marked copy of the Courtland (Ala.) Enterprise containing the following incident: "While out hunting with the peerless Kittikaski pack a few days since the hounds struck a warm trail and were soon moving it at a lively clip. When the hounds had trailed perhaps a mile through fields and timber, all came to a dead stop. He had a friend whom he requested to go down into the thicket of scrubby oaks and blackjacks and attempt to ascertain the cause of the dropping out of the trail. His friend soon called to him that he had found the fox. Mr. Wallace went down where his friend was and was astonished to find securely perched in the forks of a bending blackjack tree a large red fox. Upon a close examinat on he discerned that there were two foxes up the tree lying side by side, apparently very unconcerned, in a bed built of leaves. A negro boy was called and sent up the tree to scare the fox out, being cautioned, if possible, to make only one jump out. The hounds were called away and soon Reynard No. 1 came down. After a start of several minutes the hounds were put on his trail. He made a large circle to the north and was caught in 45 minutes. The hunters then came back to the place of starting, called the boy and soon Reynard No. 2 was going, and the pack at a Salvator clip uncomfortably close at his heels. He made a large circle to the south, and was caught in 50 minutes, not a hundred yards from where fox No. 1 was caught."

IN the AMERICAN FIELD, January 12, is a report of the Briarbrooke Hunt Club's drag chase, taken from the Cincinnati Enquirer. Now as the Enquirer's account was probably written by a reporter who had never seen a drag or fox chase, we can well excuse his dense ignorance. The words "A Farce" were his first display. The run was not a farce and was a much better run in many respects than several I have participated in in the East by clubs of prominence. It is true our best society was assembled for the sport, in so much he is right. Two red foxes ordered from Scott, Wis., failed to arrive on time and a drag was substituted in shape of a coonskin, which undoubtedly makes the best drag for our native hounds. Regarding the following: "The dogs were turned loose; only one old coon dog struck the trail." It is absolutely without correctness as the entire pack got away right at the start, only one dog refusing to run—a six-months-old puppy. Miss Laycock was not injured or thrown; her horse, having caught its foot in a concealed barbed wire, stumbled and fell. Miss Laycock was on her feet and had perfect control of her mount (and danced all evening besides).

Indianapolis. BRIARBROOKER.

FROM the Indianapolis Sun it appears that the members of the local drag-hunt club are going to try their luck again, this time with a "bagman" from Wisconsin instead of a coonskin, and one of them is quoted as saying: "The press won't know anything about it, [illegible] does look to me like those newspaper fellows who [illegible] allowed to ride with us last time would have had [illegible] sense than to give us away like that."

A STORY is told in Wales of how, upon a certain occasion, a pack of hounds in full cry passed near a funeral [illegible] on its way to the cemetery and the music proved too much for one of the mounted mourners, who, forsaking the funeral procession, joined in the chase and was in [illegible], the breaking up of the fox being evidently [illegible] than the obsequies over the mortal remains of his friend.

AT the annual meeting of the Meadowbrook Hunt Club, held in New York on Tuesday of last week, Mr. Frank Gray Griswold was reëlected master for the ensuing year. The Secretary-Treasurer's report showed the club to be in a prosperous condition, and the following officers were elected: President, Colonel W. Jay; vice-president, Mr. Van R. Kennedy; secretary-treasurer, Mr. E. L. Winthrop.

AT Asheville, N. C., the splendid weather of the last week was broken up Friday by a strong southeast wind and heavy rain. The meet and barbecue of the Swannanoa Hunt Club, one of the sporting events of the season, was just in time to escape the deluge. Mrs. Crisp and the Speaker were the guests of the club and participated in the chase.

FOXHOUNDS are offered for sale this week by Mr. A. J. Higgins, Washington Mills, Ia.; No. 1131 N. Columbus Street, Lancaster, O.; Mr. W. R. Lanham, Cornland, Ill., and Messrs. Fleles & Bro., Christiana, Pa.

It is stated that over three thousand people were at the meet of the Quorn, the famous English pack, on Boxing Day, which in the United States is plain December 26.

Fish and Fishing

SHAD ON THE PACIFIC COAST

In the recent biennial report of the State Fish Commissioners of California, the statement was made that shad had propagated so numerously in the rivers emptying into the Pacific Coast of California that the market fishermen there had been obliged to restrict their catches to avoid overstocking the markets, especially as many people of that state have not yet learned the table value of this delicious fish.

In this connection it will be remembered that the late Mr. Seth Green, the eminent American fish-culturist, liberated in Pacific waters the first shad taken there, and a son of Mr. Green who now resides at Rochester, N. Y., has sent us the following interesting account of Mr. Seth Green's trip—as written some years ago by the latter gentleman himself—from the Hudson River to California with some 10,000 young shad:

On June 19, 1871, I started at 6 a. m. from Mull's Fishery, ten miles below Albany, on the Hudson River, with 12,000 young shad in four eight-gallon milk cans. They had been hatched the night before at the establishment under charge of the New York Commissioners. I arrived at Rochester at 10 p. m. and changed the water, substituting that of the Genesee River without injury to the shad. I arrived at Cleveland at 7:45 next morning, put 200 shad in Lake Erie and changed the water again. The fish were then fresh and lively, without any signs of sickness. I again changed the water at Toledo, and when I arrived at Chicago at 7 p. m. the fish were still in good order. There I first tried the water from the city water works, but found there was too much oil in it, so I went to the lake. Having tested the water and found it would answer, I put 200 fish in Lake Michigan, and on June 21 started with cans newly filled at 10:45 a. m. for California. I carried an extra can of water, for before me was a long stretch of almost arid land. Still I was fortunate enough to find some places between Chicago and Omaha where I could get a few pails of water and make a partial change. The fish were still in good order when we arrived at Omaha, where I could not find any water in which they would live five minutes. The way I tested the water was by filling a tumbler and putting a few fish in it; it was easy to see at once by the behavior of the fry whether the water agreed with them or not. I did not get a full change until I got to the Laramie River. From Omaha I did not find any good water for 400 miles, and the only way I kept my charges alive was by drawing the water out of the cans into the pails, and pouring it from one pail into another until purified, this process being assisted by my getting a little ice water from the car tanks.

June 22—Bad water all day, with the thermometer 100 degrees in the shade from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. I used ice water the entire day, a very little at a time, and had hard work to keep the temperature of the water below 82 degrees. I began to feel blue and doubtful of the result. The fish suffered considerably, but the weather began to be cold toward night, and I got the temperature of the water down to 75 degrees at 9 p. m., the fish recovering somewhat.

June 23—I arrived at Laramie River at 5 p. m. and got a good change of water, fish doing well, and I began once more to feel hopeful and encouraged. We had a frost that night, and next morning at 7 I changed water at Green River, where it was in proper condition. At 2 p. m. I got another cha[illegible] from a stream in which there were [illegible]n, where I put 200 fish in the [illegible]

June 26—I arrived at Sacramento and took the fish up the river 275 miles from Sacramento, in company with Messrs. Redding and Smith, the California fishery commissioners. In their presence I deposited the fish in the Sacramento River the same night at 10 p. m. There were about 10,000 in good order.

On the sixth and seventh days out they began to be very busy, looking for food. Whenever I changed the water they would clean up all the food there was in it in five minutes. They did not suffer for food as long as the sac lasted on their bellies—that is for about five days—then they needed sustenance. If I could get a change of water often enough from running streams, I could carry them a long way, as nearly all the streams are filled with small insects. With this view I examined the water of the Sacramento where I put them in and found plenty of food for the small fry. I then went down to the Pacific Ocean and ascertained that there were plenty of sand fleas, which are the principal food that the old shad live on in the Atlantic.

And now in conclusion I can only say that if they do not have shad in the Pacific Ocean there will be but one cause—the roily water caused by washing down the mountains for gold. However, I think the fish will get through all right. I examined the river where it looked so roily and found it quite clear a few inches down. The tendency of the roil was to settle to the bottom. The young shad will find the clear water and if it does not get very much worse than it was when I was there, they will succeed. But if these do not, more must be sent, for any amount of young fish can be taken to California by making the proper preparations beforehand.

THE REPORT OF THE WISCONSIN STATE FISH COMMISSIONERS

The recent report of the State Fish Commission of Wisconsin shows that in the year 1893, 58,326,050 fishes had been distributed and of these 1,615,000 were brook trout, 1,675,000 rainbow trout, 5,500,000 wall-eyed pike, 35,000,000 whitefish. During the year 1894 the Commissioners distributed 62,889,536 fishes, of which 3,765,000 were brook trout, 2,555,000 rainbow trout, 10,777,000 impregnated lake trout eggs and 36,000,000 whitefish. Still the demand for fish fry was greater than the facilities could supply, and the commissioners consider the establishment of another hatchery justifiable.

For the purposes of the commission a fish car, fifty-five feet in length and containing all the necessary appliances for the proper conveyance of fish fry and the comfort of the employes engaged in the work, has been constructed, at a cost of $5,000, that sum having been appropriated for the purpose by the legislature of 1893.

With the view of rendering the present fish laws more practical and effective, the commissioners suggested the following changes and amendments:

First—The entire subject of fish propagation, their protection and preservation in the waters of the state, should be committed to a single commission or board of officers, with power conferred upon them to appoint and remove fish and game wardens and deputies, and assign their field and scope of duties.

Second—The penal laws should be so changed as to be more effective and to remove all technicalities from prosecution.

Third—The whole mass of legislation, both general and local, should be revised and consolidated under one act, and specially separated and published with suitable forms of prosecution of cases appended.

Fourth—The power now nominally given to the commissioners of fisheries (by section 13, chapter 307, laws 1893), for the closing of streams recently planted, should be made practical by providing a method by which such closing can be promulgated and made operative.

Fifth—County boards should be given the power to appoint fish and game wardens in their respective counties to protect the waters thereof, in coöperation with state authorities.

Sixth—More effective provisions should be made to secure the stripping and milting and planting of fish spawn caught by fishermen in nets during spawning season, under the supervision of deputy wardens.

The fact that anglers and sportsmen from other states annually leave, in the aggregate, a large sum of money in the state is cited, the deduction being that interests of so great value to the commonwealth should be amply fostered and protected.

NOTES

IN a letter recently received from Mr. E. H. Wakeman, the genial attorney-sportsman of San Francisco, he says: "Shooting is knocked out pro tem. on account of the severe storm which has prevailed the past two weeks. Today (January 5) is clear and bright; the weather changing with the new moon, the probability is that we will have sunshine throughout January. Christmas Day I went salmon fishing, but so far as results were concerned I might as well have adopted "Simple Simon's" method. Streams are banks full and running over, and with clear weather it will be at least two weeks before anything can be done successfully in that line, when I intend going to Monterey and fish the beautiful Carmel River, and if I don't turn a couple of dozen big fellows 'belly up,' I'll never venture another prediction. As we turn the corner of the new year we feel that fishing is nearly at hand and look for April with increasing interest. Shaim Roos, Mansfield and the rest of us are on the anxious seat, growing more and more nervous as we approach the coveted season less than three months hence. Just think of it! My! how my mouth waters already for some of those three and four pounders. I'm going to 'plow in deep' this year. Have found a lake better even than the celebrated White Rock, and more than 10,000 feet above sea level, where there are more trout than in any other five lakes in this state. The trip involves a pack of ninety miles, over peaks of perpetual snow, but a friend of mine who made it last year says it pays when you get there."

AT the recent annual meeting in Philadelphia of the Pennsylvania Fish Protective Association, a strong protest was made against the proposed erection of a dam across the Susquehanna River at Conowingo, in Maryland. It seems the Baltimore Electrical Company has obtained a charter from the state of Maryland to build such a dam, and intends applying for the same privilege to Pennsylvania. The members of the association hold that the construction of such a dam would ruin the shad and other fishing interest of the lower river. Mr Henry C. Ford, president of the State Fish Commission, went to Harrisburg to protest against the granting of a charter to that company. The following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing year: President, H. O. Wilbur; vice-presidents, Edwin Hagert, Dr. Bushrod W. James and Howard A. Chase; secretary, Marion G. Sellers; corresponding secretary, J. Penrose Collins; treasurer, William S. Hergesheimer; executive committee, Henry C. Ford, George T. Stokes, C. H. Fitzgerald, William P. Thompson, J. R. Sypher, Colonel John Gay, Henry A. Ingram, F. W. Brown, Dr. W. W. McClure; trustees, one year, Collins W. Walton; two years, Bernard L. Douredoure; three years, R. M. Hartley.

THE Minnesota Senate and House committees on game and fish paid a visit to the state hatchery for the purpose of inspection on January 25. Representative Ferris, who is secretary of the State Commission, Commissioner Andrus and Superintendent of Hatchery Watkins accompanied the party of Solons and demonstrated the processes of fish-culture. The party was well pleased with the progress of the work, but the members unanimously concluded that the state should not only acquire a title to the six acres of ground now leased but should purchase the adjoining twenty acres. With that acquisition the state would have ample facilities—an abundant supply of spring water, and other advantages—for carrying on the needed piscatorial work for some time to come. There is now a bill before the legislature providing for the purchase of the property and for increasing the capacity of the hatchery. If this bill becomes a law the State Game and Fish Commissioners will be enabled to breed sufficient spawn to stock the waters of the state and thereby not only provide food for its inhabitants, but harmless and healthful amusement.

ON January 25, the New York State Commissioners of Fisheries appointed Mr. James Annin Jr., of Caledonia, General Superintendent of State Hatcheries, at a salary of $2,500 per annum. Mr. Annin has had twenty-four years' experience in fish-hatching, and is the proprietor of the Caledonia and Randolph trout ponds. The United States Fish Commission formerly engaged him as an expert to pack eggs for foreign shipment, and in 1880 the Berlin exposition awarded him a diploma for his exhibit there. Mr. Annin was strongly indorsed for his position by Mr. Eugene G. Blackford; Frank J. Amsden of Rochester, president of the State Association for the Protection of Fish and Game; William Hamilton of Caledonia, Senator Parsons of Rochester, and many others throughout the state. Last week fishermen at Port Ewen, on the Hudson, caught large numbers of tomcods, fishes which never have been taken before above New Hamburg, where the water is brackish. It is said a wagon-load was taken by one man in a single day.

AT Augusta, Me., State Fish and Game Commissioners Wentworth and Stanley recently held a consultation as to the distribution of the fish spawn now at the various state hatcheries. In the hatchery at Auburn there are 1,100,000 trout eggs, one-half of which will be transported to different hatcheries throughout the state, thus dividing up the work of hatching and feeding. As the hatchery at Auburn is the largest and has the greatest facilities, the major portion of the trout eggs will remain there to be hatched out and reared to a planting age. There are 200,000 trout eggs at the Swan Lake Hatchery, which will remain there as they are the property of the association which controls all fish-cultural matters there, and the fry will be placed in Swan Lake, whence the fishes furnishing the spawn were taken. When February opens, the law of Maine will permit citizens of that state to catch fifty pounds of fish for home consumption, but none can be sold in the markets, neither can residents of other states fish legally.

CALIFORNIA anglers have had their Winter sport of steelhead fishing badly handicapped by high water resulting from the almost incessant rainstorms which have prevailed. On January 13 a number of anglers were at Point Reyes, and a fair catch of small fishes running from twelve ounces to one pound were taken. A report received later, at San Francisco, stated that on January 15 one lucky angler took a ten-pound steelhead, says the Chronicle of that city. A large lot of young salmon hatched last season, some 8,000,000, have been released from the nursery ponds at Sisson. It is said that the batch of Loch Leven trout imported not long since are prospering finely.

Upon Lake Champlain, in New York, the Winter anglers are having better success than for many past ice-fishing seasons. The mode of fishing is the use of tip-ups, the hooks being baited with live minnows, which are extraordinarily abundant in all the streams debouching into the lake. Great numbers of large pickerel and yellow perch have been taken lately at many points along the lake, and the fishes average of good size at most places. The local anglers and guides claim the signs indicate a magnificent run of bass, wall-eyed pike and big pickerel during the coming fishing season, and better luck is anticipated than for many past years.

On January 22, the Newark (N. J.) Fishing Club was organized, and arrangements were made to charter a large tug with which to make bi-monthly excursions to the sea during the coming fishing season. Officers were elected as follows: President, H. Tegen; vice-president, W. Kriesmer; treasurer, Frederick Schultz; secretary, Frank Dubois; sergeant-at arms, Jos. Schliger.

THE REPTILES OF MICHIGAN—NO. 2

BY MORRIS GIBBS

Ringnecked snake—Diadophis punctatus (Linn.).—A pretty little species, growing, I am informed, to a length of twenty inches or more, although I have never met with any which was more than eighteen inches long, and most of them are under twelve inches. The ringneck has upper parts of a glossy plumbeous, with a purplish hue. The under parts are bright orange, with a collar of the same, only lighter, or white, just back of the head. By this distinguishing mark alone it may be readily recognized. I have only taken ringnecks in low land and near water. One which I kept alive was confined in a bottle which was stoppered with a cork, through which a hole had been drilled for the purpose of supplying fresh air. This perforation was of a caliber to permit the little snake to project several inches of her head and body on the outside, a privilege of which she often availed herself. One day I failed to find her in the quarters, but on the bottom of the bottle was a single elliptical, shining white egg, remarkably large for the size of the snake. The reduction in the diameter of the body had been sufficient to permit the animal to escape. This snake has a very offensive smell. Several species of Michigan snakes are the possessors of very disagreeable odors, and these smells are quite characteristic of the species and could be used as identifying means by a capable herpetologist even if blindfolded. The ringneck is a harmless species, feeding on insects it finds beneath bark and around decayed wood. This form of the ringneck is distributed from Nova Scotia to Georgia and the Mississippi Valley, thus having a wide range.

Smooth green-snake; grass-snake—Cyclophis vernalis (De Kay).—Well distributed in the state in moist places, but never abundant within our boundaries. More often found in May and June, when it is occasionally seen wriggling through the grass on low land and generally near to wooded tracts. This harmless, attractive snake is known to grow to a length of two feet, but is usually found at less than eighteen inches. It rarely offers to bite, and is not able to even scratch the skin when it tries, yet it is credited with the most venomous powers by the ignorant persons who have a marvelous tale for each creature of the woods and fields. Its powers of concealment in the grass are good, and it is a wise provision which enables it to use its protective coloring, as it is a delicate, defenseless creature. This little snake is my favorite among this class of creatures against whom the hand of mankind is almost universally lifted. It is fair to say that the little green snake is one of the most beautiful creatures found in the Great Lake Region, and anyone not prejudiced will agree with this assertion after a careful examination.

Fairest of creatures ever seen,
My friend, if you can curb the spleen
  Which rises at the sight upon
    My palm, as o'er my hand it plays,
    And through my fingers in a blaze
Of brilliant-tinted, flashing green,
  The graceful creature is seen to run,
In active coils of dazzling sheen.
Do not despise its glistening eyes;
  Its active form, so trim and free.
Symmetry of shape no one denies,
Nor elegance of graceful poise;
  For from a base nonentity,
Now view its head, again, a scale,
Lapped o'er the next like coat of mail;
Armored beauty from head to tail.

Farther south there is another species of green-snake which much resembles this one to the eyes of the ordinary observer. The more southern species, distinguished by the name of "rough green-snake," is not found in Michigan to my knowledge.

The grass-snake is an active fellow and feeds on insects. It is oviparous. Found from Nova Scotia to Wyoming, and southwest to New Mexico.

De Kay's snake; little brown-snake—Storeria de Kayi (Holb.). A few words of explanation concerning descriptions of reptiles are necessary, as the means of identifying species are thereby simplified, though it is not essential to enter into details. Serpents are classified in reference to their arrangement of plates on the head, number of rows of scales down the back, etc., rather than by the colors. When snakes have been in alcohol for years they lose their colors, still a herpetologist can readily identify them by these distinguishing marks. If my readers will examine different kinds of snakes it will be found that the number of rows of scales on the upper parts differs greatly. The number of cross plates or scales on the under parts, counting from the head to the vent, also differs. These scutes, as they are called, vary greatly in the different species. The number of scutes in the tail is another point; and still another is the last abdominal scute, which is often entire and again divided.

The little brown-snake is of a brown or chestnut above, with a narrow clay-colored stripe running along the back. There is a row of dark spots each side of the central stripe, and generally other spots or dots on the sides. The tail is short in this species, being only one-fifth the total length. There are seventeen rows of scales on the upper parts. The under parts are of a decided reddish-brown, and sometimes almost salmon-colored.

I have never yet found this species on high sandy soil, in fact, few species of snakes are taken in such localities. Neither have I taken De Kay's snake in the water; but it is said to have been found swimming. All the specimens that have been seen by me were in meadows or in the grass at the roadside. Their plain colors prevent their being seen, and very few persons have met with this harmless little snake, which rarely grows to more than fourteen inches in length and generally not over a foot. They are insect-feeders and undoubtedly beneficial as with many others of our American serpents. Quite common at times, they are again very rare. One season, I believe in 1874, I met with a dozen specimens in the Spring and Summer, and then did not see an individual for two years. My earliest Spring record for this species is April 14, and the latest October 16. Distributed from Maine to the Mississippi Valley, south to the Gulf and to Mexico.

NATURAL HISTORY AND RATTLESNAKES

Nashville, Tenn.

Editor American Field:—The writer was greatly surprised at the communication in the American Field of January 19, headed "Something New Regarding Rattlesnakes."

I have taken much interest in the rattlesnake for more than forty years. Over fifty years ago, when traveling along the Shawangunk Mountains in Ulster County, New York, also visiting Snake Hill, near Newburg, and Butter Hill, south of Cornwall, on the classic Hudson in Orange County, and the continuing chain of mountains through Rockland County to Ramapo, thence into New Jersey, where these reptiles at that time were in great abundance, I watched them at various times and under various circumstances or surroundings, and talked with many of the citizens in regard to their habits at all seasons of the year. Since then I have been in Florida, Texas, California, Arizona and the border of Mexico, and everywhere I interested myself in like manner, asking questions of and talking to the people on this subject.

In all my experience and intercourse with different individuals accustomed to see these snakes from early Spring till the leaves began to fall in the Autumn, I did not hear a single person claim the rattlesnake was an egg-producing reptile. On the contrary they claimed to have never seen or found an egg which was the product of these dangerous creatures.

In after years, on coming to Tennessee, I continued my interest in this species of snake, procuring specimens as occasion offered, keeping them in a box or boxes with glass face so as to watch their habits. While spending the Summer in the Cumberland Mountains, about twenty years ago, I procured at various times live specimens of the rattlesnake from the inhabitants and dissected them; first, the head, so as to study its structure—the seat of the poison sac, its connection with the fangs, the structure of the upper jaw, the connection of the fangs therewith, and their identity, or, rather, non-connection with the other teeth of this reptile. After repeated experiments by dissection I became satisfied that [illegible] knowledge of the structural organism [illegible] species of snake that has not been rev[illegible] ist-historian I have had the pleasure [illegible]

Then I turned my attention to th[illegible] of reproduction. I employed a mountaineer to procure two specimens of this species—a male and female—during the latter part of June or in July. In a few days he brought one of each gender. They were dissected for the purpose of ascertaining with certainty whether or not the rattlesnake, crotalus horridus, was viviparous or oviparous. On opening the female I found the organism perfect for the production of her young as other viviparous creatures, and took from her seven perfectly formed young live snakes, each from six to eight inches in length, each coiled and inclosed in its individual sac of fluid, having its individual placenta. The eyes were not fully developed or open, and I concluded from their general appearance that gestation would have been completed within the next ten days. I found nothing indicating an ovarian organism, as found in egg-producing creatures.

I respectfully ask Professor Baker and Curator O. P. Hay, referred to in the American Field of above date, if either of them has ever captured any of the many species of the crotalidæ and dissected them in a practical manner, and acquired the knowledge upon which to found the statements attributed to them, or did they accept the theories and hearsay of inexperienced talkers?

I have seen hundreds of snakes' eggs, and have taken some of them from the nests or burrows where the female had deposited them and placed them in sand or dry muck, in a sheltered place subject to the sun's rays, where they hatched, but they were the eggs of other snakes than the rattler. In all my life I have never seen or heard of an egg being found that when hatched produced a rattlesnake, certainly not the crotalus horridus.

Will Mr. De Vry, the chief animal trainer, please tell the readers of the American Field how, when and where he gained the information that "all well regulated rattlesnakes, you know, lay eggs in the sand from which the young are hatched after six weeks' incubation," as he was quoted in that article?

Again, Prof. Baker is quoted as saying, "I have never seen or even heard of a case where a rattler laid its eggs in captivity." No, nor any other person, but there are many instances where the female rattlesnake has brought forth her young while in captivity. An instance of this character took place in this city several years ago, in the drug store of Mr. Nat F. Dortch, now one of our prominent merchants.

Again, Prof. Baker was reported as saying, "In the second place, though some snakes are ovoviviparous the rattlesnake is not." Upon what experimental or other information, or authority did he make this assertion? Wood, the naturalist, and various encyclopedias say the rattlesnake is viviparous and some of them say "they exhibit attachment to their young."

I am not seeking a controversy with these gentlemen, but I feel that what they were reported to have said in the premises is so utterly misleading and at variance with actually ascertained truths, that it should not remain unchallenged and left to go down as historical fact, for future reference.

I would further ask the Professor, Curator, or Mr. Kuhns if they or either of them have or has dissected a rattlesnake and examined and investigated its circulatory and digestive organism from a scientific standpoint and experimental feeding; if so, what conclusion was arrived at?

Amicus.

SKETCHES OF ALASKA AND THE PACIFIC COAST—NO. 2

BY A. K. DELANEY

After leaving Livingston the train crawls slowly along the mountain sides, and the scenery becomes surpassingly grand. On one side the peaks and crags still tower; on the other enormous abysses yawn, along whose almost perpendicular sides the train seems to be clinging and creeping. Some of the scenery bears a resemblance to parts in the Alleghanies over the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, but on a far greater and grander scale. One also begins to meet with those specimens of engineering and mechanical skill in construction that are alike startling and wonderful. Not far west of Livingston the road crosses a cañon over a trestle work three hundred feet above the bottom of the cañon and nearly two miles long. I do not recall any scene, upon which my eyes have ever rested, more charming than the view I obtained from this trestle on my third trip across the continent last Summer. The cañon opens into a broad, large basin, containing several thousands of acres, above which the mountains rise until they are snow-capped; but [illegible] bottom of the basin and far up the curves a[illegible] the mountains was spread a carpet of bright, [illegible] dure, upon which thousands of sleek round ca[illegible] feeding; all bathed in the glowing sunlight of [illegible] afternoon.

The slow, heavy climb continues until the Bozeman Tunnel is reached, nearly fifty-six hundred feet above the level of the sea, where the first crest of the range is crossed. From this summit there is a descent of about fifteen hundred feet to the plateau upon which Townsend and Helena are located. The darkness was intense when we reached Helena, but the tinkle of street car bells and the glare of electric lights gave token that progress had been born when we had crossed over the crest of the Rockies and were at the capital of the great territory of mountains and plateaus—soon afterward a state.

From Helena there is another heavy ascent to Mullan, where the second summit is crossed. The western bound train usually passes this point in the night; but, on recrossing the continent, last Summer, I was fortunate enough to obtain a view from the crest of the pass. The tunnel being out of repair, the train was taken over the summit by the aid of a monster mogul locomotive, at an altitude of nearly fifty-nine hundred feet above the level of the sea. Evidences of the tremendous convulsions of Nature which some day have uplifted the great chain of the continent are there everywhere visible, and the scenery is sufficiently wild and rugged to satisfy the most exacting. Peak rises above peak, clad in perennial snow, while below the earth's crust is rent with many a monster "seam and gash." Just before the train entered she eastern mouth of the tunnel a long series of curves—describing a most perfect letter S—were passed, and the track, in its serpentine windings along the rise, was visible the full length of this letter from either its top or bottom. After this followed a series of trestles, and with a long sweeping curve around and up the mountain-side the train plunged into the tunned. Looking eastward from this curve the huge gorge along which we had been winding lay far beneath, and one hundred miles away to the northeast, across the valley of the Gallatin, where the Missouri finds its headwaters by the junction of the Gallatin with the Jefferson and the Madison, the Belt Range of the Rockies was silhouetted against the blue sky. Grandly conspicuous amid this belt towered a smooth, round-topped mountain of enormous proportions, which is known far and near as "Old Baldy."

From the crest of the Mullan Pass there is a descent of fifteen hundred and sixty feet to Garrison, where the train again finds the general level of the tablelands of the range. A short distance west of Garrison is Gold Creek, famous as the spot where the last spike of the great transcontinental line was driven, binding St. Paul and the Mississippi to Portland and the Columbia. Not far beyond this we struck the Upper Cañon of Clark's Fork—an enormous chasm—at the bottom of which the waters of the stream, now plunging into foamy cascades, now eddying in deep green pools, seek the Pacific. Along this cañon the railway winds until the valley of the Missoula, a broad and fertile plateau, bounded on every side by the peaks of the range, suddenly bursts into view.

Nestled on this plateau, we found the city of Missoula, a bright and promising town just then making rapid progress under the impulse of a "real estate boom." Crossing this basin, the train again entered the Cañon of Clark's Fork, which it followed with many a curve, the rocky and precipitous walls of the cañon rising on either side all along the way.

On the third day out from St. Paul a most delightful change from the rugged mountain scenery was afforded in Lake Pend d'Oreille, situated in the Pan Handle of Idaho and nestling like a great gem among the Cœur d'Alene Mountains. It is an exceptionally beautiful sheet of water, and while the train follows its shores for a long distance some enchanting views are offered, as the lake sweeps with many a graceful curve round the bold bases of the mountains.

Passing out of the Cœur d'Alenes the train crossed into Washington and entered the valley of the Spokane River, by far the most attractive and beautiful country west of the rolling prairies of Minnesota. A few minutes' halt was made at Spokane Falls, situated on the cataract of that name, fifteen hundred and thirty-seven miles from St. Paul. The valley is broad and roomy, the mountain belts on either side being widely separated. The soil is fertile, and fruits and grains are grown; timber is abundant near by; some miles to the north is a valuable mineral belt and the waterpower rivals that of Minneapolis. Hence, taking everthing into the account, there is little room to doubt that Spokane Falls is destined to be the largest and most important city between the Mississippi and Portland.

Toward evening of the third day the train reached the valley of the Snake River, and at Pasco Junction the road strikes the Columbia. Darkness was just coming on when we crossed the Snake, a broad, heavy stream, near its junction with the Columbia, and on the morning of the fourth day we were following the latter stream as it breaks through the Cascades, amid scenery that is justly far-famed. The roadbed follows the river, hugging perpendicular walls of rock on one side; on the other flows the broad, majestic river.

In its general outlines the scenery is much like that of the Dells of the Wisconsin River, near Kilbourn City, but far surpasses that in magnitude. The sweep of the mighty river is majesty itself. Colossal buttes rise out of the stream, hundreds of feet in height, their lofty crests plumed with evergreens. In many places perpendicular abutments rise from the brink of the stream thousands of feet, here and there scarred by huge caverns and crevasses. By way of beauty, near Multnomah, in Oregon, a gauzy waterfall several hundred feet long drops down the perpendicular wall close to the train, and has been appropriately christened the "Bridal Veil." For nearly a hundred miles this gigantic panorama is on exhibition, presenting scenes of grandeur unsurpassed on earth, and Portland is reached, at the confluence of the Willamette with the Columbia, nineteen hundred and thirteen miles from St. Paul.

Pasco Junction, near the confluence of the Snake and the Columbia, is located on a large, sandy, sterile plain, whose chief products appear to be sagebrush and a low, stunted undergrowth. The Cascade division commences there, and after crossing the Columbia enters the Yakima Valley, whose general characteristics for a long distance are similar to those of the region about Pasco, where mile after mile is passed without sight of human habitation. Toward the upper end of the Yakima Valley, however, ranches occur with the returning [illegible] which forests of pine are entered [illegible] Cascades begins. The scenery there [illegible] the Rockies. Indeed there is [illegible] massive and rugged characteristics peculiar to the great continental range. The forests extend far up the mountain sides, in fact, in many places to the very crests of the range. Previous to the Summer of 1888 the passage over the Cascades was made by the "switchback," which is a marvel of railway construction. At one point in the ascent, four tracks are visible down the mountain, one above the other, along which the train zigzags in ascending and descending to and from the crest. The Stampede Tunnel is now completed, and is several hundreds of feet longer than the Bozeman or the Mullan. Its western mouth opens into a veritable wilderness, where the timber growth is the most dense I have ever seen. The cañon of Green River, down which the train makes its way to the level lands, is a "deep tangled wildwood" through which the dark green waters of the stream are occasionally visible, and in the stream myriads of speckled beauties sport undisturbed the livelong year.

The level lands, between the Cascades and the shores of Puget Sound, are settling up quite rapidly, and in the region of Puyallup, hop yards covering extensive tracts are not infrequent, after which the train sweeps round the southern shores of Commencement Bay and the ride of nineteen hundred and eleven miles, from the Mississippi to Pugent Sound, terminates at the depot located on the principal business street of Tacoma, fondly christened by its devotees "the City of Destiny."

An approximately correct idea of the contour of the continent from the Mississippi to the Pacific may be drawn from the profile of the road. Just west of Minneapolis, which is eight hundred and forty-two feet above the sea level, the altitude of one thousand feet is reached, and the general level of the prairies of Minnesota and North Dakota is but little above this until the Missouri is crossed, when, near Richardton, a distance of about five hundred miles from St. Paul, the two-thousand-feet level is reached. Near Billings, west of the Big Horn River and well up the Yellowstone Valley, the elevation of three thousand feet is reached, at a distance of about nine hundred miles from the Mississippi. The next rise is more rapid, as a distance of ninety-five miles from Billings to Springdale, or a round thousand from St. Paul, brings us to the four-thousand-feet level, and upon the great table or plateau which is essentially the pedestal upon which rests the great continental range.

The first or easterly chain of this range is crossed by the Bozeman Tunnel, at an altitude of over fifty-five hundred feet, when the top of the great table is reached again in the Gallatin Valley in which Bozeman, Townsend and Helena are located.

The second or westerly chain is crossed by the Mullan Tunnel, at an elevation about the same as the Bozeman, after which the level of the table is again found in the valley where Clark's Fork has its headwaters and upon which Garrison and Drummond are situated. The four-thousand-feet table terminates at Drummond, and descending the western slope the altitude of three thousand feet is found in the valley of the Missoula, about fifty miles farther west, and the two-thousand-feet level is near Heron in the plateau of the Cœur d'Alenes.

From this point, through the valley of the Spokane River to the great plains of the Snake and Columbia, a distance of about two hundred miles, the descent is made to the altitude of one thousand feet and thence by an easy grade down the latter stream, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles, to Portland, thirty feet above tidewater.

From the plains of the Columbia over the Cascade division the altitude of two thousand feet is again reached at Easton, situated at the foot of the Cascade Range and at a distance of one hundred and sixty-five miles from Pasco Junction, up the valley of the Yakima River. The crest of the Cascade chain is passed between Easton and Weston, a distance of eighteen miles, at an elevation of about four thousand feet, by the Stampede Pass, and twenty-nine hundred feet by the tunnel, and from Weston the train descends from the two-thousand-feet level, in a distance of seventy-one miles, to the Tacoma depot, which is thirty-one feet above the sea level. While the Cascade chain presents some magnificent peaks, the stupendous magnitude of the Rocky Range is brought into bold belief by a comparison with the Cascades. The latter stand upon a table of two thousand feet altitude, which by the line of the road is eighteen miles across, while the former rest upon a plateau which reaches an elevation of four thousand feet, and, from Springdale to Drummond, measures over two hundred miles in with. The summit of the Cascades, at the Stampede Pass, is just about the altitude of the Rocky plateau, and falls over fifteen hundred feet below the Bozeman and Mullan tunnels, and nearly nineteen hundred feet below the summit of the Rockies at the Mullan Pass, so that, if Mounts Helen, Hood, Baker and especially Rainier's lofty cone were eliminated from the Cascades, that chain might be dropped into the Rockies and be totally lost to view.

NOTES

At a meeting of the officers of the Sportsmen's Exposition Association, held in New York, January 8, it was decided to incorporate. Accordingly the necessary formalities were concluded, and the association was incorporated by the state of New York as the Sportsmen's Association. The objects or purposes of the new corporation are the study of field sports and the holding of expositions promotive of the same, the establishment of headquarters in New York City, where all persons interested in field sports can assemble, and, incidentally, to found a sportsmen's library at the headquarters for the use of members and visitors. The general office will be located in New York City. The incorporators were Messrs. Charles Daly, John S. Wise, J. A. H. Dressel, Jacob H. Studer, Frederic S. Webster. The trustees for the first year are Messrs Charles Tatham, Charles Daly, Frederic S. Webster, J. A. H. Dressel, J. Von Longerke, John S. Wise, Jacob H. Studer, Archibald Rogers. The first annual trades' convention of the Sportmen's Association will be held May 16, during the week of the Sportsmen's Exposition, at New York City.

We have received from Mr. Geo. McKerow, superintendent of the Farmers' Institutes of the University of Wisconsin, a neatly bound volume of the Farm Institute Bulletin No. 8. The work contains verbatim reports of the sessions of the institute, lectures, papers read and the discussions upon the various farm topics under consideration, and is illustrated by portraits of the instructors, and plates depicting typical farm animals, some of them noted prize winners, and counterparts of the various buildings. The subjects forming the contents are indexed alphabetically to enable one to readily find any desired topic, and as a book of reference for the progressive farmer the work appears to possess enviable value.

On the afternoon of Saturday, January 26, the executive committee of the Washington Park Club held a meeting at the Wellington Hotel, Chicago, and formally declared off all its stakes for the season of 1895. This action seems to finally settle the mooted question of a race meeting at Washington Park in 1895. This action was fully decided upon last October, but the official announcement had not been made. Although no reason is assigned by the club's officials for its action, there seems to be a general opinion that, as the law of Illinois which allowed pool selling upon race tracks has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of that state, the club has been prudent to suspend racing.

U. S. F. T. CLUB'S WINTER TRIALS

These trials of the United States Field Trial Club began at West Point, Miss., the afternoon of January 21, a hard rain preventing an earlier start. The grounds have proved the equal, if not the superior, of any in the country, and in the ordinary season would prove better than they are now, as the past wet season has made the growth heavier than for years; yet it does not prove troublesome on but a small section of the grounds. The judges and spectators can readily see the dogs in their work. There is an abundance of birds and thirty bevies can be found readily, notwithstanding late starts and an hour or so more of time consumed at lunch. The attendance daily has been good and many sportsmen are witnessing the trials—a number for the first time. The attendance of handlers is perhaps the largest that has ever been at a trial. A day and a half have been lost by rain—half Monday and all Friday. Most of those present were given in dispatches last week. The handlers present were Avent, Stafford, Rose, Nesbitt, White, Mayfield, Johnson, Titus, Richards, Gray, Purcell, Buckle, Blankenbaker, McGrew, Lewis, Bond, Gilliam and Howse, eighteen in all. The judges were Mr. J. M. Freeman of Bicknell, Ind., Maj. J. M. Taylor of New York, and St. Marc Mundy of Louisville, Ky., who takes the place of Mr. Royal Robinson; and Mr. W. W. Titus judged in the All-Age Pointer Stakes in place of Mr. Mundy, who declined to judge owing to an article written recently by him in the pointer controversy regarding a match.

The accommodations were good except in conveyances for dogs to and from grounds, the handlers complaining they are not satisfactory, as many are without springs; yet the grounds and roads are soft and the wagons might be worse. The weather, with the exception of that noted, was all that could be desired. The lunches sent out, with the exception of the first day, were entirely satisfactory. It will be noticed in the summary that the series of running were principally confined to two, the judges adopting the plan of running, even in the second series, about one trial which enabled them to more thoroughly test the dogs than by running a shorter time and oftener.

THE POINTER DERBY

This stake had nine starters, and, owing to the condition of the ground, it being wet, it no doubt affected to some extent the work of the entries, as the birds were hard to locate on account of their running so much. A hard rain on Monday morning postponed the commencement of the trials until 1:30 p. m. From that time until 5:08, when the trials for the day closed, fifteen bevies of birds were found, showing there were plenty of birds. The summary shows the order of the running of the dogs.

DELHI—RODERICK T.—The Charlottesville Field Trial Kennel's liver and white dog Delhi, by Rip Rap—Queen II, handled by C. E. Buckle, and T. L. Tinsley's liver and white dog Roderick T, by Dash Ranger R Jr—Fanny Kennerly, handled by George Richards, were put down at 1:30. Both dogs started in good form but before their trial was concluded Delhi had proved himself the best in speed, range and nose. He was not so obedient and not under as good control as Roderick T. Roderick seemed entirely off in nose, or was doing some willful flushing. He first flushed a bevy, two or three birds going up first and the balance following from where he was found on the ground. A short cast was made for the scattered birds, but none found by the dogs. Changing direction and getting into a beautiful place for birds Mr. Buckle flushed a bevy. Forty yards beyond Delhi pointed on footscent, or the birds had run from him, as they flushed wild without his knowledge. Nothing being raised by him, Delhi was sent on, when with high head he drew at once to the point they flushed from. In meantime Roderick T, just back of him, pointed and a single was put up. Crossing the fence two birds raised before him; a point was claimed, but he had flushed them. When sent on to find the birds flushed by Mr. Buckle only one bird was raised. Passing back into one of the fields where the birds from Delhi's point were seen to settle none were found. Crossing the fence into the field where the first bevy was flushed by Roderick, he soon flushed a single, and about one hundred yards away he repeated it; and before he left the field he added three more flushes to his score. Crossing to woods ahead, where Delhi had pointed, he flushed another. Delhi, before he made above point, had made a flush and a point in the field just back of him. The dogs had now run until 2:15, when they were ordered up. Roderick T was a diligent hunter but he destroyed his chances by his constant flushing. Delhi proved his superiority in every way.

TIPPOO—TAMARACK JR.—At 2:21 the Charlottesville Field Trial Kennel's liver and white dog Tippoo, by Rip Rap—Monterey, handled by C. E. Buckle, and H. K. Devereux's liver and white dog Tamarack Jr, by Tamarack—Maud Graphic, handled by G. E. Gray, were sent away on good ground, except a little too heavy in cover. Tamarack while moving fast had a bird to flush near him, but wheeling to right afterward he pointed stanchly. Gray was some distance away, but Tamarack held his point well until he came. After a few birds raised he started off quickly, but had only made two or three jumps when he wheeled nearly round to another good point. A single bird was put up. Moving on he roaded about twenty yards away and pointed again, when the largest part of the bevy was put up. Moving on now to the right Tippoo was missed. In heavy grass some birds were put up and a bevy was there and scattered, either from being put up or feeding. After some birds were put up Tippoo was soon found moving around, and the inference was he had been pointing. After hunting over considerable ground Tamarack near edge of plum thicket pointed, as it proved, on footscent where a bevy had left thicket for feeding in the open. Tippoo, coming in from the right with wind directly in his favor, scented the birds and soon drew to a good point. Tamarack in meantime had been sent on and quickly roaded, mostly down wind, to the point where Tippoo was on point. He deserved credit for his good work. A few birds were raised. Tippoo a little unsteady. Sent on Tippoo roaded to a point on single bird. A short run now and the brace was ordered up; time, 3:10. Tippoo was best in range; speed about equal. Tamarack under best control.

LAD'S LADY—STANCH GEORGE.—L. W. Blankenbaker's liver and white bitch Lad's Lady, by Lad of Rush—Lady Margaret, handled by owner, and Maj. J. R. Purcell's black and white dog Stanch George, by Lad of Rush—Lady Margaret, handled by owner, were sent off at 3:15. This brace, litter sister and brother, did not start fast, and only at short intervals in open ground did they show much pace. There was quite a sharp run before any birds were found—Lady in meantime scoring a false point—when George, nearly down wind, flushed a bevy. A single bird remained, but George flushed it too with wind in favor. A run was now had through fairly good ground toward where a bevy had been marked down. Lady, nearing the point, pointed on footscent near edge of road and George backed. Nothing was raised and dogs sent on. George flushed them near by and chased, Lady making a little break in same direction. Lad's Lady was in use, but it was unknown to the judges at the start and to a part of them until near close of the run. In the evening, at the hotel, Major Purcell claimed that the condition of the bitch interfered with the running of his dog. It was certainly not palpable enough to call the attention of the judges, nothing having been said about it. However, not wishing to do him injustice, his dog will be taken out and be put down again if there is seemingly any chance for him. Lad's Lady's condition must have seriously handicapped her, as she was not in form previously shown. The brace was ordered up at 3:16.

HEMPSTEAD DON—REX FAST.—Hempstead Farm's liver and white dog Hempstead Don, by Sanford Druid—Merrylegs, handled by J. M. Avent, and W. B. Stafford's liver and white dog Rex Fast, by Rex—Mousey, handled by owner, were put down at 3:51. After ten minutes' run or more Don pointed, but he proved to be up wind from the bevy—a large one. Mr. Avent, in going to him, flushed the birds near. The bevy was not followed. Moving on, Don, near by, commenced roading again, and, stopping to point, he was again on wrong side to get advantage of wind; moving and stopping again the birds rose a little to one side of him. Following this bevy Rex was first to find the scattered birds and pointed a bird that was hard to raise, though almost under Stafford's feet. Sent on, Don was roading and about to establish a point, when two birds flushed ahead of Rex, now near Don. Rex, near by, again pointed a single, and was inclined to unsteadiness on flush of the bird by Stafford. Passing now through woods—a good place—without finding to open ground beyond, Don pointed a bevy, Rex backing. Both steady to flush. Sent on, Don first found and pointed a single. Sent on, he was roading and pointing, when Rex swung in ahead and located the bird. The dogs were now ordered up; time, 4:30.

LOVE'S KENT, a bye.—W. I. Love's black and white pointer dog Love's Kent, by Kent Elgin—Mack's Juno, handled by J. M. Avent, was started alone to run a bye at 4:36, and whether from running alone or not, he only showed moderate range and speed. After running a short time Mr. Avent was inclined to have him taken up. Toward the close of his trial he found a bevy of birds and his work then improved. His point work along a hedge, which did not entail hard work in finding, was clean and good. Later another trial was given him in company to see the effect of it. This ended the work for the day, at 5:05 p. m., and it concluded the work in the first series.

TUESDAY

The day was beautiful and bright, with the necessary features for a perfect field trial day. The start was a late one, as the drawing for the Setter Derby was postponed from the evening before to allow Mr. Tucker to be present, if coming, but he did not arrive. The first brace in the continued Pointer Derby was put down nearly five miles from town.

SECOND SERIES

DELHI—TAMARACK JR.—It was ten minutes past nine when they were put down in open ground with little cover and here and there a plum thicket, but fifteen minutes later they were on better ground and Delhi drew up on a fine point, Tamarack backing; both steady to flush. The bevy was followed. Delhi soon made a point, and a little later a second one, which was followed by one by Tamarack, but no birds could be put up from either dog. After roading a while the scent was given up. Returning to the field again, the dogs were doing some pretty work on one section of the ground when a bevy was flushed by horsemen. The dogs were brought up and Delhi pointed a single No other birds were found by the dogs, but some were put up on a spot near by. Working the dogs toward the wagons they were taken up at 9:50. Both dogs did well in pace, range, and searching the ground in good form.

TIPPOO—HEMPSTEAD DON.—This brace was put down at 9:56 and ran until 10:55, but not until near the close of their run were any birds found, Don making a bevy point. Following the birds, Tippoo failed to point with good opportunities. Further on, both dogs close together and Don in the lead, a bevy was flushed. On the scattered birds Don secured a good point. In this trial Tippoo was headstrong, out of sight much of the time, disobedient, and paid little attention to the whistle; he failed at all times in point work. Don worked in his usual style.

REX FAST—LOVE'S KENT.—A move was now made for ground a mile or more beyond, where this brace was put down at 11:17. A short run and Rex pointed; two birds were put up. But beyond, and down the hill a short distance, Kent pointed, when several birds—the balance of the bevy—were put up. There was now quite a run before more birds were found. The dogs were worked round to a marked bevy in edge of woods, but before a point was established the birds were all up. The brace after showing very moderately in speed, range and other qualities were ordered up at 11:47.

STANCH GEORGE—LAD'S LADY.—Owing to Major Purcell's statement before the judges the night before, regarding the trial with his dog and Lad's Lady, he was given another; as was also Lad's Lady. They were run separately. George was put down first, and after running a short while he pointed a bevy. Following it into the woods, he did some nice clean point work, making several points, with one flush. He ran until 12:00, having improved his chances for a place. Lad's Lady was now put down and tried again, but she failed to improve several chances for points, making only one; she is clearly out of form.

THIRD SERIES

RODERICK T—REX FAST.—As several of the dogs had not run up to form of first day it was decided to bring in Rod again, but his work was much of the same character as that of the first day, improving a little. After running ten minutes or more both dogs, side by side, drew to a bevy point. On the scattered birds Rex did the best work, Rod indulging in flushing as usual, making one point in meantime.

STANCH GEORGE—LOVE'S KENT.—This brace were tried from 4:44 until 5:11. After quite a run, in which neither specially distinguished itself, Kent made a good point on a bevy. George, following a little later, and a little to the right, roaded also and was to the right and beyond where the bevy was flushed. Sent on, Kent found first and pointed, all the birds raising. Following on, Kent pointed; evidently on footscent, as no birds were raised except to a point by George just a little ahead. After the birds were raised to his point a number of others followed, when George chased a little. The dogs were now ordered up. In the evening, at the hotel, the awards were announced as given below:

SETTER DERBY

This stake had fourteen starters, a number of which have good records.

LADY MILDRED—TORY DOTLET.—The Blue Ridge Kennel's black, white and tan bitch Lady Mildred, by Antonio—Ruby's Girl, handled by D. E. Rose, and F. R. Hitchcock's black, white and tan bitch Tory Dotlet, by Count Gladstone IV—Tory Delia, handled by J. M. Avent, were put down at 1:33 after lunch. After a short run across open fields to a bluff Lady Mildred, on ridge below, made a good bevy point and was steady. Sent on, she made another bevy point less than seventy-five yards away. Following this bevy, Lady found them promptly and she was held until Dotlet came up, she having been hunting on the bluff. Both were steady. Sent on, Dotlet pointed where two birds had been put up. The bevy was again found, first by Lady, and after pointing a moment or two some birds raised. After this each pointed a single, Lady flushing one also. Working back to the hilly ground Lady soon had another bevy point. On the scattered birds Dotlet pointed, and Lady flushed one. The brace was ordered up at 2:14. Lady Mildred excelled at all points, doing all her work in good style with plenty of speed and range.

TOM BEGGS—JOCK SCOTT.—Blue Ridge Kennel's black, white and tan dog Tom Beggs, by Antonio—Ruby's Girl, handled by D. E. Rose, and Minnesota Kennel's black, white and tan dog Jock Scott, by Paul Bo—Canadian Lill, handled by George Richards, were sent away at 2:22, and after a short run Tom made a good bevy point. On the scattered birds the dogs were headstrong and the work was not good, although Tom made three points and two flushes; Jock, a flush. After this Tom roaded and pointed, but never located. There was now quite a run before finding. Tom found and pointed two birds of a feeding bevy, but Rose, thinking it was larks, forced him on, flushing the birds. Following them, Tom pointed a single. Other points were made but no birds raised. Soon afterward the dogs were ordered up, lacking but three minutes of an hour's run. Jock works with a high head, has good pace, range, and style in going, but is not stylish in point work; is fairly obedient. Tom is heady at times and is weakest in point work.

DASHING NOVICE II—LADY CLARE.—At 3:23 the Manchester Kennel Co.'s black, white and tan bitch Dashing Novice II, by Gladstone's Boy—Queen Novice, handled by A. P. Gilliam, and Jackson-Denmark Kennel's lemon and white bitch Lady Clare, by Prince Lucifer—Clare, handled by Thomas Bond, were sent away on nice ground, Lady Clare soon proving she had the heels of her opponent. After ten or fifteen minutes' running a bevy flushed beyond a road, Lady Clare being in that direction and probably the cause. Less than one hundred yards away Lady pointed a bevy, dropping on the point. Novice in meantime had pointed where the first bevy had flown from, and moving on was first when they settled, making a flush and then a point. Clare coming up pointed a single. Moving on Lady Clare wheeled to a beautiful point. Novice, beyond and making game, turned back and was soon on point on same bevy. The birds rose between them. Sent on to find the birds, Novice made three points, Lady Clare two, to one of which no bird was raised. This ended the trial of the brace, time 3:58. Both dogs were obedient and easily handled. This ended the running for the day in the Setter Derby and the Pointer Derby was taken up and finished as described.

WEDNESDAY

This was another satisfactory day, it being clear and only a little warm in the noon hours. An early start was made, the first brace being put down nearly two miles out at 8:15. The crowd, small at the start, increased in an hour or two to the usual attendance. Twenty-seven bevies of birds were found during the day.

CYNOSURE—TONY'S GALE.—Avent & Thayer's black, white and tan bitch Cynosure, by Roderigo—Norah II, handled by J. M. Avent, and Fox & Seiler's black, white and tan dog Tony's Gale, by Antonio—Can Can, handled by J. H. Johnson, were sent away at 8:15. After a short run a bevy of birds rose just over a hill, which prevented seeing the cause of the flush. On the scattered birds each dog secured a point. Sent on, the dogs ranged and hunted ground well, Tony's Gale first pointing a bevy. Following a small part of the bevy no birds were found. The next find was a single bird, pointed by Tony; Cynosure at same time making a bevy point. Following the birds, Cynosure secured two points on singles. Tony, casting to left during this time, made another bevy point. The birds were not followed. A short run and the brace was ordered up; time 8:55. Cynosure is a trifle heavy in flesh, not getting her usual exercise from being in use recently, which prevents her running in her accustomed form. Tony's Gale ran a fine trial. He has all requisite pace and range and his work was clean and sharp; he needs a little more style on point, which should come in time.

DIXIE'S FLAG—NELLIE FOX.—Norvin T. Harris' black, white and tan dog Dixie's Flag, by Wun Lung—White Wings, handled by J. M. Avent, and Blue [illegible] black, white and tan bitch Nellie Fox, by [illegible] Can, went down at 9:04 and ran until 10:10. [illegible] was quite a long one before finding, when Nellie [illegible] pretty point near the edge of a plum thicket. [illegible] were marked down, but the growth of weeds was so thick that nothing of a satisfactory nature could be done, and the dogs were ordered on. A short distance away both dogs made a point on different birds of a feeding bevy. The birds were not followed. After passing through a sedgegrass field, Dixie's Flag made a wide cast in adjoining [illegible] flushed a bevy. Following the largest bevy first, Nellie flushed a bird just as [illegible] started the balance of the birds, the [illegible] until all were up. Going to the [illegible], Nellie made two flushes. This finished the [illegible] brace. Flag was headstrong at times, paying little attention to the whistle; he is an attractive mover with good pace and range. Nellie, while not a wide ranger, is an active bitch at all times and handles pleasantly.

JOE CUMMINGS—TONY'S BOY.—At 10:21 Maj. J. W. Renfroe's black, white and tan dog Joe Cummings, by Antonio—Picceola, handled by W. W. Titus, and Norvin T. Harris' black, white and tan dog Tony's Boy, by Antonio—Laundress, handled by D. E. Rose, were cast away, both starting fast. Tony's Boy was soon out of sight, and remained so a while. Joe, in another direction, soon began a more conservative gait. In a bottom he started a rabbit, and running it down wind he ran into a bevy of birds; stopping to flush of them for a moment, forgetting that he was after a rabbit, and went off to hunting again. A little later Tony's Boy jumped a wide ditch but dropped on bank to flush of a single bird, he then raised up before on point until Rose flushed a bevy near him. Near by in a plum thicket Joe first pointed and then roaded through the thicket, when he made a point and two flushes, Tony's Boy making one point. Five minutes later Boy pointed a bevy in sedgegrass which, when flushed, settled across a creek. Sent on, he pointed another bevy less than seventy-five yards away. This bevy crossed the creek also. The dogs were now worked up to the wagons when they were ordered up; time, 11:02.

CLEMENTINA—WUN LUNG'S PRIDE.—Avent & Thayer's black, white and tan bitch Clementina, by Roderigo—Norah II, handled by J. M. Avent, and George H. Read's black, white and tan dog Wun Lung's Pride, by Wun Lung—White Wings, handled by J. H Johnson, were put down and ran for a while on ground below the average for want of cover and birds; but before the run was over they succeeded in doing creditable work, especially in case of Clementina. After quite a run Clementina made a point; nothing was raised, but a cat went from bushes beyond—probably the cause. She was first to find birds in a hedgerow. The bevy was followed, and the birds had run from place of lighting. Pride, however, flushed one. After roading and pointing by both dogs they were ordered on. Over the hill, in a small patch of grass, a good bevy was flushed after Pride had passed through. Clementina, to right, had in meantime found and pointed a bevy. They were not followed. Sent on, nothing was found for some time, when Pride pointed a bevy just before reaching the road. This ended the work, at 12:22, and all went to lunch. This ended the first series.

SECOND SERIES

LADY CLARE—LADY MILDRED.—After lunch, at 1:37, this brace of good bitches was put down and in a few minutes each had pointed a bevy about forty yards apart. Lady Clare did a good piece of roading, first down wind and then across wind, locating nicely. Lady Mildred came on hers with wind in favor and pointed fifteen to twenty yards away. This last bevy went to the woods and was not found. The bevy from Lady Clare's point was ridden up by horsemen, so no work was done on either bevy after the flush. After running a while they were ordered up; time, 2:11.

TONY'S BOY—TONY'S GALE.—This good brace of youngsters was sent off at 2:21, and just after starting Tony's Boy wheeled to point, Gale backing in fine form. Nothing could be raised. They were soon in heavy cover—the worst of the club's grounds to see such wide rangers—but before they were out of it each had made a bevy point. Later Tony's Boy dropped to point of a single bird, which got up before Rose reached the dog. Farther on Tony's Gale pointed twice, but Johnson did not raise birds; but one was put up by horsemen following. Just at close of the run Tony's Boy pointed a single. Considering the heavy going the puppies retained their speed wonderfully, and while not much point work was accomplished, for few birds had been found here when hunted before, it was something to go as they did in the heavy going and it added to their credit. They were ordered up at 3:12, having passed over much territory since 2:21.

CYNOSURE—WUN LUNG'S PRIDE.—There were some scattered birds near when this brace was put down and Cynosure, before she was well under way, flushed one. After crossing the railroad Pride secured a good bevy point. The dogs sent on, Cynosure, in ravine, pointed and two birds were flushed. Farther on Pride pointed a single; then Cynosure one; and Pride pointed again, but moved to a flush. Half a mile away Cynosure pointed, but was sent on to locate; which she did, being joined by Pride. Near branch Cynosure pointed single, but to a point by Pride nothing was raised. Pride was now showing fatigue. Five minutes later the brace was ordered up, having run from 3:16 until 3:56.

CLEMENTINA—NELLIE FOX.—This brace ran from 3:57 until 4:42 without finding; they showed loss of speed and range and for much of the time hunted indifferently.

JOE CUMMINGS—DIXIE'S FLAG.—This, the reserve brace, was put down late in the afternoon. At the start Joe chased a rabbit and for some time took things his own way, Titus finally getting him in hand. Dixie's Flag found a bevy, and Joe, going across wind, did not see him or refused to back and went right into the bevy. This was the start of his racing alone. Sent on, Flag hunted out the ground assigned for both dogs. Joe to the left made a good find in the woods, and, following them up, made several good points and but one flush, showing he was capable of good work. Flag was now willful and was hard to get in line. He made one point. It was 5:09 and the brace was ordered up. This ended the second series. At a consultation of the judges at night it was decided to run one more brace, Lady Mildred and Tony's Gale, before deciding this Derby.

THURSDAY

The day was [illegible] promising in the early morn [illegible] light sprinkle of rain, but later it [illegible] found in great numbers (thirty-five bevies), sufficient to give all the dogs good opportunities for point work. The final heat in the Setter Derby was run first, as follows:

LADY MILDRED—TONY'S GALE.—They were started at 8:48, and after a short run Tony's Gale pointed, but no birds could be raised. Passing to next field a bevy flushed just as he stopped to point; the judge watching him said he was entitled to the point. The dogs and handlers were now brought together and the dogs sent across the pasture ground. In the second field Gale pointed; the bevy was raised behind him. Lady Mildred was first on the singles, pointing one; later she found a bevy. Moving on, she found another, or a part of the same one, only a few yards away. The dogs were sent for scattered birds; none found. They were now sent across bottom land to a bluff beyond, Tony's Gale quickly finding a bevy. A short run, and they were ordered up; time, 9:27. Lady Mildred hardly ran up to her usual form, Tony's Gale sustaining his, running uniformly throughout the race.

POINTER ALL-AGE STAKES

This had seventeen starters, many of them of reputation and merit, and the running was taken up immediately after the conclusion of the Setter Derby.

LADY MARGARET—JINGO.—Maj. J. R. Purcell's black and white bitch Lady Margaret, by Dick Swiveler—Countess Bang, handled by owner, and N. T. De Pauw's liver and white dog Jingo, by Mainspring—————, handled by N. T. Nesbitt, were cast off at 9:57. Jingo was soon on a bevy point. Margaret, by little caution, backed. The birds were not followed. Sent on, a bevy rose from hillside one hundred yards away, but another was raised near, by from following cause. Just beyond a plum thicket Margaret flushed a single bird and when returning she flushed a second; either from this, or the crowd being near, a large bevy rose, which was not followed. A change in direction was now made, and after a short run Jingo pointed a rabbit. Margaret, along that way, pointed at same spot. Moving on, several birds were flushed by horsemen following the dogs, seemingly feeding. In the grass beyond Margaret made two flushes. In the bottom beyond the dogs crossed to a ravine, where both wheeled to a point, Margaret a trifle first. Moving on when the handlers were near, both roaded and secured a point. After crossing the railroad Lady Margaret made a good bevy point, and when the birds flew over a plum thicket near a second bevy followed. Margaret flushed a single when she reached the place they had settled in. Jingo pointed one. Sent on, both dogs pointed; each a single. They were now ordered up. The pace and range of the brace were only fair.

CID—DOGWOOD.—Maj. J. R. Purcell's black and white ticked dog Cid, by Duke of Hessen—Barmaid, handled by owner, and Charlottesville F. T. Kennel's liver and white dog Dogwood, by Ightfield Dick—Cowslip, handled by C. E. Buckle, were put down at 10:55 in sedgegrass field. Cid soon made a bevy point and held it well until birds were flushed. Sent on the dogs passed to the left of the birds, and Cid was missed but was soon found. Dogwood, in field to right, hunted it out beautifully and when he came to the corner of the field near the woods he made game. Passing the fence he walked cautiously up to a point on a bevy. On the scattered birds but one point was made, and that one by Dogwood. Cid backed. No other birds were found, the brace being orderd up at 11:35. Dogwood has good pace and range and good style in point work. Cid is a fair ranger and an industrious hunter but is under only fair command.

KING OF LYNN—SAM BANG.—Robert Leslie's liver and white dog King of Lynn, by Tempest—Nadjy of Naso, handled by John Lewis, and Major J. R. Purcell's lemon and white dog Sam Bang, by Dick Swiveler—Countess Bang, handled by owner, were put down at 11:38. After a run of 10 minutes King flushed two birds, and a little further on he repeated it, and then followed it up by flushing a bevy. Sam Bang, to left, pointed a few of them as he came up. Farther along he quickly secured two bevy points, both bevies going over a creek near by. The dogs were now worked up to the wagons near by, and were taken up; time, 12:07. King of Lynn was widest ranger. Sam Bang was accurate in point work.

DON—TAMARACK JR.—D. P. Ritchey's liver and white dog Don, by Trinket's Coin—Moulton Patti, handled by L. W. Blankenbaker, and H. K. Devereux's liver and white dog Tamarack Jr, by Tamarack—Maud Graphic, handled by George Gray, were sent away on good ground but failed to find for some time, when Tamarack pointed a bird, a bevy near by following. Don now made a point or two in indifferent style. The dogs were now ordered through woods, along the edge of which a bevy flushed wild. Back and to the left birds were put up, each handler claiming a point for his dog. This bevy was not followed, but the dogs were worked on the other; but trifling work was done. Each flushed, Don the most. Tamarack ended the trial by a point on a single bird. Dogs up at 1:12. During, and after, lunch Maj. Val Young entertained a host of friends by recital of some pleasant reminiscences.

LULA K—LITTLE NED.—G. R. Howse's liver and white bitch Lula K, by Ossian—————, handled by owner, and W. N. Kerr's liver and white dog Little Ned, by Ridgeview Dazzle—Kate Claxton, handled by J. M. Avent, were put down after lunch, at 2:04, where there were plenty of birds. Yet little, very little work of good character was done, but the birds were wild and were hard to point. It could not be seen what raised the first bevy. The dogs were hunted on when Lula made a good bevy point. The birds were not followed. The dogs were worked round a bluff, where Lula made two points; Ned a flush. Ned was headstrong and backed indifferently; Lula was decisive and generally accurate in point work.

ST BLAISE—DELHI.—Maj. J. R. Purcell's liver and white dog St Blaise, by Guy—Lady Spotswood, handled by owner, and Charlottesville F. F. Kennel's liver and white dog Delhi, by Rip Rap—Queen II, handled by C. E. Buckle, were cast away at 2:50. After crossing a bottom to hill beyond, Delhi pointed a bevy. Later on St Blaise seemingly scented game and pointed, then leaving it. The Major explained "he was backing a stump," and there were several around. When Delhi was pointing about thirty yards to the right a bevy that was fifteen yards ahead of him, the Major decided St Blaise was pointing a bevy, and that he had shifted his place of pointing, which, he claimed, he had a right to do. His action had the semblance of a blink, if he scented the birds at all. In the woods, a hard place for work, Delhi had a point, then a flush, and another point; and still another, from which no bird was raised. There was now a run without finding, and at end of thirty minutes the dogs were ordered up. Delhi, just a moment afterward, was on a bevy point, when St Blaise, a moment or two later, passed in between Delhi and the birds and pointed the bevy. Delhi was the superior, and much so, in every respect.

TICK BOY—STRIDEAWAY.—Kidwell & Stoddard's black and white dog Tick Boy, by King of Kent—Bloom, handled by J. B. Stoddard, and E. O. Damon's liver and white dog Strideaway, by King of Kent—Pearl's Dot, handled by George Gray, were put down at 3:26. Strideaway was first to make game at corner of a thicket, stopping for a while on point which proved on footscent—as he was a little too far along and not near enough to have advantage of wind. No birds were raised and he went on casting to right of birds. Gray here made a mistake in not hunting him around this point. Tick Boy, coming in from the right, passed into the thicket just at the right place to catch the scent. He pointed the bevy well, not over twenty yards away from Strideaway's place of point. Following the birds, Tick Boy got two points, Strideaway one. After a long run both dogs made an independent point on a bevy, Strideaway nearest them. Birds not followed, A bevy was raised ahead and on the scattered birds Strideaway flushed, or possibly dropped in time for point. Tick Boy further on flushed a single, then two birds. The dogs were now ordered up, Strideaway out of sight. Gray, standing in sight, claimed at once Strideaway was on a point. It proved to be a large bevy. Taking all in all the competition was close; both ranged well, Strideaway coming in most to handler. Tick Boy seemed ahead until just at close of run, when Strideaway's work brought him up a little; Tick Boy's setting him back some. Honors seemed about even.

SELAH—SPOT S.—Charlotteville F. T. Kennels' liver and white bitch Selah, by Rip Rap—Queen II, handled by C. E. Buckle, and Mr. McDowell's liver and white dog Spot S, by Dick Swiveler—Vixen, handled by Louis McGrew, were put down at 4:33 and ran until 5:05. Selah ran well, searching out ground in a good way and pointing a bevy in nice style. This was all the point work. Spot S had no quality to recommend him.

VERGE, a bye.—C. W. De Pauw's liver and white dog Verge (no pedigree given), handled by N. T. Nesbitt, ran a bye, showing fair range and pace. He found two bevies and was stanch, and got two birds on singles. He was continued to better approximate his worth in competition.

SATURDAY

A rainstorm on Friday prevented any running, and a change in the weather to a cold and partially cloudy day after a pretty hard freeze during the night made it disagreeable in the extreme. A cold north wind blew almost all day, yet good work was done and plenty of birds were found—thirty-three bevies.

SECOND SERIES

DOGWOOD—TAMARACK JR.—This brace was put down about one and a half miles from town at 8:25. Starting off in good form Dogwood was soon on bevy point, and Tamarack, brought up, passed between Dogwood and the bevy, and when in position to scent them he wheeled to point; but they had flushed, he being very near them. The bevy was followed partially, but not found. Sent on in another direction, Buckle walked up a bevy. Crossing to adjoining field, Tamarack ahead, both wheeled to point, Tamarack first, and it proved he had the birds. Both steady to flush. Although a part of the bevy was followed, no birds were found, the cold and wind causing exceptionally long flights. Sent on to find other birds, only a short run was made, when Dogwood flushed a big bevy, with wind favorable. Tamarack, a moment later, pointed a bevy in a position devoid of style. The dogs were now ordered up; time, 8:48. Neither dog ran in the form usually credited to him.

DELHI—TICK BOY.—Both started well, looking out ground in proper way, but no birds were found where two or three bevies used. On a bluff hillside the dogs came to a point about the same time, thirty yards apart A bird was raised to Tick Boy's point, but nothing found to Delhi's. Events afterward proved that a bevy was scattered and running in every direction. Much roading was done through bottom land, but no birds located. Horsemen riding through flushed some. Tick Boy, after a wide cast to the right, returned and pointed a bevy near. The birds going to forbidden ground they were not followed. There was now quite a run on ground where birds had previously been found before a bevy was located. Tick pointed, with Delhi close on his left. Tick Boy broke his point and passed through plum bushes, but returning he flushed the bevy. Delhi all the time remained stanchly on point until Buckle reached him and sent him on. Delhi made the next bevy point. Following the scattered birds each dog made a point on single birds, both missing other opportunities for points. They ran from 9:04 until 10:10.

STRIDEAWAY—JINGO.—Jingo, in this trial, was a genuine surprise. While he had done clean work in his first run on game, his pace and range were erratic, but now he started a winning pace and kept it up, and, considering the casts made, manner of search and the character of point work which was maintained from start to finish, it was the best individual trial in the stake. His finds were the direct result of intelligent searching, and his speed and range all that could be required. Strideaway, on the contrary, was not running in good form, spending too much time running in to handler—far more than has been his custom. In way of point work Strideaway started it by pointing a bevy; he was well backed by Jingo. Both steady to shot. Moving on for scattered birds none were found, and Jingo was off for a bevy which he found in a nice cast to the right. After the bevy rose he pointed a single thirty yards away. After this he pointed two more bevies, which was the balance of the point work done.

LULA K—SELAH.—As one of the bitches was in use the brace was made of this sex. Neither sustained the work in the first series. On scattered birds Lula flushed one. The brace was then sent to find a marked bevy, and both drew to a point on it. On the scattered birds Selah flushed twice. They were ordered up at 11:48.

CID—VERGE.—They were sent away at 11:55. The first ground worked over was not promising, as no birds had been found on it. Later, on better grounds, Verge flushed part of a bevy, and circling a little came in with wind in favor and put up the balance of it. A part of those flushed were marked down near by, Verge flushing the only one found. When nearing the end of ground to be hunted out before lunch Verge pointed a bevy, Cid backing and then moving up; the birds flushed ahead of dogs, apparently from noise of the crowd. The birds were not followed and the dogs were ordered up; time, 12:28. After a consultation of the judges at lunch it was decided to run one more brace before making the awards.

THIRD SERIES

DELHI—JINGO.—At 1:54 they were sent away, both starting well. Delhi was soon on bevy point, when Jingo came in from the side and flushed the bevy. Sent on, Jingo pointed a bevy less than thirty yards away. On scattered birds Delhi had two points on single birds. Jingo made one, and to other points no birds were raised. At 1:41 they were ordered up, with the result shown in summary.

ALL-AGE SETTER STAKES

This had eighteen starters, many of them well-known dogs and winners. Five brace were finished on Saturday afternoon.

JOE BOWERS—BREEZE BELTON.—Dudley Schofield's black, white and tan dog Joe Bowers, by De Soto—Ruth Gates, handled by R. P. McCargo, and J. H. Winslow's black, white and tan dog Breeze Belton, by Breeze Gladstone—Nellie Belton, handled by John Lewis, were put down at 1:54. Joe Bowers had fair speed and range and pointed in good style; he found two bevies, both in line of travel, and not the result of wide searching. Neither bevy was followed. Breeze Belton's pace and range were inferior, as well as his style of pointing; and he made rather a poor attempt at backing even when he attempted it.

BESSIE SHOUPE—GLEAM'S PINK.—At 2:36 the Blue Ridge Kennel's black, white and tan bitch Bessie Shoupe, by Gath's Hope—Countess Rush, handled by D. E. Rose, and Manchester Kennel Co.'s black, white and tan dog Gleam's Pink, by Vanguard—Georgia Belle, handled by A. P. Gilliam, were started in open sedgegrass field. They seemed in good form and started lively enough, but Bessie did not come up to expectations. She flushed a bevy soon, and neither dog did what they should have done in finding the scattered birds as several were ridden up on ground passed by them. Bessie's next point was a false one. Later, Pink pointed in a big ravine, but the birds ran away from him. He roaded them, being sometimes joined by Bessie, and he located birds at least two hundred yards away. Bessie roaded separately at times, but did not succeed in finding one. Later, on the top of a hill, she did her best work, locating a bevy by good work. On the scattered birds she pointed once; two birds were raised. About close of run she pointed a single bird. Taken up at 3:25.

TORY TOPAZ—MINNIE T.—This was an active brace of bitches and they hunted out the ground well that they passed over, but did not find for ten to fifteen minutes, when Topaz, in her cast across a bottom, pointed a bevy; she was backed by Minnie, being held a short time to enable her to get up. From the place of point Topaz roaded a little way, when her handler put up the birds. Little point work was done in the weeds. Sent on, Minnie T pointed a bevy, which flushed wild a little later. Topaz backed. Sent on, the handlers entered the wood together, but Avent drifted to the right. Titus, to the left, sent Minnie along and she soon found them, making four good points. Topaz found none. They were ordered up. Both are active, with good pace and range and steady in pointing and backing.

AULD CLOOTIE—ALLENE.—C. W. De Pauw's black, white and tan dog Auld Clootie, by Dick Bondhu—Sheena Van, handled by N. B. Nesbitt, and Blue Ridge Kennel's black, white and tan bitch Allene, by Gsth's Mark—Ruby's Girl, handled by D. E. Rose, were cast off at 4:11. Allene's first work, the first done, in roading a bevy through the woods to sedgegrass beyond and locating them correctly, was a nice piece of work. Following the bevy into the woods, Clootie found and pointed them, or a new bevy; which was hard to decide. He outpointed Allene on the scattered birds. The pace and range was fairly good and the work on birds stanch and positive.

BLUE RIDGE MARK—ACOLYTE.—The Blue Ridge Kennel's black, white and tan dog Blue Ridge Mark, by Gath's Mark—Ollie T, handled by D. E. Rose, and Dr. C. W. Duke's black, white and tan dog Acolyte, by Toledo Blade—Sue II, handled by Thomas Bond, were put down at 5:00. It was soon seen that Mark was out for a good run. Passing through some ground that had been hunted over to a bottom beyond, Mark made a cast across it and found a bevy on a hillside. Acolyte was called in from the left and sent across; when near and to the left of Mark he pointed also on a part of Mark's bevy. The birds settled near by, each making a point. Ten minutes later Acolyte flushed a bevy, and farther on flushed twice on singles. Mark pointed a single bird away from where any had flown. Acolyte backed. Sent on, Mark was soon on a bevy by making a good cast to the right. A few minutes later the brace was ordered up; time, 5:36. This ended the week's work.

MONDAY

A rain, snow and sleet storm prevented any running in the trials to-day, but the weather this evening promises a continuance of them to-morrow, when they will possibly be concluded. Mr. P. T. Madison, the secretary of the club, having resigned, a special meeting is called by the board of governors to meet at New Albany, Miss., on Tuesday evening, February 5. The resignation of Mr. Madison seriously affects the interests of the club.

WEST POINT, MISS., January 29.

To-day was cloudy and chilly, with the ground very wet and soft. The first brace was Rodfield and Lillian Russell, Rodfield having the advantage in range and style in point work. Flirt and Camille ran a poor competition, the latter best in range and speed. Blue Kate and Gleam's Sport ran better, but Sport was not up to his form, doing more pottering work than usual. Next Topsy's Rod and Dan's Lady went down at 1:28 and ran nearly an hour, Lady doing about all the point work, finding four bevies and singles; Rod made a single point, flushed a bevy, was willful and could not be kept in course.

Five braces were started in the second series. Minnie T and Auld Clootie were the first brace after lunch. Minnie T ran in much improved form; she did all the point work and was best in speed and range. Allene and Gleam's Pink came next. Pink found all the bevies, and while his work was not brilliant it was clean. Blue Ridge Mark and Rodfield were best in movement, did most of the point work, and excelled in style; pace and range about equal. Dan's Lady and Lillian Russell ran fairly. Lillian found the only bevy, but her false pointing was against her. As Lady's first trial was so much superior to anything done by either, it gave her the advantage in the end. Topaz and Joe Bowers were now given a short run. Topaz was easily the best. The awards were made as follows: First, Rodfield; second, Blue Ridge Mark; third, Minnie T; fourth, Gleam's Pink; fifth, Dan's Lady. This concludes the trials.

THE CLUB'S MEETING

The meeting of the United States Field Trials Club's members and board of governors met at the Holt House Wednesday evening, February 23, and by special resolution it was decided that it should take the place of the annual meeting usually held at Chicago. A good deal of business was transacted, including the fixing of the number of trials, where to be held, number of stakes and prizes, as well as the election of officers. Mr. W. B. Stafford was elected as chairman. On motion the calling of the roll was dispensed with and the minutes of the previous meeting were read and adopted. The committee on grounds for trials A, usually held at Bicknell, Ind., were not ready to report, farther than that the grounds looked at in Kentucky were not satisfactory, and on motion afterward they were discharged and a new one elected. Mr. Adams, of the old committee, however, stated that suitable grounds with ample accommodations could be had at Irvington, Ky., but that the supply of birds was not sufficient. The secretary's financial report was accepted; it showed a favorable balance [illegible] January 12, 1895. The secretary, Mr. [illegible] recommended that Dr. N. Rowe, of [illegible] Wm. H. Childs, of Philadelphia, be [illegible] bers, without dues. They were unanimously elected. The suggestions of the secretary regarding challenges created discussion especially by Mr. J. M. Avent and Mr. J. L. Adams, who advocated their right to indulge in this pastime if they chose to. The remarks of the secretary are worthy of consideration and are given in full.

"Gentlemen:—In making my annual report I am pained to say that the past season has been a disastrous one for field trial clubs. The great falling off in entries and starters made it difficult for clubs to get through and survive, yet I am pleased to state that our club will come through the ordeal and have a surplus of about $500 as a starter for next season. Making a report of the financial condition of the club at this time gives you only an approximate, as it is impossible to tell the receipts and expenditures of trials B. I desire to call your attention to the physical condition of our honored president, Dr. N. Rowe, who has done more for the club than any other of its members. The Doctor's health I have just heard is improving. I ask, in appreciation of his valuable services and his many favors extended to the club, that you honor him with a life membership free of dues. I also desire to call your attention to the physical condition of Mr. Wm. H. Child, a member of this club who has been confined to his bed over two years. Mr. Child has been an ardent admirer of the club since its inception, but on account of his extended illness, which has cost him an immense outlay, he reluctantly tenders his resignation. I ask that Mr Child be also elected to life membership free of dues. I think the club will do itself proud in extending these favors.

"The life of a field trial club depends on the allegiance of its members and the confidence of the public. The members should throw no impediments in the club's road to success but should endeavor to create a friendly sportsmanlike feeling among outsiders as well as members, and try to get new patrons each year; let us by our conduct show to our outside friends that they will be kindly treated and their dogs receive the same opportunities extended to those of members.

"It is but natural for an owner to see faults in the dog of another quicker than he does in his own, but we should be generous enough to acknowledge that our own dogs are imperfect.

"The place to test a dog's qualities is in a competition in the field and not in the columns of our sportmen's journals, and as field trial clubs are organized for the purpose of affording times and places for these competitions I think it advisable for this club to discourage private matches; and I earnestly hope that the members of this club, as well as all outsiders, will abandon the challenge business, which has a tendency to degenerate field trials. I trust you will agree to run dogs only in stakes offered by the clubs of the country. Let parties who do not patronize field trial clubs resort to the challenge business, and if they are as successful as past challengers have been they will run one match in a decade. If the journals of the country will decline to publish matter of this character they will become much more instructive.

"The question of holding trials on prairie chickens in the Northwest next Fall, also one on quails in the middle states in November, and one in the South next Winter, should receive your earnest attention at this meeting.

"I thank the members for the favors extended in the past, and ask that the same may be extended to my successor."

After the meeting of the club the board of governors held its meeting, Mr. W. B. Stafford presiding. A protest of Major Purcell to the decision in the Pointer Derby was read and not sustained. The resignations of the following persons were accepted: H. J. Smith, J. Balmer, R. L. Shannon, R. P. Daggett, Col. A. G. Sloo, B. Waters, H. L. Smyser and Julius Winter Sr. The following new members were then elected: Lewis McGrew, Pittsburg, Pa.; N. B. Nesbitt, Chesterville, Miss; Phil. M. Essig, Natchez, Miss.; S. L. James, Angora, La.; C. E. Buckle, Charlottesville, Va; D. G. Rowland, Louisville, Ky.; E. E. Osthaus, New York. The following board of governors was then elected: Dr. N. Rowe, J. M. Freeman, H. Hulman Jr., Norvin T. Harris, Richard Merrill, J. M. Avent, P. T. Madison, W. B. Stafford, J. L. Adams, C. E. Buckle, D. G. Rowland, J. N. Seale, Phil. M. Essig, St. Marc Mundy and S. L. James.

On Thursday the first business was fixing the number of trials, and it was decided to hold three. One in the Northwest on prairie chickens the first Monday in September; two stakes to be given, the Derby (for setters and pointers) and the All-Age Stakes (for setters and pointers), $350 for each, divided as follows: $125 for first prize, $100 to second, $75 to third, and $50 to fourth. Entrance fees, for the Derby $10 and $5 forfeits, and $5 additional to start, for the All-Age Stakes $10 forfeit and $10 additional to start. Committees were appointed to select judges (two) and grounds. Committee for judges, Norvin T. Harris, J. N. Seale, P. T. Madison; for grounds, W. B. Stafford, P. T. Madison and J. M. Avent. The committee is restricted to grounds in the United States. Entries for the Derby will close May 15, second forfeit to be paid by July 15. For the All-Age Stakes entries will close August 1. Last payment of both stakes to be paid the night before starting. The date for trials A to be either the seventh or eleventh of November, to be determined by the secretary, the later date being subject to an arrangement, if it can be made, with the Eastern Field Trial Club to hold its meeting a week later; grounds are to be selected at some central point. West Point was selected for the trials B and the third Monday of January, 1896, as the date. The purses in both these trials, for both the Derby and All-Age Stakes, are the same, viz., $1,000; with separate stakes for setters and pointers. Prizes will be as follows: First $150, second $125, third $100, fourth $75, fifth $50. Entries for the Derby close June 1 with $10 forfeit, $10 second forfeit payable September 1, $10 additional to start. For the All-Age [illegible] (for pointers and setters that have never won first in [illegible] all-age stakes in any recognized field trial in America) entries close November 1, $10 forfeit, $20 additional to start.

Messrs. P. T. Madison, St. Marc Mundy and D. G. Rowland form the committee elected to select the grounds for trials A, and they were authorized to expend the money, if necessary, now expended for grounds for birds, [illegible] getting new grounds free of rent. A vote of thanks was tendered to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, its [illegible] for favors extended to the club, to [illegible] of West Point and vicinity in general and [illegible] in particular, also to the press of West Point for [illegible] to the club, and to the judges of the trials. The board of governors extended a vote of thanks to Mr. Madison, the secretary, for valuable services in the interest of the club.

The following are the officers elected by the board of governors: President, Dr. N. Rowe; 1st vice-president, Norvin T. Harris; 2nd vice-president, H. Hulman Jr.; secretary-treasurer, P. T. Madison.

THE GORDON SETTER TRIALS

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Dr. Whitaker, in his two letters to your paper regarding the trials held by the Gordon Setter Club of America at Assonet, Mass., November 13, 1894, labors under a wrong impression when he states that the Gordons which Mac's Paul defeated there were "trained for field trials." They ought to have been; but I know, from information received before the trials, that none of them were so trained and that only two of them had been trained at all on quails for the simple reason that there were no quails to be found in their vicinity.

As all the correspondence and most of the labor connected with the above field trials were done by me perhaps it will be as well to make a little report of the circumstances for the information of Gordon setter men generally.

After sending off about 200 letters and circular letters to almost every Gordon owner whose address I could recall, I received $30 each from Messrs. E. K. Sperry and J. R. Oughton, to be followed by entries, and a promise of two entries from Mr. Noyes Billings; and for myself I promised $30, or three entries. Several single entries followed after a while, and a list of ten Gordons filled, but only nine started. They were as follows: Two from the West, viz., Dwight Kennels' (Ill.) Heather Lad and Mac's Paul from St. Louis; four from the East, viz., Mr. Sperry's Jolly G (placed second), Mr. Noyes Billings' Minnie T (placed third) and Ranger B, Miss Nickerson's Count Noble, and my three dogs—Bellmont, Heather Bruce and Beaumont's Bellmont (called "Mont" for short)

Of Heather Lad's training I have no report. Mr. Billings and Mr. Sperry wrote me that there were no quails and they would have to be content with what few ruffed grouse they could find. Miss Nickerson consented to run Count Noble, but wrote that he had not seen a bird since last season, and very few then, and that she had hired no trainer. Jolly G, from Mr. Pearle's letter in the AMERICAN FIELD, seems to have had considerable training to find a few ruffed grouse and woodcocks but no quails. Of my three Gordons, Bellmont was nearly ten years old and about a month previously had weaned a litter of nine puppies in New Jersey, since which she had a few days' outing on birdless fields there; she has not seen a quail in four years. Heather Bruce was only a puppy sixteen months old and had been very sick, but since his recovery in October had shown considerable promise on some half a dozen occasional grouse, but had never seen a quail. Mont was out in Minnesota on prairie chickens, and in October on quail in Indiana, where the ground was so dry that her trainer reported that "only a choke-bored nose could scent a bird." She reached Mr. Taliman, my handler, only a week or so before the trials, four days of which time it rained and another was Sunday; she hardly knew his voice and saw no quails with him. In fact none of my three Gordons would have been started if I had not been president of the Gordon Setter Club, and therefore felt that I was compelled to make the number of starters as large as possible. I simply sacrificed my dogs on the Gordon altar, as it were. Mont showed the greatest pace and range of any dog in the stake, but from some unaccountable reason was "off her nose," as Mac's Paul's handler, Mr. Streigel, wrote me—one of those unfortunate occurrences that seem to happen at almost every field trial. She had been accustomed to the large western fields and prairies.

So much for the training for field trials which Mac's Paul had to contend against.

Dr Whitaker says the "whole affair was a surprise to Gordon setter men in the West, and the greatest surprise of all was that a western dog of the Malcom strain should go east and defeat the Meyer—Blossom strain; it is wonderful." Now my three dogs were the only ones of the eight which were of that strain, whatever such a term may mean. Dr. Meyer, I might here remark, went out of dogs entirely some years ago, and for some time has kept only a toy dog for his little daughter. It would have been "wonderful" indeed if Mac's Paul had not won. He was an excellent dog, beautifully trained (as the judge has since written me) where game was plentiful, and, from what his handler (Mr. Streigel) said and wrote me, had seen more birds, and especially quails, in one good day that his opponents had seen in their whole lives.

Now I am aware that excuses are not in order after the dogs are started. I merely state facts, and I do not offer them to detract from Mac's Paul's well deserved honors. Whether he was the best dog, if some of the others had had equally good training on equally good grounds, can't be known. As Mr. Pearle says, some of the others might have done as well. The fact is he was the best trained dog in the stake and did the best work, and I welcome his as the best work ever done by a Gordon in a public field trial. I have always contended that there are many Gordons whose field work would greatly advance the reputation of the breed if their owners would only send them to the public trials. Mac's Paul must be one of many in the South and West whose experience and training [illegible] make them conspicuous [illegible]; and Gordons from the [illegible] unless we eastern and [illegible] there or to some training [illegible].

I trust that Mac's Paul's success will encourage other western owners to send their Gordons to next year's trials. If they can send better dogs, or better trained dogs, they deserve to win. I think the result of the Gordon setter trials, last November, will have good influence on the Gordon cause. It has already roused us up, and I notice quite a revival in the interest shown. I could have wished that the rain and slush and knee-deep swamp water at the trials had been omitted. A good day and better circumstances would have called out much better average work. I was laid up at home for a month with a sprained ankle, I regret, as I would like to have seen the contests.

It is to be hoped that Mac's Paul will be exhibited at the New York show. I would like to see him and, if a good-looking dog, breed a bitch or two to him. I am not wedded to one strain. My wish is that some Gordon may yet equal the best English setter in field work—preferably, of course, my own dog; but "let the best Gordon win," no matter whose strain.

JAMES B. BLOSSOM.

WHICH IS BEST?

UNION CITY, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—As a breeder of pointers I have been highly amused and entertained by the challenges, counter challenges, and free advertising indulged in by the pointer men through that greatest of all advertising mediums, the AMERICAN FIELD, in the last few weeks; and, having a few good dogs to dispose of these hard times and wanting good prices for same, I am undecided which is the better plan—to challenge somebody, or take a hunt with the dogs I want to sell, kodak them on point, then come home and write up the hunt in graphic style (not failing to describe each point and back minutely, repeating the dogs' names as often as possible), then, a week or two after the publication of the article, give the AMERICAN FIELD a small "for sale" advertisement of these famous dogs. Both plans I believe to be good, but I will wait and watch results ere I decide which course to pursue.

I rather like Plover's analysis of work done by these three famous pointers in their trials, but why he should stop with these three I am at a loss to know. One would think they were the only pointers in America, to judge from articles written. Now, I think either and all would suffer if analyzed in like manner with that noble pointer Rip Rap, who has met and defeated year after year not alone pointers, but setters, not dogs unknown, but dogs whose names are familiar to every member of the true sportsman's home. I could name a number of other good pointers that have fought their way to the top pinnacle of fame; yet all these are forgotten. Do you ask why? I answer: Because their owners, satisfied with the work the noble dogs have done, despising this mode of advertising, disliking controversies and knowing them to be detrimental to the best interests of the pointer, and knowing from experience that no two-hour trial could possibly determine the best dog, remain silent; their dogs are forgotten in this mad rush to advertise free ere the editor grows tired and calls a halt.

As I write there is lying at my feet and gazing up at me with his look of tenderness and affection which any woman might envy a red Irish setter. Were one to attempt to analyze his pedigree in Plover's style he would have to write "unknown" instead of the names of famous importations from old Ireland. Yet, as I recall his work of the last few weeks—the equal of the best and superior to most I have seen by the most famous dogs of the day and some that have been so lately heralded to the public, work as fast, as stylish, as wide in range and as great in bird finding as any English setter's I have ever seen—I can only wonder why the lovers of this breed have not placed it to the front, where there is no reason why it should not stand at least the equal of any. No, he is not for sale, nor do I own him. I just found him up in the country and bought him for a friend, who is neither a pointer nor a setter man, but a thorough sportsman and—well, just a bird-dog man, that's all—so I guess a red Irish is good enough for him.

WHITE FAWN.

DAYTON, O.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I see that "Plover," in giving the breeding of the three pointers, Lad of Rush, Kent Elgin and Strideaway, gauges the field qualities of the dogs in their respective pedigrees by a standard of his own. Climax, which appears in the third generation of each dog's pedigree, is given rate 1 in that of Strideaway and Kent Elgin, but drops down to zero in the pedigree of Lad of Rush. Why she should be of less value as a field dog in one pedigree than another is a mystery to me. If this is a criterion by which to judge the balance of "Plover's" article, it is certainly of not much value to pointer breeders. One can easily discern the object for which his article has been written. Further comment is unnecessary.

DEATH OF KENT ELGIN

Last week the mere fact of this well-known dog's death on January 20 was mentioned, particulars to hand being very scant; since then we have received from Mr. T. T. Ashford, of the Birmingham Paint & Glass Company and owner of Kent Elgin, the following account of the unfortunate accident that befel his dog, its subsequent treatment, apparent recovery, and then sudden death:

"On December 29, near the Birmingham Paint & Glass Company's store, a little, common cur, seemingly mad, went amuck and commenced biting everything in its path. A little negro was bitten and several dogs, including Kent Elgin. The latter was bitten on the right front leg, just above the ankle. The dog which did the biting was killed by an officer, and Dr. Drummond made a post-mortem examination, ascertaining that the dog had rabies. Kent Elgin was carried to Dr. French's hospital, and there the wound, which did not seem at the time to be a very serious one, was thoroughly cauterized with nitrate of silver. The day following arrangements were made with the Pasteur Institute in New York, and on New Year's Day Kent Elgin was carefully crated and expressed to New York. A thorough and complete course of treatment was given the dog. The same day that he was received at the institute the first injection was given, and after that four injections daily were given, the strength of the virus being increased daily. At the institute Kent was treated in the best way possible. He occupied a double-decked compartment on the roof of the Pasteur building, and the room was kept dark to keep him quiet. He was fed twice a day on soup.

"On January 15 Kent Elgin was reported discharged and two days later he was en route home, arriving here on the nineteenth. After being home but a short while he took sick and was removed to Dr. French's establishment, where he began to grow worse. Sunday more than fifteen hundred people visited the famous dog. He grew restless as the night began to fall and seemed to be mad to escape from his quarters. Physicians went in and offered assistance. The Pasteur Institute was telegraphed to, and the reply came back to bleed the dog and, if that did no good, the case was hopeless. This was done, but it seemed to be of no avail, and at eight o'clock Kent Elgin died in great agonies."

Mr. Ashford will have received many expressions of regret for this good dog's death, the news of which many who knew neither the dog nor his owner must have been sorry to hear. Kent Elgin assisted in making field trial history in America, but his performances are of such recent date—since November, 1892—that they are fresh in the minds of field trial followers; moreover, in the AMERICAN FIELD of August 25 of last year we gave a sketch of his career, so that it is not necessary to go over it again. He was whelped May 2, 1891, was by King of Kent—Vera Bang, by Bang Bang—Christmas Vic, and was bred by Dr. H. D. Danford of Trimble, O.

THE STREATOR SHOW

(Special Report)

Streator, Illinois, has been saying nothing, but in connection with the second annual exhibition of the La Salle County Poultry Association was held a local bench show, which from the number of entries and the interest manifested merits more than local recognition. It is also hoped, from the success of this effort, that sufficient interest has been awakened to justify Streator in holding a regular A. K. C. show in another year. Ninety-two dogs were benched, and forty-two classes were represented by fairly typical specimens of the respective breeds.

In St. Bernards there were eighteen entries, of which seven were from the Illinois St. Bernard Kennels, headed by the well-known Lawrence Garza—with Illinois Pontiff, the Des Moines puppy—winner in the open class. Ferguson's Bruno, second, and John Kelley's Sultan S, third, were all well bred and typical specimens. In other St. Bernard classes the competition was less interesting.

In mastiffs there were four fine specimens, the first being landed by George Hazel's Scott; Col. Plumb's Marshall taking second.

Three Great Danes, none possessing intense type or character, were shown, and there was quite a little feeling when Harry Dumas' Brutus won over the mastodonic steel-blue Hector, owned by M. & N. Lebensberger, a veritable giant which outmeasures Melac.

Greyhounds had three very worthy representatives, Miss Nichol's Sam winning first.

Staghounds had one entry, an indifferent specimen.

Foxhounds had four entries.

But one lone beagle was present.

In the open class for dog pointers there were three entries—all good ones—very much of the same style of architecture. First went to Henry Howland's Sundale, though in the writer's opinion Dr. Curry's Spot should have won.

In English setters the class for dogs had but one entry, but two bitches very nearly equal in quality gave the judges some trouble; James Stewart's Dame finally was placed first.

Gordon setters, field and cocker spaniels had but one representative in each class, as also did collies, bull terriers, Boston terriers, fox terriers, black and tans, Italian greyhounds and Eskimos.

In English pugs Walter Voorhees' Midget won first from a typical though oversized son of Champion Kash, and E. H. Bailey's Chic won first in the bitch class with two good competitors. Charles Ashley's Tootsie won first in the puppy class.

Mr. B. Seebach, of Peru, made a fine kennel exhibit of Skye and Yorkshire terriers.

James Stewart was superintendent. The judging was done on "the jury system," by Dr. Smith, the veterinarian, Fred Brownell and Charles Sterling, fanciers of different breeds who were in no way interested in the awards.

POINTER CLUB'S MEETING

A meeting of the board of governors of the Pointer Club of America was held on January 25 at the office of Hon. John S. Wise, 44 Broad Street, New York, Mr. Wise presiding. The minutes of the last meeting were read and accepted.

It was resolved that the action of the committee at the last meeting in regard to the request made to the Westminster Kennel Club (that the Pointer Club be permitted to appoint a judge to award its special prizes at the New York show of 1895) be rescinded.

It was resolved that the AMERICAN FIELD's Pointer Cup shall be competed for at the New York dog show this month.

It was resolved that the action of the committee at the last meeting, regarding the two specials offered, shall be rescinded.

The following donations to the Westminster Kennel Club's show of 1895 were made: Ten dollars for best heavyweight pointer dog; $10 for the best heavyweight pointer bitch; $10 for the best lightweight pointer dog; $10 for the best lightweight pointer bitch. Competitors to be owned by members of the Pointer Club.

It was resolved that the annual meeting of the Pointer Club of America shall be held on Thursday, February 21, at 3 p. m., at Madison Square Garden.

The Secretary was instructed to have placed in the annual catalog of the Westminster Kennel Club's show that the competition for the Grand Annual Sweepstakes will be awarded at the W. K. C. show of 1895. Ten nominations have been made.

It was resolved that the following special prizes shall be donated to the Mascoutah Kennel Club's show in March: Ten dollars to the best pointer dog and $10 to the best pointer bitch, owned and exhibited by members of the Pointer Club of America.

The meeting adjourned.

MORE FIELD TRIALS FOR ONTARIO

LEAMINGTON, ONT.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Having read different articles that have appeared in your paper concerning the advisability of the Manitoba Field Trial Club again holding trials, giving as a reason the almost certainty of one club getting the other's entries and vice versa, thus insuring increased entries for both clubs, the idea has suggested itself to me that the same reasons would apply with us, here in Ontario, in connection with the international trials, supposing a club could be organized to run a meeting immediately before or after the international.

We have here in Essax County (the most southerly of Canada) as nice a ground to run a trial on as there is in America; we have a goodly number of birds and can get as large a preserve from the farmers as a club could desire.

There are a number of sportsmen here who heartily favor the scheme and will work to carry it through if the stake is a guaranteed one of not less than $200. A number in Detroit, Michigan and Ohio have spoken well of the idea and have signified a willingness to support it. Leamington is only thirty miles from Detroit and forty from Chatham, has two lines of railway, four good hotels with accommodation of the very best, and is situated so near to Chatham as to offer every advantge to hold a series of trials of the best. I would be glad to hear comment on the scheme through the columns of the AMERICAN FIELD.

The proposed stake, while not large, will be guaranteed, and taken in connection with the international trials should prove an inducement to some of our American cousins. Will they support us?

PHILADELPHIA KENNEL CLUB'S MEETING

The annual meeting of the Philadelphia Kennel Club was held at the Aldine Hotel, Philadelphia, on Tuesday, January 22, when the following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing year: President, Dr. G. G. Davis; vice-president, Mr. George H. Thomson; treasurer, Mr. S. Murray Mitchell; secretary, Dr. Alexander Glass; directors, Messrs. J. H. Winslow, F. G. Taylor, Chas. H. Phelps, G. Schreiber and Dr. George D. B. Darby; delegate to the American Kennel Club, Mr. F. G. Taylor.

Dr. Davis on taking the chair made an address and in a few well chosen words outlined the future policy of the club. He expressed his intention of giving careful thought to the selection of field trial and dog show committees, and of appointing to those committees members who are best fitted to carry out their respective duties.

The holding of a dog show was discussed, but nothing definite decided upon. The lack of a suitable building in Philadelphia is the principal reason for the hesitancy on the part of the club to announce a show.

A distinguished visitor was announced while the meeting was in progress, being none other than Mr. Chas. H. Phelps' recent purchase Champion Antonio, who was being delivered at the moment by the Adams Express Company. On his arrival from the West the noted dog was anxious to be released from his crate, and seemed in good health and spirits when shown to the admiring company. This purchase locates in Philadelphia another celebrated dog.

BULL TERRIER CHALLENGE

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I had not had time to read my AMERICAN FIELD of January 12 until to-day, when I received a copy with the article "A Bull Terrier Challenge" marked. Mr. Higginson is in error in saying his dog was the only one which beat Cardona at New York. Streatham Monarch, by beating the Duke of Rochester for a special, was placed two ahead of Cardona. Cardona has won challenges and specials since. I do not discuss Mr. Stevens' judging further than what my dogs' card says.

I do not care for a money bet, but I will accept the following: The AMERICAN FIELD shall offer a special called the AMERICAN FIELD's Cup, a silver cup, value $50 (for which Mr. Higginson and I shall each send the AMERICAN FIELD $25), for the best bull terrier dog at the New York show. Then if the Duke of Rochester wins in the open class he will compete against the winner of the challenge class.

ALTHOUGH we printed and sent out the same number of premium lists as last year, the inquiry for same is so great that we have been obliged to order a new supply to meet the demand. This is a most gratifying sign. We have received a number of new special prizes, although the secretary of the Fox Terrier Club is still dilatory. The St. Bernard Club offers, in addition to the specials already published, the following, namely: A silver cup for the best St. Bernard dog, a silver cup for the best St. Bernard bitch, a silver medal for the best American-bred rough-coated dog under three years, a silver medal for the best American-bred rough-coated bitch under three years, a silver medal for the best American-bred smooth-coated dog under three years, a silver medal for the best American-bred smooth-coated bitch under three years. These specials, as well as all the others offered by the St. Bernard Club, are to be competed for by dogs which are the property of members of the club. The Pointer Club of America has withdrawn the specials originally offered and in their place offers the following: $10 for best heavyweight pointer dog, same for bitch; same for best lightweight dog, same for bitch; also the American Field Pointer Cup, to be competed for under the conditions heretofore governing it. These, with the entries for the Grand Annual Pointer Sweepstakes for 1895 should swell the number of exhibits and make a record entry. The American Spaniel Club offers the following in addition to the specials before announced: The American Spaniel Club Trophy, value $100, for the best sporting spaniel over 28 pounds, to be won four times. Dr. S. J. Bradbury offers one Tom Thumb camera, value $10, for the best field spaniel bred by exhibitor, donor not to compete, also $5 for the best field spaniel puppy, donor not to compete. In this connection I may say that our committee has decided to open a class for field spaniel puppies to be known as class 102A. There will also be an extra challenge class made for curly poodles which will be known as 127A. Class 127 will be for challenge corded poodles. The object in making a veteran class for fox terriers was to bring out the old champions, many of which have been retired, and as it seems on consulting dates that limiting the class to fox terriers over five years would let in several of the present day cracks it has been decided to make the veteran class for smooth fox terriers over seven years, which will let in such veterans as Rafle, Raby Mixer, Lucifer (as in præsenti), Richmond Dazzle, Rachel, Spanger and other celebrities of bygone days, whose reappearance in the show ring and on the bench will be an interesting feature and also an educational lesson for the novitiate in

The Tabby Hook Cup for the best bull terr[ier] by exhibitor six months prior to the clos[e] will again be offered for competition. T[he] become the property of the exhibitor w[ho] times at shows designated by the Na[tional] Club. Spratts Patent offers a silver cup, [val]iars, for the largest number of dogs at the show, same to be the bona fide property of the exhibitor. Westminster Kennel Club offers $25 cash for the best pointer got by King of Kent. Fox Terrier Club specials, open to members only; Grand Challenge Cup for best fox terrier in the show. Stud dog stakes of 1895, Irish division of Produce Stakes of 1895, also $10 for best American-bred fox terrier, wire or smooth, $10 for best American-bred fox terrier in open classes, wire or smooth, $10 for best American-bred fox terrier puppy, wire or smooth, $10 for best brace American-bred smooth under eighteen months, $10 for best American-bred wirehaired fox terrier in puppy class, $10 for best brace American-bred wirehaired fox terriers.

No one was more surprised than I was when I read in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 19 a note signed by G. O. Smith, saying that I was the greatest mind reader of the day. I do not wish to touch on tender ground or interfere with other people's business, yet I felt as all breeders should feel. To get at the true state of affairs in regard to the man that I met while on 'Change on my late visit to St. Louis, which I explained in my note to the AMERICAN FIELD of January 12, and for the benefit of kennel owners I have written to Mr. G. O. Smith, and he very kindly sent me the name and address of the man in St. Louis that got the pointer dog and never paid for it. Mr. Smith referred me to a Mr. Chas. W. Tway, of Michigan City, Miss., for a further proof about the dog in question. At this writing I have in my possession the breeding and full description, with correct markings, of the pointer dog now being held in St. Louis without payment as agreed. I only see one way out of this difficulty, and that is for my St. Louis friend, if he wishes to place himself right, to write to the owner of Montie, asking him like a gentleman what he shall do in the matter. Let him show to the owner that he is now willing to correct a wrong. I have the greatest confidence that he will do him justice. If this is not done I shall be compelled to write to all the leading dog men in St. Louis and send his name and address, also the description with markings of the dog. If I am forced to pursue this course, I know some breeders in St Louis that will make it hot for any man living on Franklin Avenue to keep a valuable pointer knowing he does not own it honestly. The sporting men of New York have always looked upon and admired St. Louis as an ideal city for honesty among its sportsmen, and I hope for the sake of a dog that St. Louis will still retain our good opinion. The reason I do not send his name at this time is that I wish to give him an opportunity to make all things right, and at the same time I do not wish to make him public. I hope he will take advantage of this; if not, I shall do as I say, and every dog man in St. Louis will know, and that very soon. More anon.

ST. PAUL.

New York.

WE have received the following complaint, which appears to be well grounded, from Mr. Harry Hall, of Cincinnati: "As an exhibitor at the show held in this city, I write for an opinion relative to the division of money for first and second dogs. The amount in my case is small, but taking in all exhibitors it amounts to considerable to the Cincinnati poultry, pigeon and dog show. My complaint is that they are not dividing the money according to their printed announcement. I had a bitch in the open class for that sex, the total amount paid in was $6, and the first dog receiving one-half that amount, viz., $3; my bitch took second, and according to the printed matter was entitled to 30 per cent. of the $6, instead of which I receive 30 per cent. of $3, or 15 per cent. of the whole. I respectfully request that your valuable paper devote some space to this matter, so it can be placed in its correct light among dog men. Cincinnati has had a hard struggle to get up a dog exhibit, and it appears to me that it is a shame to spoil a good start by bad faith on the part of persons who handle such affairs." In the premium list for dogs at the Cincinnati Poultry and Pigeon Association's show we find the following announcement as to prizes: "Fifty per cent. of the total amount of money paid in for entries in each class will be awarded to dog winning first prize in its class. Thirty per cent. to dog winning second prize. Third and fourth prizes will be a ribbon." As the words "thirty per cent." are not followed by "of the remainder," or some similar expression, they must of course be understood to mean thirty per cent. of the total amount. Furthermore Mr. Eberhart, the superintendent, announced in the AMERICAN FIELD of December 22: "Fifty per cent. of entry to first, and thirty per cent. to second." There is no mistaking the meaning of that; it is plainly 30 per cent. of the entry fees. If the Cincinnati Poultry and Pigeon Association is treating other exhibitors of dogs in the same way that Mr. Hall complains of it will not stand much chance of gaining admittance to American Kennel Club membership, and there will have to be a new deal before Cincinnati can boast an annual dog show under American Kennel Club rules.

IN the AMERICAN FIELD of January 19 you printed some news of Boston terriers written by Mr. George R. Krehl in the English Stock-Keeper. It is interesting if only for the misleading information it contains, and there are two or three statements which need correction. In the first place the so-called French bulldog has played absolutely no part in the production of the true Boston terrier; the only two breeds concerned in the production of this terrier are the bulldog and the white English terrier—both essentially English. Mr. Krehl must kn[ow] only very recently that the French animal [was] seen in America, while the Boston terrier has [been] for twenty years in and around Boston. As to th[e] ment that Boston terriers are running about the st[reets] Paris as plentiful as fox terriers in London, I can st[ate] my own authority that such is not the case; and Mr Krehl's statement is conclusive proof to me that he does not know the one breed from the other. There is not a genuine Boston terrier in Paris—at least I never saw one [illegible] I handled the place over pretty thoroughly. In reference to Mr. James Mortimer's assertion, that he knew [illegible] was a French bulldog which would have [illegible] last New York show had it been [illegible] is sufficient to say that I had the pleasure of judging [illegible] rs at New York last year, and had a French bull been brought into the ring, not only would it not have been in the money but would have been sent out before the judging began. To those who know these two varieties there is not the faintest chance of mistaking one for the other. In putting before the public a dog new to them considerable discussion and criticism are naturally to be expected, but when such an authority on dogs as Mr. Krehl displays such amazing ignorance in his criticism it is only fair to assume that he knows but little of the breed.

New York. CHARLES F. LELAND.

KINDLY allow me space in your valuable journal to acknowledge being the sportsman alluded to in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 19 by Mr. G. O. Smith. After some little correspondence, in which a dog was described as being three and one-third years old and without a fault, and positively refusing to send it on approval, Mr. Smith changed his mind, and on his receipt of my letter stating I positively would not pay over one hundred dollars and the dog should be sent on approval I received a telegram stating "Dog been forwarded; $100; C. O. D., Adams Express." Of course, I refused the dog until Mr. Smith (who was wired) allowed trial. I deposited my $100, paid $4.50 expressage and took the dog, which I thought was seven or eight years old at least. I wanted the dog to get used to me, so I kept him four days (including Sunday), thinking it would be more satisfactory to both buyer and seller. I tried him, and in my opinion he was absolutely worthless as a quail dog. Consequently I returned him and got my $100 from the agent. I acknowledge that possibly I should have written Mr. Smith why the dog did not suit, but I presumed he knew. Now, notwithstanding the dog was priced to quite a few sportsmen during our correspondence, Mr. Smith kindly knocked off $25 to secure this dog (Buckeye Ben) the good home he knew a dog naturally would get with me. Now, while not making any pretentions to wealth, I was not too poor to have paid the return charges, and will add that I am worth more by $100 had I the dog and he the $100. Then again, I did not have two weeks off and wanted a hunt, for the fact is I train a few dogs, and at the time I paid this $4.50 expressage I had nine English setters to shoot over. Now I respectfully refer all purchasers to the editorial on pages 394 and 395 of the AMERICAN FIELD bearing date October 27, 1894.

Seaford, Del. HARRY C. HOPKINS.

MR. T. M. BRUMBY writes to say: "I notice three errors in my list of entries for the Southern Field Trial Club. H. H. Stambough's dog is entered as a black, white and tan setter, and it should be liver and white pointer; Tick Boy is entered as W. L. Kidwell's, and it should be Stoddard & Kidwell's; in the entries of the Manchester and Wartrace Kennels you have it that Rod's Girl is entered in the All-Age Stakes, and she is entered in the Selling Stakes. Please correct these in your next issue, and also state that the trials will commence the first Monday in February, at New Albany, Miss." If we had it that Rod's Girl was entered in the All-Age Stakes it was because Mr. Brumby sent the entry list that way; and the same with the other errors he mentions. Furthermore we have a strong suspicion that Mr. H. S. Bevan's Martin Cheslywick was intended for "Martin Chuzzlewit," though there is no telling what an owner's intentions are. We have more than once urged owners to use every care when sending entries to secretaries, and the latter to be very particular when sending names for publication. The corrections sent by Mr. Brumby change the total number of entries for the Southern All-Age Stakes from 38 to 37, the number of English setters from 31 to 29, and the number of pointers from 7 to 8. The date of the trials has been kept before the public by our list of "Kennel Fixtures" for many weeks.

MR. ARTHUR FROEBLING has been at it again, importing dachshunde. This time he has had a couple of rough-haired ones sent over, and though this variety is fairly plentiful in some parts of Germany these are the only ones we know of in America. They are dog and bitch, and, like the three previously imported by Mr. Froembling and mentioned in these columns four weeks ago, are from the kennel of Mr. R. Benda of Biesenthal, near Berlin, who bred them. The dog, Bergrath Reinecke (874, Teckel Club's Stud Book), is by Aha Claus (646)—Aberdie Reinecke (652) and was third at Muenchen in 1893 and reserve at Coethen the same year; the bitch, Penni Reinecke (1244), is by Pfepper Magstadt—Hexe and has two firsts to her credit, at Coethen in 1893 and at Erfurst last year. They will be shown at Chicago next month. Though they landed at New York on Monday of last week they did not reach Chicago until the Friday. Mr. Benda had notified Mr. Froembling that Penni would come in season about or before the time of her arrival, and when she and her male companion were let out of their crates at the Chicago custom house she was served at once by Bergrath; their new owner was satisfied that it should be so.

[illegible] THE dog referred to by T. W. S. in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 12 is in my possession, and has been for maybe two years. This man has been hanging around my home to try and find marks by which to identify it, and my impression is that he is trying to work some scheme by which to get possession of the dog. I can see no other object in his busying himself in the matter. I desire to say that I am not in the habit of either stealing or receiving other people's property; and if I have even a dog that belongs to someone else and they can satisfactorily prove the [illegible] it I shall be glad to communicate [illegible] nt to part wi h him, my whole [illegible] me fast friends. If any person [illegible] ai through this T. W. S. they [illegible] hard fight, but anyone can [illegible] h me and get civil and fair treatment. I refer parties interested to any bank or business man, city or county officer in this city.

Des Moines, Ia. WM. MUSSON.

FOR twenty years I have been breeding setters and pointers and, as the records will show, I have been very successful in breeding both show and field trial dogs. Now, after all these years, with the best strain of dogs I ever owned, my business compels me to move to Toronto; and I leave for England early in the Spring, to be gone for some time on business. I shall show my field trial winners, Brighton Tobe and Faustina, at New York, and may also show some of Tobe's puppies. It is with much regret I am compelled to leave the kennel world, for I have spared no money to get the best and now have eighteen in my breaker's hands, in North Carolina, for next year's Derbys; some of them are Tobe's puppies, and I consider Tobe second to no dog living; his public record speaks for him, winning at both the Manitoba and International trials the past year. I assure you it is hard parting, but such is life.

London, Ont. T. G. DAVEY.

IN order that our handlers' prize may be perfectly understood, we offer the following explanation: We offer to any handler, outside of Denver, $1 per head for every dog shown, provided the dogs are in good show condition and he brings as many as thirty. If he only brings thirty good dogs he will only get $30, and if he should have but twenty-nine he would get nothing, and on the other hand if he brings more than thirty he will get $1 for every dog shown. Our idea in arranging the handlers' prize in this way was to prevent underhanded work, and the pooling of two or three handlers to beat someone else. Each handler will know exactly what amount of a handlers' prize he will get and will not have to worry about the number that anyone else might bring. We believe that if the handlers will give this a little careful consideration they will agree with us that it is fair and just to all concerned.

A BRACE of imported borzois are expected this week on the Bovic for the Terra Cotta Kennels. They are from the kennel of Mr. A. J. Rousseau, St. Petersburg, Russia, and are Ataman IV, a white and brindled dog, whelped March 15, 1888, and Biddy Rees, a young white and lemon bitch, whelped May 15, 1893; the latter is by Ataman the Great out of Mr. Rousseau's Outshischka, and the last named is the bitch which M. Rousseau stated in these columns about a year ago is the only borzoi alive that can claim the honor of being a gold medal winner in Russia. Biddy Rees was bred to a dog named Zlobrey before she left her Russian home, and Messrs. Tulk & Kent expect a litter of little Biddys and Zlobreys early next month.

I SAW in the AMERICAN FIELD of January 19 that Mr. H. L. Kreuder announces he has bought the beagle Base. I want to congratulate him on possessing another good beagle, and at the same time inform him that Base did not win first place in the Northwestern Beagle Club trials in 1893, as he stated in his letter. Base was second, and my hound, Illwaco, won. I hardly see what excuse Mr. Kreuder can have for making this statement, for if he has read the AMERICAN FIELD these last few months he would know better. The Northwestern trials were not finished at the 1894 meet, and Base was given first place without the first series of his class being finished; so his honors are somewhat dimmed on that account.

IT is with regret that we learn of Mr. P. T. Madison's resignation of the secretaryship of the United States Field Trial Club. Ever since the formation of the club he has been its secretary and has performed the duties of the office in a manner that his successor, whoever he may be, will find hard to equal. During Mr. Madison's term of office the club has prospered exceedingly, not so much perhaps financially as in general favor, and his popularity both personally and as an officer has had much to do with it. Officers and members alike have learned to depend on him so much that he will be hard to replace. However, the club contains many good men, and we have no doubt the occasion will bring forth the man.

MR. CLIFFORD A. SHINN, the Skye terrier pioneer, still adheres to his fancy and is going on well, judging from the following excerpt from a letter just received: "The Irish terrier bitch Gassala III (31232), which I recently purchased from Mr. B. F. Lewis, has whelped nine beauties (four dogs) by Champion Jack Briggs. My Skye terrier Bessie is also down with five (two dogs) by Elphinstone, The Queen of Skyes has three of each sex by Champion Sir Stafford, and Princess May has seven (five dogs) by Sir Thomas. Last year I bred thirty-one Skyes; this year it will reach double that. One advertisement in the AMERICAN FIELD sold all I had (ten) at that time."

DR. R. J WITHERS' host of friends will be glad to know that he is in the fancy as strong as ever, and that his health has improved since he moved away out to Los Angeles. Mr. C. A. Sumner having retired from the secretaryship of the Southern California Kennel Club, Dr. Withers has been elected to the position, and his first official communication is as follows: "A very enthusiastic meeting of the Southern California Kennel Club was held a few days since, at which it was decided to hold a dog show during April. A number of new members joined, and the amount of enthusiasm displayed augurs well for the coming show."

ADVERTISING in this issue, the Mascoutah Kennel Club announces the superintendent's address and the date of closing of entries, and we hope readers, when they have forgotten these important items and want to know them all of a sudden, will bear in mind that they can be found in the club's advertisement or in our Kennel Fixtures. Last week we gave a lengthy review of the premium list for the Chicago show, but anyone desiring a copy of the list itself can obtain one by writing to Mr. George Hill, who will gladly comply with the request.

THE regular annual meeting of the Pointer Club of America will take place during the Westminster Kennel Club's show, on Thursday, February 21, at 3 p. m. All are earnestly urged to make it convenient to be present at this meeting. The attendance of every member is looked forward to, and the occasion will warrant coöperation and support. It is the pointer that we seek to honor and support, and in order to accomplish the desired end eternal vigilance is the price of success.

New York. FREDERIC S. WEBSTER, Secy.

GLANCING over our Kennel Fixtures we find that this is the last opportunity we shall have of calling attention to the following: The closing of entries on Monday next for the New York show; the commencement of the Southern trials on the same day; the U. S. F. T. Club's special meeting on Tuesday; and the Canadian Kennel Club's executive meeting on Friday next, February 8. The last mentioned will probably be fraught with much importance to Canadian dogdom, so every member of the executive committee should strive to be present.

IT may be of interest to you and your readers to know that we received on January 4 from Mr. W. F. Archer, of London, England, the fox terrier Brixton Plunger (late Partney Plunger), by Raby Trigger out of Richmond Eastward, and winner of first and second at Rawmarsh and second at Barnsby. Plunger is a twenty-pound dog with even black and tan head and black spot at base of tail; he is a typical terrier, dead game and a ratter, and is particularly good in head, ears and coat.

OUR picture of Delhi was taken at the Eastern trials last November, when he ran in the Derby, but was unplaced. However, he is a young pointer that is rapidly rising to the top of the ladder, for he won the Manitoba Derby last September, beating a lot of good ones—both setters and pointers—and last week enhanced his reputation greatly by landing the double event at West Point, Miss, his victory over the older dogs being especially meritorious.

MR C. H. PHELPS JR. writes us as follows anent his recent acquisition, Antonio: "From the reports of the U. S. Winter Trials it will be seen that Antonio has farther added to his reputation as a sire of winners, Tony's Gale, Tony's Boy and Lady Mildred having been placed first, second and third, in order named, in the Derby. Fifteen of his get have started in trials, winning fourteen times, four firsts, four seconds, four thirds, and two fourths."

IN your list of Names Claimed last week I claimed the name Robina for a beagle puppy, and called it a bitch puppy, whereas it is a dog. I will add that the bitch Little Rhody, Robina's litter sister, now going on three months old, weighs but seventeen ounces, while the others weigh from four to five pounds; her condition is perfect.

Providence, R. I. F. W. CIELFELD.

I RECENTLY saw in the AMERICAN FIELD mention of a Lawrence Garza puppy down in Illinois that promises to be a good one. I inclose you photograph of a little cousin of his that weighed in exactly the same notch (86 pounds) the day he was four months old, and I don't think there is anything the matter with him.

Lincoln, Neb. B. S. WADSWORTH.

MR. A. C. WILMERDING, president of the American Spaniel Club, and Miss Katherine Rutgers Bache were married Thursday evening, January 22, in Trinity chapel, New York. We extend our congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Wilmerding and sincerely trust their future lot in life may be redolent of sunshine and happiness.

THE annual meeting of the American Kennel Club will be held at Madison Square Garden on Friday, February 22, at 2:30 p. m. The regular quarterly meeting of the executive committee of the club will be held at the same place and on the same date, immediately following the meeting of the club.

G. W. CLAYTON of Chicago will attend the Detroit show, with a string of bull terriers, black and tan terriers and a few Great Danes and St. Bernards, and will be able to handle a few more dogs for anyone desiring to show there. He may be reached by addressing P. O. Box 914.

THE St. Louis Kennel Club has about half its stock subscribed for. Mr. J. A. Long says the prospects are particularly bright for the remainder to be taken soon, and next year the club expects to be in line with the best of them.

THERE will be a meeting of the Irish Setter Club of America at Madison Square Garden, New York, on Thursday, February 21, 1895, at 3 p. m. By order of the president.

EXHIBITION and auction sale of paintings by the late J. M. Tracy. All sportsmen know Tracy's paintings. No American painter excelled or even equaled him in depicting animated sporting sketches, or in faithful pictures of dogs, horses and other animals. Prints of Mr. Tracy's pictures are very plentiful, but the coming sale is the largest collection of his original works ever shown together. About 150 of his best and most characteristic paintings will be on exhibition from Monday, February 18, until Thursday, February 21, at J. B. Norman's auction rooms, 238 Fifth Avenue, New York, and the sale will take place on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, February 20 and 21.

AMERICAN COURSING BOARD'S REVISED CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS

At the American Coursing Board's meeting held at Goodland, Kan., last October, Messrs. J. Herbert Watson and T. W. Bartels were appointed a committee to revise the constitution and by-laws and submit same for approval. Their work has been completed promptly, and we have received from the Secretary a copy for publication. A copy has been mailed also to each member of the board, and, as it is desirable that the board's constitution and by-laws should be published in the first volume of the stud book, members should lose no time, although giving the matter proper consideration, in sending in their votes to the Secretary.

The revised constitution is as follows:

SEC. I.—The American Coursing Board shall be composed of members elected by the coursing clubs of the United States having not less than ten members each, and of members elected as hereinafter provided.

SEC. II.—No coursing club shall elect more than two representatives, and should any club fail to hold a coursing meeting for two consecutive seasons that club shall cease to send representative members.

SEC. III.—The American Coursing Board may elect as members (the number of members so elected not to exceed twenty-five) any well-known supporters of public coursing who have been proposed and seconded by two members of the American Coursing Board at any regular meeting. Members are elected by the American Coursing Board for five years and are eligible for re-election. The election shall be by ballot, in which one black ball in five will exclude.

SEC. IV.—The American Coursing Board shall annually on the day of its last regular meeting of the season elect two of its members as president and secretary. At all its meetings five shall be a quorum.

SEC. V.—Two members elected by the coursing clubs shall retire annually in the regular rotation of their clubs, and the secretary shall on or before the 1st of October of each year give notice to the club whose turn it is to elect representatives. Returns of the various representatives so elected shall be sent to the secretary on or before the 1st of January in each year. Vacancies in the representatives of coursing clubs shall be filled up by these clubs respectively.

SEC. VI.—Coursing clubs desirous of joining the American Coursing Board must send evidence of the qualifications to the secretary. All clubs having joined must contribute their quota toward the expenses, and any club failing so to do will be disqualified from returning members to the American Coursing Board; and no member can vote while the club by which he was elected is in arrears. At the last regular meeting of the season in each year, a statement of expenses shall be submitted by the secretary, and the contributions required from each club shall be fixed. An assessment for necessary expenses may be levied at any time upon the certification of the president and secretary, and must be paid by the clubs within thirty days thereafter.

SEC. VII.—Every coursing meeting, unless the contrary be declared by the program of an open meeting or by club rules, shall be subject to all the rules and regulations of the American Coursing Board. Every question or matter in dispute connected with coursing can be brought before the American Coursing Board for its decision.

SEC. VIII.—The American Coursing Board may, if it thinks fit, refer the examination of any case brought before it to a committee consisting of not less than three members. Every such committee shall make a written report to the secretary, to be laid before the American Coursing Board for its approval.

SEC. IX.—Every decision of the American Coursing Board shall be final unless either party within six months shall apply for a rehearing, on the ground that evidence will be adduced which was not procurable at the previous hearing; and the American Coursing Board may order that the expenses attending any case or matter in dispute brought before it shall be borne by the parties interested as the American Coursing Board may direct.

SEC. X.—The secretary shall place on record in the minutes of the business of the American Coursing Board, and shall send to the keeper of the stud book and make public every case brought before the American Coursing Board, with the decision arrived at.

SEC. XI.—Meetings for dispatch of business, for the revision or alteration of rules, and for election of members, shall be held at every coursing meeting governed by the rules of the American Coursing Board. Special meeting may be called at such time and place as the president may appoint, and at a special meeting nothing but the special business for which the meeting was called can be brought before it.

We are also requested to announce that it is proposed to add the following to Rule 14: "No dog entered in the name of a kennel or partnership shall be guarded unless it shall have been registered as the property of said kennel or partnership thirty days prior to entry." Who are the proposer and seconder of this addition we are not informed, but it is worthy of consideration, and presumably a vote on it is required.

STUD BOOK FUND

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—My letter questioning the practicability or wisdom of your advice to the American Coursing Board as to the publication of its stud book was not intended to be an utterance of the board or to indicate that the board would adopt any particular view of the subject. My own opinion, however, was reflected in the questions asked, and your further suggestions on the subject do not convince me that your idea is a good one. Granting that a fund can be raised by subscription, who will undertake to raise it in time to publish the stud book this Summer? It would appear that you think it an innovation to permit an individual to publish the stud book at his own risk, but you have overlooked the fact, or else I am mistaken in believing, that the English Greyhound Stud Book has always been published in that manner.

It may be stated as a fact that generally when the government undertakes any business it is done in a more wasteful manner than the same business would be transacted by an individual, upon the principle that what is everybody's business is nobody's business. Smaller organizations are afflicted by the same principle, and unless the American Coursing Board, for some reason not yet stated, is exempt from probabilities that would attach to the beginning of business without capital by any other organization, it is quite likely, if not almost certain, that a debt would be the outcome of its attempt to publish the stud book in the manner you advise. When an individual undertakes the publication at his own risk the case is quite different. The stimulus of personal profit and the possibility of personal loss are both factors that make it quite likely that there will be a balance on the right side of the ledger.

J. HERBERT WATSON.

NOTES

FROM Mr. Watson's article this week it seems that he overlooks the fact that our suggestion as to raising a fund for the publication of a stud book was made on the supposition that the American Coursing Board, having no resources of its own, was going to allow the Keeper of the Stud Book to advance the money necessary and leave him to recoup himself, if possible, from subsequent receipts. Mr. Williams was certainly not thinking of undertaking the publication as a private venture when he wrote to the Secretary of the American Coursing Board that he did not see his way clear to get out a stud book on a deficit of seven dollars and some odd cents; and it was on Mr. Williams' own remarks that our supposition was grounded. If the A. C. B. and Mr. Williams enter into the arrangement spoken of by Mr. Watson two weeks ago it is not our affair, as we have remarked previously. As to who should undertake to raise by subscription a fund, if one were desired, that would be a matter for the board to decide. As regards the publication of the English Stud Book, circumstances alter cases; what has proved a very good arrangement over there might not be the best here. We do not say it would not, but it might not. The truth of Mr. Watson's remarks about the squandering of government money there is no denying, but the principle that what is everybody's business is nobody's business would hardly be present here, because the publication of the stud book would be very much the keeper's business; and we believe most coursing men would labor quite as faithfully for the mere honor of turning out a satisfactory book and for their love of the sport with which it was connected as they would if personal profit was the incentive. We quite agree with Mr. Watson that the beginning of business without capital generally ends disastrously, but we do not agree with him that "it is quite likely, if not almost certain, that a debt would be the outcome" of the plan we proposed, because our suggestion was to raise money beforehand (consequently the board would not be beginning business without capital) and thus avoid the chance of running into debt.

IN accordance with your suggestion in last week's AMERICAN FIELD, the Spring meeting of the Aberdeen Coursing Club will begin on Monday of the week following the meeting of the North Dakota Coursing Club. This will give those desiring to attend both meetings an opportunity to do so without loss of time, and will also allow ample time for dogs to recuperate between events. We have excellent duck shooting in April at Oakes and points along the Jim River between that point and this. So anyone fearing that the time between meetings will hang heavily might bring along his "shootin' irons" and spend a day or two among the mallards and teal. Kindly change date of our meeting from first to third week in April and oblige

Aberdeen, S. D. J. H. DAVIS, Secy.

WE have made mention lately of some very early litters obtained by American breeders, but an English courser, Mr. John Jackson, of Ripon, Yorkshire, has registered a litter whelped on New Year's Day.

WE hear that entries for the Altcar Club's Produce Stakes are coming in at a satisfactory rat[illegible] promising saplings should not hesitate to [illegible] this event, which will prove very valuabl[illegible] to hear from St. Louis that two or three [illegible] are already entered.

OLICANA, the bitch brought to this country by George Raper and now owned by Mr. L. F. Bartels, was bred to Border Ruffian about the middle of January.

Rifle

RIFLE SHOOTING

BOSTON, MASS.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Being always interested in the stories of the experiences of others published in your paper, I thought perhaps the relation of a peculiar experience of mine might interest some, therefore I venture to give it.

Last Fall my brother and I went for an outing down to one of the large lakes in the eastern part of Maine. We employed the services of a guide to do the cooking, woodcutting, etc., incident to camp life in the woods. My brother and I each had a rifle, the shooting qualities of which we had never tested, and naturally we took the first convenient opportunity of making a test.

After paddling until nearly dark on the day of starting out, we pitched our tent on a good sized island in the lake, cooked our supper and finally turned in for the night. My brother proved to be an earlier riser than myself the next morning and his first thought seemed to be to find some object worthy of proving the qualities of his rifle and his shooting ability. He made his way on to the beach and there evidently found something satisfactory, for presently I heard the rifle speak. In a few minutes he called to me to come and see the excellent shot he had just made, but being busy about something else I told him I could not be bothered. In a short time I also was prepared to test my rifle, skill, etc., and picking up the rifle also proceeded to the beach in quest of a mark.

By this time my brother had gone quite a ways down the beach, and I naturally sought an object in the opposite direction. After searching a moment my eye struck a tree trunk that was lodged about half upon the shore and the rest projected out into the water. On this, directly over the edge of the water, was the stump of a limb about four inches long. I decided to shoot at the center of the trunk directly under the stump of the limb, sighted the rifle and fired. My next move was to examine that trunk, and there, fairly in the center, directly under the stump, was a bullet hole. I congratulated myself upon the shot and paced the distance back to where I had stood, making it seventy-five yards. A shot such as this could not be ignored, so I called my brother, and as he was then unoccupied, he came to see the wonderful shot.

"You see that trunk?" said I.

"Yes," said he.

"You see the stump on it, right over the water? Well, I shot at the middle of that trunk, directly under the stump, and put the ball exactly where I aimed for."

"The deuce you did!" said he. "That is exactly what I shot at when I called to you to come, and I put that bullet hole there myself."

This statement rather discouraged me, but I knew that if I had shot either under or over the trunk I would have seen the bullet hit the water, so we both proceeded to the trunk for further examination, and, if possible, conviction. There was no getting around it; there was but one bullet hole in that trunk that we could discover. This rather disgusted me, but we decided to get the ax and sift the matter to the bottom. At every chip that came out we would closely examine the hole for evidence of the presence of more than one bullet, but could find none. At last my brother stooped down and in triumph brought a bullet, exclaiming:

"Yes, and here's my bullet!" and handed the bullet to me.

Said I, "that's not your bullet; your bullet is not so heavy as that."

Looking down at the cut in the trunk his eye caught something bright in the water directly under and he replied:

"I guess that's so, for here is mine," and he fished out his bullet that had dropped into the water unobserved. He too had paced off the distance after examining his bullet mark and made it seventy-five yards.

I hesitated a good while before writing the foregoing on account of the probability of unbelievers, but if there are such, I freely forgive them, as under similar circumstances I think I would be numbered with them.

NOTES

CONCERNING Mr. Brokaw's remarks about "the perfect rifle," let me say a few words. The trajectory and penetration tables are useful assistants when one is selecting a rifle, but an "accuracy" table should be added. Misled by the trajectory table and the common report of the efficiency of the express cartridge, I once bought a .50-110. The manufacturers said it would shoot accurately up to 150 yards. It would do nothing of the sort it would not shoot accurately at 100 yards. At 50 or 75 yards it was true to the center, but at anything over 100 yards the short, light bullet took to turning somersaults, keyholed and flew wide of the center. I bought the rifle for bear hunting, but, after giving it a thorough trial at a target, I was glad to give it away, as I didn't want to shoot [illegible] bear's shoulder at 150 yards and hit him in a [illegible] There is something radically wrong in the [illegible] cartridge. Doubtless the ball would drop a deer in [illegible] tracks if it should hit it, but that "if" is too big a [illegible] in the proposition.

The Cincinnati Rifle Association and the St. Louis Rifle and Pistol Club will shoot a team telegraph match, twelve men a team, 25 shots per man, on the Standard target, February 10. The match is at 200 yards, off hand, [illegible] to be counted a miss.

The following scores were made by the Cincinnati [illegible] at its range on January 27, at the Four Mile House, Reading Road. Conditions: 200 yards off hand at the Standard target. At the next regular shoot, February 10, twelve members of this association will shoot a telegraph match with the St Louis Rifle and Pistol Club. Conditions: 200 yards off hand, Standard targets, 25 shots per man. All shots outside a 3 counted a miss.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NEW JERSEY TRAP SHOOTERS' LEAGUE

NEWARK, N. J.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The annual meeting of the above named league took place on Jauuary 21 at the office of the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., 312 Broadway, New York City, that company's manager, Mr. P. G. Sanford, having kindly offered the league the use of a room.

There were present Mr. T. H. Keller of the Climax Gun Club, of Fanwood; Dr. T. J. Jackson, Union, of Springfield; C. W. McPeek, Endeavor, Jersey City; S. B. Tillow, Maplewood, Maplewood; W. R. Hobart, South Side, Newark; Paul A. Jeanneret, Boiling Springs, Rutherford, as delegates from their respective clubs. Other gentlemen present were Messrs. M. F. Lindsley of the American Wood Powder Co., a member of the Endeavor club; J. D. Polhamus of the same club; F. V. Van Dyke, W. N. Drake, A. A. Sickley, Maplewood; E. D. Miller, Union; J. P. Cooper of Riverside Gun Club of Red Bank; P. E. Chetwood of Elizabeth; W. H. Huck, of Boiling Springs, of Rutherford; Major Pentz and Mr. Edward Banks.

The Secretary read a note from Mr. R. M. Pettit, the league's president, in which that gentleman declared his inability to be present, and, upon motion, Mr. Jeaneret was made chairman pro tem. The Secretary's report was then read and approved, as was also that of the Treasurer. On motion of Mr. Hobart, the Riverside Gun Club of Red Bank was admitted to membership and Mr. Robert E. Chetwood of the Elizabeth Gun Club presented the name of his club, which was also elected. The clubs which were not represented at this meeting were Brunswick of New Brunswick and Myrtle Park of Irvingtou.

A communication from Mr. R. M. Pettit, the president of the League in 1894, was read, tendering his resignation, which was accepted with regrets. Dr T. J. Jackson, Union; T. H. Keller, Climax; R. E. Chetwood, Elizabeth; W. H. Huck, Boiling Springs; C. W. McPeek, Endeavor; S. B Tillow, Maplewood; J. P. Cooper, Riverside, and E. D. Miller were nominated for president, and upon vote Mr. Miller received six out of the eight votes cast and was, upon motion of Mr. Hobart, declared unanimously elected. Mr. Miller, on being conducted to the chair, said that he considered himself highly honored and would do all he could to further the success of the league. Further ballots resulted in the choice of W. R. Hobart for secretary-treasurer, W. N. Drake for manager, and C. W. McPeek and R. E Chetwood, governors.

Mr. Jeanneret, Boiling Springs, stated that his club had decided to re-enter the league, provided that any member of a club who had shot on a team should be debarred from shooting on any other team. Mr Hobart stated that in his experience, which dated back about ten years, such action would work hardship to some of the clubs, and after remarks by Mr. Lindsley, Dr. Jackson and others, the matter was dropped. The motion of Mr. McPeek, however, prevailed to the effect that each club should obtain a list of members who from choice would shoot with that club, and, after such obligation had been discharged, would have the privilege of shooting with any other club of which they were members, such list to be forwarded to the league's secretary.

Mr. Hobart moved, which was agreed to, that secretaries of clubs should forward to the league's secretary a memorandum of the number of targets shot at in the tournaments.

The same gentleman moved that the figures used in the computation for prizes should be those of five shoots. This motion was lost, and by a ballot it was decided that the best four should be the basis. This distributes the prizes as follows: Maplewood first, South Side second, Union third, Climax fourth, the other class being in order of merit: Endeavor, Myrtle Park and Brunswick.

Section 13 of the by-laws was then altered to read: "It shall be necessary in order to qualify for the prizes that clubs should be represented in a majority of contests held during the season."

The Secretary moved that members of clubs should shoot under their own names. This was agreed to with the proviso that anyone who used an assumed name should have the same registered on the books of his club and in the club list furnished the league secretary.

A motion was then made that all the team contests should be shot "knowu traps, unknown angles." After considerable discussion the vote resulted in a tie, and the President of the league having a casting vote decided in the affirmative.

A motion followed that the President appoint a committee of three to solicit prizes for the coming year. This was carried and the Chair appointed Dr. T. J. Jackson, P. A. Jeanneret and W. N. Drake.

The Secretary was authorized to have a number of copies of the constitution and by-laws printed and circulated among the members.

It was resolved, on motion of Dr. Jackson, that no tournament should be held in the month of July, and Mr. Drake's motion prevailed that the drawing for the clubs to hold the monthly tournaments should be proceeded with. This was done with the following result: February, Boiling Springs; March, Myrtle Park; April, Maplewood; May, Elizabeth; June, Endeavor; August, Climax; September, Brunswick; October, Riverside; November, Union; December, South Side.

After some discussion in regard to a consolidation with the New Jersey State Sportsmen's Association, which was advocated by Mr. Keller, the meeting adjourned.

W. R. HOBART, Secy.

DR. CARVER REPLIES TO MR. BROWN

KANSAS CITY. MO.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—In reply to Mr. Brown of Texas, I will say that he has done me a great injustice. I am not sensitive on the subject of being beaten, but still I am proud of my record of sixteen years, having shot 384 matches in all parts of the world and been beaten by five men only, and then at times when out of practice and by men who made pheuomenal scores; in fact outshot themselves. As far as shooting goes I can lose every match as long as I live and then be a big winner.

Now, here is where I have a little fault to find. For a number of years I have been ridiculed by strangers, men who have never seen me, my actions criticised, and my shooting ability questioned. On one or two occasions I have hunted men up who had written disparagingly of me and found them of so little consequence that I regretted the trouble I had taken to unearth them. In this case I am sure that if I should go to the necessary trouble I possibly might find a most worthy and intellectual gentlemen who, having made a mistake, wishes to correct it and extend me an invitation to shoot in San Antonio. This is all very nice as far as it goes, but as Mr. Brown suggests that "there is a nigger in the woodpile, aud a big one," and as he had no respect for me in previous communications, I hope in the futu e to command his respect by placing him in a position that he cannot get out of unless he is a fit companion for the man who has shown himself to be but a poor model of a sportsman and the hero of his intellectual and elastic imagination.

Mr. Brown says if I will give him just a little odds he will shoot me a race. Now I will see if he will. I will give him twenty five dead birds in one hundred, for two hundred and fifty or five hundred dollars, and pay his expeuses to Chicago any day in February and shoot him a match at 100 live birds, 30 yards rise, American Shooting Association rules, both of us to use 12-gauge guns.

Now, one so refined and cultured as his brainy articles indicate, and as a Texan whose chivalry is world wide, I will expect him to meet me in Chicago in February.

DR. W. F. CARVER,
Champion Shot of the World.

CARVER—KLEINMAN

The match for the Champiou Live Bird Shot of America medal, which Dr. W. F. Carver challenged Geo. Kleinmau for, and which was to have been shot at Chicago, Thursday, January 24, was forfeited by Mr. Kleinman, on account of serious illness, he being confined to his home with an attack of the grip. Dr. Carver went to Chicago from Kansas City, fully equipped for the shoot, and was very much disappointed at not having an opportunity to shoot the race, preferring to win by skill rather than by forfeit. He was willing to wait a few days if it was possible for Mr. Kleinman to recover sufficiently, but as there was no certainty when Mr. Kleinman would be fit for the race, both he and his backer, Mr. Jno. Porter, agreed to forfeit the badge and forfeit money. Dr. Carver generously returned half the forfeit money.

Dr. Carver regretted the turn affairs had taken, for the reason, as he stated: "The medal was really mine by forfeit. Mr. Kleinman having overlooked the date for acceptance in the first place January 1; but I waived the claim, as I would much rather shoot for it, and therefore let the challenge stand. I was put to considerable expense in going to Chicago to shoot the match and was willing to wait a few days longer, but Mr. Kleinman was a sick man and there was nothing else to do."

Dr. Carver would liked to have shot a few races with Chicago shooters, but hearing of no one willing to meet him for a stake, he left for Kansas City on the evening train. He expressed himself ready to shoot any man for any amount.

NOTES

THE Humane Society at Oak Park, Ill., is just now making life unpleasant to a degree for the members of the Cicero Gun Club, by interfering with, and in a measure preveuting the club from shooting live birds at the trap. A week or two prior to New Year's Day the club purchased a lot of live birds from a commission firm on South Water Street, Chicago, took them to Oak Park, placed them in a large building and fed them up preparatory to a shoot on January 1, sending out word to their friends and other clubs that on New Year's Day live bird shooting would be the order at the club's grounds. Nothing was known by the club members that their sport on that day was to be interfered with, though some mutterings had now and theu been heard from the Humane Society and others who, not knowing much about trap shooting as it is conducted at the present time, were led to believe it was a barbarous and cruel pastime. New Year's Day came and the club members prepared for their shoot, and, when all was ready and the shoot about to commence, an officer visited the club grounds and served notice on the club's officers warning them that if they shot any more live birds at the trap in the town of Cicero they did so at their peril. This was somewhat of a surprise and cast a cloud over the bright anticipations of many of the club members who had calculated on a day's sport before the traps. Some of the members were in favor of going on with the shoot and settling with the authorities afterward; but most of the club members are worthy citizens, law-abiding, and honorable people, consequently they decided to call the shoot off until they could inquire into the whys and wherefores and learn how it was, with four members of the town board, men who were sportsmen and who did not object to live bird shooting at the trap, such an order against the club should have been permitted to issue from the board, and at the meeting of the board this mouth the club will present its side of the question and endeavor to have the order set aside. Two or three other gun clubs beside the Cicero club have shooting grounds in the township, and they too have been notified that live bird shooting will not be allowed; and these clubs are also awaiting the action of the town board at its next meeting. The rupture between the Humaue Society and the gun club of Oak Park is not confined to those organizations aloue, but has been taken up by the friends of each, and the feeling has spread until nearly everyone in the suburb is allied with one side or the other, and in many cases those who should be the warmest of friends and the best of neighbors have become considerably estranged, all because the gun club thinks it proper to shoot live birds at the trap and the Humane Society thinks that to do so is cruelty to animals. The question that is now agitating the good people of one of the pleasantest suburbs of Chicago aud promises an open rupture among friends and neighbors is not a new one, and in most localities where test cases have been made it has been demonstrated that, as carried on to-day, the shooting of live birds at the trap is not cruelty to animals in the sense that the Humane Society claims it to be.

THE meeting held at the Astor House, New York, on January 24 for the purpose of forming a National body for the governing of trap shooting in the United States was attended by the following gentlemen: E. E. Shaner, Pittsburg, Pa.; Dr. G. V. Hudson, New York; W. M. Thomas, Bridgeport, Conn.; B. C. Everinghim, Peekskill, N. Y.; David Brown, Newburg, N. Y.; J. H Richmond, Rutherford, N. J.; J. A. H. Dressel, Pittsburg, Pa.; H. H. Stevens, New Brunswick, N. J.; J. L. Chamberlain, Flemington, N. J.; R. H. Breintnall, Newark, N. J.; Dr. T. J. Jackson, Springfield, N. J.; W. H. Wolstencroft, Philadelphia; C. H. Burbridge, Hartford Conn.; L. H. Schortemeier, New York; W. F. Quimby, New York; W. R. Hobart, Newark, N. J; Jacob Pentz, Plainfield, N. J; Justus Van Lengerke and P. A. Jeauneret, New York. Major Breintnail was made temporary chairman of the meeting and W. R. Hobart temporary secretary The organization of a National body was favored by the meeting, but, owing to the limited notice given of the holding of the meeting, it was decided to postpone a permanent organization until the next meeting, which will be held at the same place at 8 o'clock p. m. on April 3. The temporary officers were continued until the April meeting, except that Mr. Hobart resigned and Mr. Edward Banks was made temporary secretary. A committee of five, consisting of Messrs. Dressel, Banks, Everinghim, Schortemeier and Wolstencroft, was appointed to prepare and present a draft of constitution and by-laws at the next meeting. The sense of the meeting, as expressed, was that the orgauization to be formed should be composed of both gun clubs and individual members.

ON January 23, on the grounds of the Westminster Kennel Club, at Babylon, L. I., occurred one of the most exciting live bird shooting matches that has been seen on those grounds for many months, if in fact not the most exciting contest that was ever seen on the club's grounds. It was a race at 100 birds each man for a handsome stake, between Mr. Joseph H. Knapp, who a short time since made a great record at the Larchmont club, aud Mr. Geo. Work, one of the best amateur pigeon shots in this country. The birds were a carefully selected lot, and, with the strong wind which swept across the grounds to aid them in their flight, were the best and fastest lot ever trapped at Westminster. At the twenty-fifth round the men were a tie; at the fiftieth bird Mr. Work was one ahead, and at the seventy-fifth they were again on equal terms. Then up to the eighty-fifth Mr. Knapp led by one bird, when Mr. Work forged ahead and won the race, the scores being, Work 84, Knapp 81.

MR. C. M. PAUL, chief night clerk of the freight department of the P. W. & B. R. R., at Wilmingtou, Del., was a caller at the AMERICAN FIELD office on Friday of last week. Mr. Paul is an enthusiastic lover of the gun and rod and a man who is not found occupying one of the rear seats at a trap shoot. He says the interest in trap shooting is growing very rapidly in his section of the country and that the Wilmington Rod aud Gun Club has a few members who can hold their own in a trap shooting contest with the best men in Delaware and states adjoining. Mr. Paul's visit resulted in our forming another very pleasant acquaintance, and he was requested to carry the word back to the members of his club that the AMERICAN FIELD latchstring is always found on the outer wall and within easy reach of all true sportsmen.

ADVICES from Monte Carlo state on January 23, Mr. Fred Hoey, of New York, in competition at the traps with fifty-two entries in the Prix de Diane event, divided first and second money with M. Lo. The birds at Monte Carlo are smaller and faster than the American domestic pigeou, and for Mr. Hoey to accomplish such a feat on strauge grounds stamps him as a first-class trap shot. Five years ago Mr. Hoey knew comparatively nothing about trap shooting, but since he turned his attention in that direction he has made wonderful progress and now ranks among the best non-professional shots in America. In the contest on January 28, at Monte Carlo, in the Prix d'Achille event in which there were seventy-three entries, first and second prizes were divided by Count Trautmansdorff and Sig. Grasselli, Orchardson winning third.

THE Exeter Gun Club held its annual meeting on January 12, 1895, aud elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Geo. F. Haynes; vice-president, Arthur O Fuller; secretary, Chas. H. Bickford; treasurer, J. Warren Tilton; executive committee, A. S Langley and H. H. Moses. The club is in a very prosperous condition, has thirty members aud more money in the tresaury than before for a good many years. It was decided to move and repair the club house and fix up the grounds as soon as Spring opens. Shoots are being held every week through the Winter and an unusual interest is being shown, which speaks well for the coming year.

GEO. F. HAYNES,
President Exeter Gun Club, Exeter, N. H.

THE Saratoga Gun Club respectfully begs leave to claim the dates of June 21, 26, 26, 27 and 28 for the New York State Sportsmen's Association's tournament for 1895. From the generous responses of the manufacturers of sportsmen's goods, we can assure the shooters of New York State the most successful meeting in the history of the organization. We also propose to give in addition to the regular stake events, the largest and best sweepstakes held in the East this year. This will be open to the world, nobody barred, and we expect to average one hundred entries throughout. Programs will be ready June 1.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y. H. M. LEVENGSTON JR.

THE Newark handicap, shot on Erb's grounds on January 24 and 25, under the management of Secretary Green of the Newark Gun Club, proved one of the most successful sweeps of the season, twenty-nine men facing the score. The winners of first money turned up in Milt Lindsley and Captain Cranmer (Jones), each standing at the 30 yard mark, scoring 24 birds each. Mr. Lindsley shot his new hard grain American Wood powder, 3½ drams, loaded in U. S. Rapid cases. Captain Craumer used 3½ drams of American E. C. in U. S. Rapid cases, loaded by Messrs. Von Lengerke & Detmold.

Newark, N. J. JERSEYITE.

THE third match at 100 live birds each man between Thos A. Marshall of Kelthsburg, Ill., and Dr. W. F. Carver of Kansas City, Mo., will be shot at Hot Springs, Ark., on February 12, at which time the gun club of Hot Springs will hold a two days' tournament (February 11 and 12) at inanimate targets. On February 11 a team race, 100 targets per man for $100 a side, will be shot between Dr. Carver and Mr. Marshall on the one team against Mr. John J. Sumpter and Capt. H. A. Hughes on the other. Capt. Hughes and Mr. Sumpter are regarded the crack shots of Arkansas and an exciting race is expected. The tournament is open to the world.

MR. F. S. PARMELEE, of this city, recently challenged Dr. W. F. Carver for a match at 100 live birds, but the "Evil Spirit of the Plains" declined, giving as his reason for so doing that Omaha's reputation as a place for such contests was not of the best. Now if Dr. Carver desires to shoot a match with Mr. Parmelee and objects to coming to Omaha to shoot it, let him say that he will meet Mr. Parmelee at Council Bluffs, Ia., and our Frank and his friends will meet him there on the day he names for the match and give him one of the best contests he ever had.

Omaha, Neb. O. BEMIS.

THE members of the Wilmington Rod and Gun Club of Wilmington, Del., are doing some excellent work. "Hire the Hall" Hartlove, "Bilderback" and Burroughs are doing first-class work. Al. Stout recently scored 95 out of 100 targets on a windy day. Burroughs won a one hundred dollar match and will shoot anyone in the world, "Bilderback" included. Clarke and Creeden are getting in fine form for their match with "Bilderback" and "Hire the Hall" Hartlove. Stout is to be referee, Paul stakeholder.

Wilmington, Del. C. M. P.

THE program of the Aledo Gun Club's tournament to be held at Aledo, Ill., on February 5, 6 and 7, is to hand and is quite attractive to the lover of trap shooting. Ten events are schedules for each day, the club adding cash and special prizes to many of the events. The more attractive events are the team contest, the live bird event and the miss and out event on the second day, unknown trap and angle, use of both barrels. Live birds will be trapped at 20 cents each and targets thrown at 2½ cents apiece.

WHEN we selected the dates for our annual tournament we were not aware of the fact that the Illinois State Sportsmen's Association had for years claimed and held the dates from June 3 to 8 for its tournament, and in deference to, and out of courtesy for that association, we have decided to postpone our tournament, and will claim instead June 11, 12, 13 and 14 for our shoot.

T. A. DIVINE,
Memphis, Tenn. President Memphis Gun Club.

THE referee in the Brewer-Cockburn match at Hamilton, Ont., in which Brewer's load was challenged, be using a 10-guage gun and 1½ ounces of shot, on the challenge gave the match to Cockburn, although Brewer killed one more bird than his opponent. Capt. Brewer claims that he was ignorant as to the rules and used the amount of shot named because he was told that the rules permitted it.

THE Boiling Springs Gun Club will hold its annual three-day tournament on March 5, 6 and 7. First two days at targets, third day at live birds, open to all; 20 live birds, $10 entrance, birds extra. Entries will be received up to March 5. A deposit of $5 must be made to enter. Address Gus Grieff, No. 8 Murray Street, New York City, care Von Lengerke & Detmold.

Rutherford, N. J. WM. H. HUCK.

THE Spring Chicken Gun Club of this city is in a flourishing condition and the outlook now for a fine season of sport the coming Summer is flattering indeed. Last season was quite a dull one with this club owing largely to the depression in business, but business is now picking up and we anticipate great sport as soon as we get warm, settled weather.

Beaver Falls, Pa. BAD SHOT.

THREE matches are reported to have been made between Mr. T. W. Morfey, of Paterson, N. J., and Mr. Frank Class, of Morristown, N. J. Each match is at 100 birds per man for $100 a side, 30 yards rise, 50 yards boundary. The first match is to be shot at Morristown on February 9, the second at Willard's Park, Paterson, on February 12, and the third will be shot on February 19, the place at which it will be shot to be determined by toss.

MR. E. D. FULFORD, in his race against the birds at the Morristown Driving Park, Morristown, N. J., on Wednesday of last week, proved himself equal to the occasion and won $100. To win, Mr. Fulford had to score 45 out of 50 selected birds, which he did. He even did better than this, for he killed every bird of the fifty shot at, but four out of the first twenty-five dropped outside the 50 yards boundary, and in the second twenty-five he lost another in the same manner.

MR. R. B. MCLEAN, of Toledo, O., in the face of a strong wind on January 21, to settle a wager, killed 15 live birds straight, and as a result his brother, Mr. Neil McLean, of Hamilton, Ont., who had not seen him before for over seven years and who was a little incredulous as to his skill with a shotgun, had to pay for the supper for a party of friends. Thirteen of the fifteen birds were dropped within five feet of the traps.

THE Findlay (O.) Gun Club has issued an attractive program for its shoot on Washington's Birthday, an even dozen events, all at targets, being scheduled. The entrance ranges from $1 to $3, and the purses will be divided into three and four moneys, about half and half. The shooting will commence at 9 o'clock a. m., targets being trapped at two cents each.

THE next contest for the American Field Handicap Trophy will be held at Denmark, Ia., on January 31, and the one following that will be held at Burlington, Ia., on February 14. There will also be a contest for the trophy on Washington's Birthday, but at what place it will be held has not yet been determined.

IT is reported that Mr. J. A. R. Elliott, of Kansas City, Mo., and Mr. E. D. Fulford, of Utica, N. Y., have entered into an agreement to shoot three matches at Marion, N. J., on February 19, 20 and 21. Each match is to be at 100 live birds per man for $100 a side each match, loser to pay for the birds.

THE Big Four Gun Club of Burlington, Ia., will hold a three days' shooting tournament on April 9, 10 and 11. Efforts are being made to arrange a match to take place at this tournament between Dr. W. F. Carver and an unknown, the match to be at 100 live birds each man, for $100 a side.

OWING to his inability to get a sufficient number of live birds, Capt. A. H. Bogardus, of Lincoln, Ill., will not have his tournament on February 22, as previously announced in the AMERICAN FIELD, but later in the season will hold a tournament lasting three days.

NEAF APGAR, the popular little Jerseyman, who for several years past has had charge of the shell-loading department for H. C. Squires, has started in the business on his own account, with headquarters at 294 Broadway, N. Y.

THE Altoona Rod and Gun Club of Altoona, Pa., claims June 26 and 27 for its annual tournament. Altoona is one of the best shooting localities in the Keystone State, consequently this tournament should be a grand success.

THERE will be an all-day shoot at Lincoln, Neb., on February 22, at both live birds and inanimate targets, under the management of Messrs. Geo. Rogers and F. W. Shappe. This shoot will be open to all.

THE Boston Shooting Association will hold a three days' tournament at inanimate targets at Wellington, Mass., on April 9, 10 and 11. Programs for same will be ready for distribution soon.

MR. W. G. CLARK, of Altoona, Pa., on January 23, defeated Mr. W. N. C. Jones, of Pittsburg, in a live bird match, killing 84 birds out of 100 to Mr. Jones' 73.

A 25 BIRD handicap will be shot at Charles Zwirlein's grounds at Yardville, N. J., on February 13. Entrance $10 per man, birds extra.

THE Canton Shooting Shooting Club of Canton, Ill., will hold its annual Spring tournament on April 17, 18 and 19.

BREWER—GLOVER

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—For several days the expectancy among the people who use a gun, and those also who admire the skill required to smite the festive Blue Rock or smothe the live pigeon, has been the qui vive for the return match advertised for January 21 between Mr. Sim Glover and Capt. J. L. Brewer. Capt. Brewer had shot one match with Mr. Glover, a report of which appeared in last week's AMERICAN FIELD, and was defeated by four birds. The Captain being on his way to the Hamilton tournament accepted a challenge to shoot another match at 100 live birds, Hurlingham rules to govern, with the modification that Mr. Glover was permitted to use a 10-gauge gun and both were to shoot for the same score.

Mr. Brewer told an odd story regarding his treatment at Hamilton, which as near as I could learn by hearsay, outside of Capt. Brewer's version, was as follows: A match was made between Mr. Brewer and some other party, to be shot under some foreign rules. Mr Brewer asked regarding size of gun, load, etc., and was, so he is understood to have said, told that a 10-gange gun was allowed to use 1½ ounces of shot. One of his shells was challenged and, after he had defeated his man, he was confronted by the fact he had been using 1½ ounces of shot, while the rules called for 1¼ ounces, and he lost the match; at least Capt. Brewer is credited with this version of the matter. At any rate the Captain put in an appearance here and the match was arranged for $100, between him and Mr. Glover, and preparations made for the event.

The weather was somewhat boisterous the day previous, but the morning of the event dawned comparatively fair, although the weather gave indications of moisture at any time, and when the match was about half over it did rain sufficiently to make the umbrella a pleasant thing to have. Captain Stewart and Mr. Myers had spread shavings on the ground to protect the feet, and a couple of loads of coke on fire made it possible to endure the inclemency of the weather and not use strong language.

The principal event was called for 2 p. m., but previous to that an event of 50 birds each was run off between a couple of local shooters, Messrs. Stewart and Myers. I do not know exactly what rules it was shot under, but I should judge American Shooting Association rules, as it was a go-as-you-please or catch-as-catch-can.

The boys did some very pretty work, and until the last bird was shot it was anybody's game. Mr. Myers lost a very necessary bird by not using his second barrel, the bird flying away when being retrieved, and decided "lost" by the referee, Mr. Byer, of the Rochester Rod and Gun Club. Scores as follows:

Stewart.....2001111121 0212222222 2222022122 2012212121 1222110222—44
Myers.....2101100212 2021212011 1122222222 2012222211 2021222021—42

The match was shot in the best of humor amid the continual good natured chaffing for which these two big hearted fellows are so noted. My. Byer acted as referee and Mr. Samuel Kay as official scorer, while Mr. Hicks amused himself and the club members by trying to build a fire and pull the traps. Mr. Stewart won the match by a score of 44 to 42. The birds were really a good lot and took wing promptly, only a very few requiring the use of the scare ropes.

After this contest was over arrangements were made for the main event between Capt. Brewer and Mr. Glover, which was called at about 1 o'clock. The men were to shoot at 100 birds each, Hurlingham rules to govern, save that Glover was permitted to use a 10-gauge gun and both men were to shoot from the same score. Mr. Brewer used a 12-gauge gun chambered for a three-inch shell—a Hunter Arms Co. gun, I think—and Glover used a 9½-pound 10-gauge Greener. Mr. Geo. W. Crouch Jr., an old-time trap shot, and in his day a hot one, was made referee; Mr. E. C. Myers, official scorer; Mr. Sam Kay, trap puller.

About this time a drizzling rain set in which for a time bade fair to be very unpleasant. A few birds were shot by each man as practice birds, and then the match was begun by Mr. Brewer, who had won the toss, going to the score. Not being able to stand the rain I take the liberty to copy a description of it given by the reporter for the Rochester Herald.

The usual crowd of spectators who usually assemble when money is posted were there, and made things as pleasant as they usually do by their comments regarding the ability of the shooters during a contest. The previous match between Mr. Glover and Capt. Brewer was not shot under Hurlingham rules, although I was led to believe so. Glover was not accustomed to these rules and lost the first bird he shot at by putting his gun to his shoulder before he called "pull!" The bird was challenged by Brewer and challenge sustained. Of the birds marked as missed by the men, four of Brewer's died out of bounds, while four escaped unhurt, making his total killed 96. Glover had eight birds dead out of bounds, making a total of 90 killed! Nine escaped apparently unhurt, while the first was lost by not having his gun in proper position.

The first bird that Brewer missed was his fifth. It was a towerer and veered mainly off to the left quarter. His twenty-fifth went in the same direction, but not so swiftly, while his eighty-second went to the right quarter. Of the birds Brewer shot at that dropped out of bounds, the fifteenth went to the right quarter, then flew straightaway. His sixteenth went to the left quarter, then followed the preceding one, and both could be seen resting on the fence of the park until a fusillade on the outside announced that the skirmishers had arrived. His twenty-third bird also went out of bounds in a straight line to the right quarter. The sauciest bird of the day was the eightieth that Brewer shot at. It was a large slate-colored bird, and as soon as liberated from the trap became a rapid incomer, and, gradually rising, it seemed to wink and laugh at the Captain as he emptied both barrels of his gun at it.

Of the birds that Glover lost a number of them flew straight away and low. His eighth, twenty-first, twenty-seventh, thirty-first and forty-eighth went toward the right quarter; his fifteenth, seventy-third and seventy-eighth straight away; his twenty-ninth to the left quarter. Of those that dropped out of bounds all went to the right quarter with the exception of his fifty-fourth, which flew straight away and dropped just outside the flags.

The prettiest shot of the day was Brewer's ninety-eighth, a pure white bird which seemed to know the advantage of flying close to the ground. As soon as liberated it started nearly straight away, veering a little to the right quarter, and within two feet of the ground; so close indeed was it to the ground that it was with difficulty that Brewer was able to discern it, he using both barrels before assured of its safety.

Some of the more difficult shots were towerers, of which there were many. Capt. Brewer had the first of these in his third bird, which started from the trap and, soaring upward, made for the right quarter. His twenty-second was a straightaway, veering a little to the left and towering. His twenty-third was a right-quartering towerer and his twenty-fifth was one to the left quarter, starting straight away, then describing a circle to the left. His thirty-second went in the same direction, while his sixty-second went to the right and then became an incomer. His seventy-fifth was a straightaway, his eighty seventh to the left quarter, his ninety-third an incomer from the right quarter.

Glover for his fifty-sixth shot had a peculiar bird. It started to the left quarter, and then describing a half circle sailed away to the right, but fell before Mr. Glover's steady aim. His fortieth bird was a left-quartering driver, and his forty-third a hot incomer, both being most difficult to reach and kill. His forty-fifth was to the left quarter and his sixty-fifth was a hot incomer. His sixty-ninth was a straightaway; the seventy-sixth a rapid incomer, the eighty-fourth a straightaway.

"Capt. Brewer shot better than he did in his [illegible] Glover, although he did not get so large a str[illegible] best he did was 34 straight, from his forty-sixth [illegible] which died out of bounds. He missed his e[illegible] virtually 36 kills straight. Mr. Glover did [illegible] to get 17 straight credited to him, from his fifty [illegible] third. His fifty-fourth and fifty-fifth died [illegible] scores in detail are as follows:

Brewer.....2122012122 20211112 212221*121 [illegible]

After this race was finished Mr. E. C. Myers challenged Capt. Brewer to shoot 100 targets on our grounds for $25 a side, and at 10 o'clock on the morning of January 24, they met at the club house and the Captain got the big end. But I am inclined to the opinion that we can furnish the old veteran with all the target shooting, for almost any stake, he may desire. Mr. Myers was obliged to use a strange gun, which made a little difference in the result. I append the scores:

Brewer.....1111111111 1111111010 1101111111 1110011111 1011110101
1111111110 0111110101 1000111110 1011111011 1111011011—80

1111.00110 0111111111 0111001111 0111110100 1011101111—78

We tried to make it pleasant for the Captain and I guess we did. I am inclined to the opinion that fate did not treat him kindly at Hamilton, and he should have some syrup for his wounded feelings.

There is talk of a series of six matches to be arranged between Mr. Glover and Capt. Brewer, in the near future, for many shekels. How much atmosphere there is mixed with the report I am unable to say.

At the last meeting of our club President Brinsmaid presented to the club a beautiful badge to be contested for under a handicap arranged by a committee appointed for that purpose. The first shoot for this badge took place last Wednesday and resulted as follows: Hadley shot at 27, scored 18; Myers at 28, scored 22; Norton at 29, scored 26; Hicks at 29, scored 25; Foley at 30, scored 16; Borst at 31, scored 29; Maguire at 31, scored 28; Truesdale at 33, scored 22.

There has been so much outside business in the sporting world in this section of late that it has detracted somewhat from the interest that usually centers at the club house.

HENRY SHOOTING CLUB'S TOURNAMENT

HENRY, ILL.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The Henry Shooting Club held its Winter tournament on January 17 and 18. The weather, grounds and conditions generally being favorable, the shoot was a success. The attendance was fairly good though not many were present from a distance. Peoria targets and live birds were used. "Tramp" Irwin was present and was very busy most of the time. It is getting noised about the country that the "old man" is getting to be up in "the pictures" as a shooter, and near the "expert" ranks; but if the reader will look the scores over he will find that his name is not mentioned in a number of events as getting a slice even of fourth money.

The enterprising town of Henry is situated on the bank of the raging Illinois River, and not so very far from Chicago as one might think, for it is said that the water from the Chicago River comes down through the canal and kills all the fish in the river; and the water—well, the less said about it the better. But these facts do not seem to affect the shooting club of Henry, especially Mr. A. Bacon, for he got his share of the money all through the tournament and besides showed that he was in fine form in his match with Walpert. The scores:

SPECIAL LIVE BIRD MATCH

As the result of some bantering at the Kewanee shoot Mr. A. Bacon of this city had good backing in his own town, and a match was made and shot between him and Mr. Gus Walpert of Spring Bay. Conditions: 25 live birds for $25 a side. The match was made on the first day, but owing to the ground traps being delayed Walpert refused to shoot. However, when "Tramp" came upon the ground it was found that the Express Co. had, though dilatory, brought the traps. THE KEYSTONE'S ANNUAL

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The annual meeting and dinner of the the Keystone Shooting League, held Monday week at the League's shooting grounds at Holmesburg Junction, was a very pleasant and successful affair. The day was all that one could expect at this season of the year. In fact the weather was more like that of Spring than midwinter.

There were some twenty-five or more guests of the League present, among them Mr. Bartlett, representing the Burgess Gun Co. of Buffalo, N. Y., and they, too, enjoyed the sport. Most of the visitors spoke in complimentary terms regarding both our cozy club house and our well-arranged and nicely laid-out grounds. The Ground Committee is giving great satisfaction to the club members and everything points to a grand success for the league for the coming year.

Much interest centered in the live bird team race, which was both close and interesting. It was the intention to close this contest on the sixth round, but the teams then being a tie another round was required to determine the victors, Capt. Rust's team winning by one bird.

After the shooting was finished everyone adjourned to the club room where a splendid collation was served by a caterer from Frankford and he certainly did himself justice. Everything was done to a turn and was of the finest.

I also inclose the scores made in the first contest for the trophy presented to the club by our worthy president, Mr. Geo. Cohen, which was at 25 single targets, known traps, unknown angles.

At the business meeting which was held during the evening the following gentlemen were elected officers of the league for 1895: President, Geo. CUMMINGS—TAYLOR

YORK, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—A very interesting live bird match was shot on Tuesday, January 18, between Dr. W. G. Taylor, of Columbia, Pa., and W. Park Cummings, of Lancaster, Pa, at Hambright's hostelry, situated on the Lancaster and Columbia turnpike, about three miles west of Lancaster.

The match was shot under American Shooting Association rules at 100 live birds each man, for $50 a side. Aside from these stakes close to $1,000 changed hands on the result of this match. The birds, furnished by Mr. Hambright, were a splendid lot, not over a half dozen of the lot refusing to fly when the traps were sprung, and most of them leaving the traps like streaks. The shooting was of the hardest kind. the ground being covered with snow and a stiff, raw wind blowing from the southwest across the traps. Physically the two men form a marked contrast, Mr. Cummings being a picture of health and weigning well over two hundred pounds, while the Doctor on the other hand is much smaller.

Mr Cummings used a Crown Greener gun and his shells were the U M. C. Trap loaded with Schultze powder. Dr Taylor used his old Colt hammer gun and his loads were a mixture of black and American Wood powder in the U. M. C. Smokeless shells.

Of the shooting I can only say that Mr. Cummings clearly overshot his opponent on this occasion, only 85 birds being necessary for each man, at which stage the Doctor was shot out. This was quite a disappointment to the Doctor's many friends present, who from a review of the past records of both men had reason to anticipate a close and interesting race. Some attributed the Doctor's unsatisfactory work to his loads. but close acquaintance with both men and my own observation on this occasion convince me that, firstly, the Doctor's gun does not meet the requirements of a pigeon gun, and last but not least, Mr. Cummings' experience in shooting individual matches gives him an unquestionable advantage over the Doctor, who has had no actual experience of this kind. Another match between the two men is spoken of. Messrs. Duffy, of Marietta, and Grube, of Lancaster, acted as judges, and Wylie, of Lancaster, as referee, and they performed their duties in a satisfactory manner. Following are the scores:

Taylor	0221*00110 0221220200 1201101000	0100112101	1202200*00 1022011001 01222212*1 10*1122012 12110 —51
Cummings	220222111* 12*0212221 *20111*220	0222111*21	21*2102121 2112*2020? 2122201221 1112211220 22112 —68

*Dead out of bounds.

As will be seen from the above, Taylor had four dead out of bounds, while Cummings had seven. The element of luck was rather in favor of the latter. Of the better birds Cummings' fourth, thirteenth and forty-first, and Taylor's tenth and forty-ninth were veritable "corkers." Some of the best kills were made on the following birds: Taylor's sixteenth bird from trap No. 5, a very swift left quarterer, missed clean with first barrel was cut down as cleanly with the second. His eighteenth, a bird from No. 4 trap, a speedy right-quartering driver, was scored in the same manner. His eightieth, a straight, strong driver from No 5 trap, was probably the most difficult second barrel kill in the Doctor's string. Cummings' thirteenth, a fast direct left quarterer from No. 3 trap, was hit hard with both barrels, but dropped out. His twenty-seventh, from No. 2 trap, taking the same flight, was also hit with both barrels, but also fell dead just outside of the line; in fact so close to the line that the judges and referee lost quite a little time in coming to a decision. Some of Mr. Cummings' better second barrel kills were his thirty-third, thirty-niuth forty-first and forty-fourth, the latter being the star second barrel kill of the day.

After the conclusion of the match and after thawing out their frozen limbs, a 10 bird sweepstake, $5 entrance, was shot. Ten shooters entered the event, and I herewith appeud the scores:

TRAP AT BURLINGTON

BURLINGTON, IA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—On Thursday, January 17, a number of sportsmen met at Ft. Madison, Ia., to contest for the American Field Handicap Match Trophy. Prior to the shooting of this match, which was set for 2:30 o'clock, the contestants indulged in a number of friendly sweepstakes.

The weather was all that could be expected at this time of the year. In the afternoon a large number gathered to witness the contest for the trophy. The Ft. Madison delegation numbered seven contestants, L. F. Gemmett, holder of trophy, J. L. Krieg, C. Kammerer, A. Kammerer, Dr. Phillpot, P. G. Hitch Jr., and B. C. Brewer. Burlington was represented by B. Ebner, C. Dixie, and J. F. Breitenstein (Scott). Medlapolis had H. Paul to look after her interests, and he did some excellent shooting with a little Smith hammerless, scoring 47 out of a possible 50 in the sweepstakes. Denmark came to the front with D. M. Brockway and Jas. Fisher. Weaver was represented by R. Lange, who also scored 47 out of 50 in the sweepstakes.

Mr. Brockway won the trophy on a score of 47, his load being 3¼ drams of Laflin & Rand's Orange powder, 1¼ ounces Collier chilled shot No. 8. R. Ebner won second on a score of 45, and used for his load the (Cyclostomous) Wood powder 3¼ drams, in the United States Cartridge Co.'s Rapid shell. H. Paul used the same load in the Climax shell and Collier chilled shot No. 2. R. Lange's load was 3 drams of Laflin & Rand's Orange powder, 1¼ ounces of No. 8 Collier chilled shot in the new Climax shell, and won fourth. A. Kammerer and Dr. Philpot tied for third. GREENSBURG VS. NEWPOINT

GREENSBURG, IND.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—I forward you herewith the scores made in the second of a series of three matches between a team of eight men from the Greeusburg Gun Club and a team of the same number of men from the Newpoint Gun Club, each man shooting at 20 single Blue Rock targets from five traps, known traps, unknown angles. The scores are much better than at the first shoot. One more match will decide which is the best club in Decatur County. The best score in this match was made by Hon. John Osborne, president of the Greensburg Gun Club.

The third and last match of the series of three matches between teams from the above named clubs was shot on the grounds of the Newpoint club, nine men to a team, 20 targets per man. A strong wind and a sleetstorm which fell directly in the faces of the participants made the scores in this last contest somewhat lower than they would have been had the day been pleasanter. Here they are, the Newpoint team winning.

KRUEGER—ERTTER

YORK, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The second live bird match between Mr. A. C. Krueger, of Wrightsville, and C. R. Ertter, of Gettysburg, was shot on Friday, January 18, on the historic battlefield of Gettysburg. The conditions of weather and light were about the same as on the occasion of the first match, the light perhaps being a worse one; the grounds, background and arrangements generally left much to be desired. Nothing was done to keep the spectators away from the score, and at times the shooters could only with difficulty reach and leave the traps. The attendance was quite large, York, Harrisburg, Christiana and many other surrounding places being represented. The birds proved rather an uneven lot, of which I remember in particular three which were positively the best birds I have ever seen leave a trap, not excepting the bird on which Mr. E. D. Fulford dropped out of the tie for third place in the Great American Handicap at Dexter Park last year, which I always thought was one of the hardest birds of my experience.

The retrieving was done by an eight-year-old son of the famous Irish setter, champion Brush. This dog, Oro Fino, is the property of Mr. R. M. Sefton, of Gettysburg, and is a splendidly bred dog, and although carrying good age and an excess of flesh, stuck gamely to his work and never hesitated to retrieve every bird of the match; and by his clever work saved both contestants several birds. The scores, although not in the nineties, must be looked upon as good ones considering the disadvantages under which the shoot took place.

Mr. Krueger was not at all well on this occasion, suffering from a severe cold. Both men did fine work. Mr. Ertter started in with a strange gun and missed three out of his first six. He then went back to his own gun and finished in something like his old style form. Mr. Krueger shot his new L. C. Smith gun with E. C. powder and No. 7 chilled shot in both barrels. Mr. Ertter shot the same cases as Krueger—U. M. C. trap—but I did not learn his load on this occasion. H. A. Dill, of Harrisburg, acted as referee, Geo. Bushman, of Gettysburg, as official scorer, and M. J. Corcoran, of York, as trap puller. Following are the scores:

ANDERSON'S TEAM VS. McINTOSH'S TEAM

PITSBURG, PA.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—The second match at live birds between the Anderson team and the McIntosh team resulted in a victory for the Andersons by a score of 105 to 98. The match was shot on the private grounds of Mr. E. W. Boyd at Spring Hill, near this city, Mr. Boyd officiating as scorekeeper for the occasion, and Mr. J. F. Donley as referee.

The birds were a very ordiuary lot. The shootiug of all the men was very good except that of Mr. McIntosh, who shot far oelow his average. Mr. J. N. Anderson aud Mr. A. H. King shot in very fine form, both making some very difficult kills. Mr. W. M. C. Jones was a little out of form. Mr. D. W. McNaugher made some spleudid kills. He is improving very fast in his live bird shooting, this being his first year at the trap. The retrieving was done by Mr. John Braut's setter dog Art, the best live bird retriever I ever saw. He has brought in over twelve hundred birds for us this Winter without a fluke. He is very rapid and very sure. After the match he was presented with a fine collar by the two teams.

The next match will be a 100-bird race between Mr. J. Grant Anderson and Mr. J. S. McIntosh, aud will take place on February 22. The scores of the team race were as follows:

ANTHRACITE.

TOM KELLER VS. GEO. MOSHER

NEW YORK.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—George Mosher, the hustling representative of the Spracuse Arms Co., dropped into the office of the W. Fred Quimby Co., just after the regular morning congregation of trap shooters had assembled, aud while brother "Jack" Brewer was holding forth on the late Hamilton shoot in general and more particularly on how he was buncoed into using one and a half ounces of shot in his match with Coburn. Mosher was fresh from his victory in a 25-bird race with Mort Mayhew, at Utica, and while it was noticeable that he had blood in his eyes, it was manifested by remarks he dropped that he was after the scalp of Tom "U. S." Keller, and his proposition for a 25-bird race was quickly taken by the Rapid shell man. It required but a few miuutes to get a dispatch to Syracuse for Mosher's gun, another to John Benner at Fanwood to have fifty good birds ready for the next day, and the details were settled.

It was bitter cold and a strong wind was blowiug across the traps when the men were called to the score, and Mosher's gun had not arrived, but borrowing a gun he pluckily went to the score. That the birds were first class was shown by the fact that but three were incomers. The handicap of a strange gun was too much for Mosher, as his score shows, but it is hiuted that Tom had a bit up his sleeve, in anticipation of another race.

Twenty-five birds, conditions American Shootiug Association rules, for price of birds.

T. H. Keller	12*121*222 2*2020211* 10211—18
Geo. Mosher	1*10222*10 2*22120222 12101—17

Following the match a 5-bird sweep, for price of birds, was indulged in by Keller, Mosher and Benner, with the following result: Keller 5, Mosher 4, Benner 5.

CHAS. C. HEBBARN.

READ VS. PARMELEE, LOOMIS, PETERS AND RAYMOND

OMAHA, NEB.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—Some time since Mr. Read, the well-known live bird shot of this section of the West, issued a defi to shoot any four men in Omaha a race at 100 live birds and the four men who should accept his challenge to shoot at 25 birds each. The defi was accepted by Messrs. Parmelee, Loomis, Peters and "Raymond," and the match was shot a few days since, resulting in a victory for Mr. Read by the scant margin of one bird. The day on which the match was shot was exceedingly cold, the thermometer recording 2° below zero, and there was a strong wind from the northwest which made the birds exceedingly fast. The extreme cold seemed to affect Mr. Read more than the other shooters, still he kept his mind on the work in hand and won the race. The scores:

O BEMIS.

SCOTT TERRY—GARRY HOPPER

The second match between the above named gentlemen was decided on Tuesday of last week on the grounds of the Jersey City Heights Gun Club, at Marion, N. J., Mr. Terry for the second time demonstrating that he was the better man, shooting his opponent out on the forty seventh round.

The day was cold and blustery, and the attendance was confined to the Paterson friends of Mr. Hopper and a small Plainfield contingent who pinned their faith to their fellow-townsmen. The birds, which were furnished by veteran Al Heritage, were an extraordinarily good lot, and the strong wind that prevalled added to their speed.

Mr. H. Wolff, of Paterson, officiated as referee, "Dutchy" Smith, of Plainfield, as scorer, and "Uncle" Al—pulled the traps. The conditions of the match were 50 birds a man for $100 a side, American Shooting Association rules, 30 yards rise, 80 yards boundary. The scores:

Terry	2112111022 0101211211 02101112*0 1222212*02 01111022.—36

CARMEN AND SISTY VS. LINDSEY AND GILES

DUNELLEN, N. J.

EDITOR AMERICAN FIELD:—This quiet old town, once the battle-grouud of the pioneers of trap shooting, has within the last year furnished material enough for three gun clubs with a total of forty-five shooters. There are just enough active members in the three clubs to form one respectable club, but jealous rivalry prevents this, and challenges are being thrown around daily and recklessly. A challeuge recently published by Wm. Carmen and T. W Sisty to shoot any two men in Dunellen or Newmarket a match on live birds was accepted by Messrs. Lindsey and Giles The match was at 20 birds a side, 25 yards rise, use of one barrel, gun at the hip, and was won by Messrs. Carmen aud Sisty with a combiued score of 16, Messrs. Lindsey and Giles scoring 14. A driving storm of hail, snow and rain did not prevent 200 spectators from standing ankle deep in mud and water, and getting wet to the skin, to witness this little event, the interest was so great and partisan feeliug so strong.

The birds were the best to be procured. Consideriug the weather the score of Mr. Carmen deserves meution, as he has never shot at but 48 birds aud has killed 44. In this match the scores were as follows: Carmen 9, Sisty 7. Total 16. Lindscy 6, Giles 8. Total 14.

The next invitation shoot of the Dunellen club will be held on February 22, live birds and targets.

DUNELLEN CLUB.

NEWARK, N. J.—The scores which I inclose herewith were made on live birds on John Erb's grounds, on January 24, and considering the class of birds they were made on they are indeed good. The day was perfection for live bird shooting, being cold enough to give men the snap required to get onto a quick flyer and to put life into the birds. The birds were the best, taking them as a lot, that have been seen on these celebrated grounds for a long time and it took quick, accurate work to drop them within bounds. As the list of participants will show there was present a fine array of excellent shots, among them such stars as Frank Class, E. D. Fulford, T. W. Morfey, Eddie Hill, J. A. R. Elliott, "Dutchy" Smith, Sam Castle, Milt Lindsley and Capt. Money. The scores which follow tell the rest of the story.

EVENT No. 1.—25 live birds, $10 entrance, birds extra, four moneys, handicap rise.

KENNEL

A. B. K., St. Louis, Mo.—(1) Please prescribe for my cocker spaniel puppy, six months old. On November 13 I first noticed signs of distemper in him; he seemed lively, appetite good, pustules on stomach which dried up and left a scab falling off later, taking hair with it. Gave him Glover's Distemper Cure till he seemed to be thoroughly over distemper, then gave one grain quinine and citrate of iron three times daily. On his stomach I applied the AMERICAN FIELD prescription for skin diseases: Fishoil, oil of tar and sulphurous acid. After a week I washed the puppy in warm water and put him under a warm stove till thoroughly dry. On December 14 I first noticed signs of chorea. Thinking it might have been worms I gave him areca nut followed by castor-oil, and on December 15 got quite a tapeworm from him; on December 16 repeated the dose but found no worms on that day. Twitching still continued. On December 17 I gave three drops of Fowler's Solution, next day four, next day five and the following day six drops, three times daily; continued at six drops till December 22, when the puppy seemed to be in pain; every now and then he would howl or whiney I forgot to mention that for several days previous he had done the same thing. On the eveuing of December 22, to put the puppy out of misery I gave him thirty drops of Fowler's Solution, and to my surprise the next morning the puppy was alive, and walked around that afternoon. About two hours after I gave him the thirty drops of Fowler's Solution I took a look at him; he was weak in the legs, could not stand on them without falling down. The puppy does not howl or whine any more to-day (December 23) but the twitching is worse. Gave him a good dose of castor-oil this afternoon, and have made up my mind now to try and get him well. I omitted to state that the puppy has a sore on his left side about the size of a quarter of a dollar; no pus yet, but think there will be as his stomach is hard for about two inches on each side of the sore. Am washing it with warm water, a little carbolic acid added. Do you think six drops of Fowler's Solution, three times daily, will eventually cure the puppy or should I add some other medicine? (2) I also have two other cocker spaniel pupples six months and one fourteen months old, respectively, who now have the distemper: cough, pustules on stomach, eyes inflamed, appetite good. Please prescribe quickest cure. Ans.—(1) We cannot state positively that the medicine will effect a cure, but it is one of the best remedies that can be used in treating chorea. Give four drops three times daily for six consecutive days; then increase the dose one drop daily until twenty drops are given at each and every dose; then decrease in the same ratio. (2) To the six-months-old give one grain of quinine three times daily, and to the other three grains three times daily.

J. R. B., Gettysburg, Pa.—(1) Please state the cause of complaint and prescribe for my pug bitch ten months old. About five months ago I had her dressed in the belly, and the place healed nicely leaving a lump, which I thought would cause some trouble. A sore came there about sixty days after the operation. I have had a doctor attending her, but she does not appear to be getting any better, and it has turned to a sort of ruuning sore. At first something was discharged from it that looked much like h[illegible] ound. I have kept the place washed clean with warm water and castile soap, and the doctor also has used his own drugs, but instead of getting better she is worse. Lately I have been removing large worms from the sore, as long as twelve to fourteen inches, very thin, and at every one-sixteenth of an inch having a joint. She is very restless until the worms are taken from her, which must be done every day. She is getting thin, although she eats quite heartily, looks bright, and has her usual passages. (2) I also have a poluter b[illegible] y[illegible] old whose ear swells up but not close to the head. I has[illegible] watery blood came from it The doctor advised m[illegible] to [illegible] water and liniment into the lanced opening, and sin[illegible] is swelling at the head. Please prescribe. Ans. [illegible] sible for us to prescribe for cases that require surgical [illegible] the case over to the veterinarian in charge. (2) We [illegible] warm applications, in the form of poultices, are possibly ind[illegible]

F. S., Elwood, Ind.—I have an English setter bitch puppy seven months old, and about two weeks ago I took her out hunting on [illegible] She hunted and was very active and energetic for [illegible]r. then she would come in and lie down, and when [illegible] would whine and frequently would not come un[illegible] off. She showed no signs of lameness un[illegible] the buggy on my return home. She was [illegible] All that night I could hear her moan[illegible] ever since she has been very weak in her [illegible] her back seems to cause no pain; her [illegible] she staggers in walking, and sometimes [illegible] then in the other; she seems well oth[illegible] the go all the time, does not jerk or twitch. Please prescribe [illegible] namiug disease. Ans.—Muscular soreness from overexertion and lack of condition to perform the work she did. For five consecutive mornings give one ounce of castor-oil and ten drops of cascara segrada, allowing daily exercise, and the next time you work her let it be for one hour only.

F. B. C., Findlay, O.—What is the trouble with my setter dog, eight months old? Two weeks since I hunted him a whole day, and he appeared unusually bright and playful in the evening. The next morning he refused to eat; seemed stiff in his hind parts; several times since he has had slight coughs; on a few occasions he vomited what he had eaten undigested. I thought he might have worms and treated him with powdered areca nut, but I found no worms. He seems bright and quite playful, but he has not eaten a pound of food fo more than a week; he drinks a very small quantity of milk, but when anything else is given him invariably buries it. As a tonic, since my treatment for worms, I have given him two and one-half grains of citrate of iron and quinine, but with no apparent improvement. Please prescribe. Ans.—For four consecutive moruiugs give one ounce of castor-oil and thirty drops of cascara segrada; and for a tonic continue the citrate of Iron and quinine.

S. H., Galveston, Tex.—I have a pointer dog four years old. Some time ago he had a cough which I stopped, but recently he has started again, this time more violently than before, and nothing does him any good. He is lively; hunts as willingly as ever; eats heartily and is apparently in good health otherwise. When he is quiet he does not cough much, but the least exercise causes him to cough very hard, and then he tries to vomit something but only raises a stringy, white substance so far as I can notice. He is at times much constipated. I gave him two ounces of castor-oil, which did not move the bowels. Tell me the trouble and prescribe. Ans.—Indigestion. For five consecutive morniugs give two ounces of castor-oil and fifteen drops of cascara segrada; feed but once daily, then at night.

H. O. B., Springfield, Mo.—Ans.—(1) He is by Roderigo—Mr. E. C. Morstadt's Blue Dick's Friend. (2) The texture and feather of coat are much regarded, a soft silky without curl being a sine qua non. The feather should be considerable, and should fringe the hind as well as the fore legs; the feather of the flag, or tail, must be composed of straight silky hairs. (3) We have not space to comply with your request. If you want to begin right (as you say you do) it would pay you to purchase a well-known work containing the standard, description, history and other interesting matter connected with the breed. A person starting in to breed them would not learn very much at first from a bare description. (4) It is against our rule to do so; you might write to the Secretary of the Pet Dog Club on the matter.

L. B. H., St. Louis, Mo.—Ans.—(1) A dog or puppy can be registered at any age. (2) No. (3) Send the fee when you register the dog. (4) English Lass (9505) is by Tasso out of Bird, by Doth out of Polly; Tasso, by Dike R. The stud book does not give Tasso's dam, so probably she was unknown; nor are stud book numbers given with any of the above, as is usually done if registered, so we presume they have none.

J. L. D., Huntsville, Ala.—Ans.—(1) "Llewellin" refers to an English setter of M. R. Ll. Purcell-Llewellin's strain. (2) "Laverack" refers to the still older blood in the kennel of the late Mr. Edward Laverack. (3) Belton is not a strain but refers to English setter color and markings, as "blue belton" or "orange belton." (4) Tan markings may be found on an English setter of any breeding, blood or strain.

S. E. C., New York.—Ans.—Prince Lucifer is by King Nob'e (Count Noble—Rosalind)—Elsie Belton (Laverack Chief—Fame). The stud book gives his winnings as, "1st, All-Age Setter Stakes, Central field trials; 2nd, All-Age Setter Stakes, Indiana field trials, 1890." Mr. Jackson I. Case, Racine, Wis., can give you his full winnings.

G. H., Belleville, Ill.—Ans.—(1) Sancho Pontie is by Scott's Broncho (Pape's Sweep—Pape's Nellie) out of Dinah II (Scott's Broncho—Scott's Judy). (2) Yip is by Sport C (Don Ranger—Queen) out of Gipsey Croxteth (Prince Croxteth—Spotted Kee). (3) Ponce De Leon was owned by A. L. Padgett, Chicago.

W. W. C., Dover, N. H.—Ans.—(1) There is no breed called the Llewellin setter, it is merely a term used occasionally by breeders to denote that an English setter comes from Mr. R. Ll. Purcell-Llewellin's kenuel, or is descended from his strain. (2) We do not find them in the Stud Book.

B. E. Q., Freeport, Mich.—Ans.—Van (26486) is by Beaumont (Ronald III—Floss) out of Fly M (Buck—Gyp). Fly M is a good show winner, but her pedigree can he traced for only two generations. (2) Plain Sam was entered in the International Derby as owned by Dr. Daniels.

W. N., Clay City, Ind.—Beulah L (22462) is by Bang out of Brinkley, she by Sport (Dash—Virgie) out of Mollie (Dip—Nellie); Baug, by Glenrock (1615) out of Rosa, by Dashing Monarch out of Lella. If further information is desired write to Mr. W. C. Kennerly, White Post, Va.

S. B. C., Pittsburg, Pa.—Ans.—(1) Nellie Bow (6304) is by Bodine (2852) out of Hoosier Nell (4887). (2) Blue Dan (5624) is by Yale Belton (5696) out of Mint (out of imported Belle). The stud book furnishes no further information regarding the dam's pedigree.

CONSTANT READER, St. Louis, Mo.—Ans.—There is a pointer named Frank D registered in Vol. III, but we do not know if he is black; his number is 4619 and he was whelped in April, 1884, and was bred by A. C. Waddell, who then lived at Topeka, Kan.

D. C. L., Petoskey, Mich.—Ans.—No, it is on the breaking and handling of dogs for shooting over. By the use of common sense and patience you can teach your dogs to draw a sled, especially as they are young dogs; but do not use a whip.

J. W. K., Duluth, Minn.—Ans.—(1) Yes her name is Guenn and her number 12112. (2) There was an English setter bitch named Valentiua registered a year ago, but we cannot find a dog named uamed Valentine.

W. B., Ava, Ill.—Ans.—(1 and 2) These questions were answered in last week's issue. (3) Modern Training. Handling and Kennel Management; price two dollars; we can furnish it.

C. A. H., Pittsburg, Pa.—Ans.—"The Dog in Health and Disease," by Dr. Wesley D. Mills, is the book you want; it is illustrated; price $2.25 (postpaid) at this office.

ROYAL, Winnipeg, Man.—Ans.—We fail to find her in the Stud Book. There is a Smith's Lady, but the breeding is different, so she cannot be the bitch you mean.

P. J. S., Canal Dover, O.—Ans.—By referring to page 179 of the AMERICAN FIELD of August 24, 1889, you will find that dogs are property in the state of Ohio.

F. B., Buffalo, N. Y.—Ans.—(1) They must be a bright steel blue with proper tan marking; the silver color is often the proper color faded. (2) Not registered.

B. F. H., Wallace, Neb. [illegible] Fan Wildwood's number is 27188: [illegible] book as, "1st, puppy and special,

GAME AND SHOOTING

H. W. R., Paducah, Ky.—Please quote latest Tennessee game law as to open seasons. Ans.—It is unlawful to kill deer in Bledsoe, Cumberland, Rhea, Fentress, White, Hamilton, Warren, Johnsou, Hancock, Unicoi, De Kalb and Montgmery counties from December 1 to September 30 of each year, and uulawful for any non-resident of the state to kill wild turkeys in Bledsoe, Rhea, Fentress and White counties from May 1 to October 1 of each year. Open season on quails is from November 1 to March 1. Quails not allowed to be killed for profit in the state except by a resident and upon his own land.

C. S. M., Marshalltown, Ia.—To whom shall I write in regard to organizing a state association for the protection of game? I guess we have laws in Iowa for the protection of our game and fish, but one would think from the utter disregard of them that we had none. Ans.—Iowa already has a state association for the protection of game and fish, in the Iowa State Sportsmen's Association, and we think if you will write Hon. John G. Smith, of Algona, Ia., a very zealous member of the above association, or Mr. N. S. Young, of Burlington, Ia., president of the state association, you will get the assistance you want in having the game laws of the state enforced

HUNTING

REX, Toronto, Can.—Ans.—(1) The National Fox-Hunlers' Association and the National Hunt Association have no connection whatever. The former is an association of fox-hunters, and if not fully national in its scope it can at any rate lay some claim to the title, for its members are drawn from the states of Kentucky, Maine, Mississippi, Georgia, Indiana, Illinois, Teone see, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Virginia, North Carolina, New York and Ohio and its president from Washington, D. C. The latter was gotten up two or three years ago by a little clique around New York in imitation of the National Hunt Club of Great Britain and Ireland, which is an excellent institution of long standing and which stands in the same relation to hurdleracing and steeplechasing in the United Kingdom as the Jockey Club does to flat racing.

NOTICE TO ADVERTISERS

Advertisers are respectfully requested to observe the following rules governing the insertion of advertisements in these columns:

CLASSIFICATION.—Strictly kennel advertisements—those which relate exclusively to dogs and to nothing else—cannot be placed under headings of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange," but are subject to classification only under their proper kennel headings. When two or more breeds of dogs are mentioned in one advertisement, it destroys the possibility of giving it a distinctive heading and it is therefore classified under "Miscellaneous." For this reason it is well to advertise each breed separately.

If stud notices are included in advertisements of dogs for sale the classification given will be "Miscellaneous." Stud notices should be separate and distinct from other advertisements so as not to conflict with proper classification.

The departments of "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" are reserved for advertisements relating in some way to sportsmen's goods or other articles of merchandise.

RATES.—The rate for advertisements under 'Wanted," "For Sale" or "For Sale or Exchange" is 3 cents per word each insertion. The name, address, initials and abbreviations are included and count as words.

The rate for advertisements under kennel headings is 25 cents per line for the first insertion, and 15 cents for each additional consecutive insertion. Estimate seven words to a line unless the words are unusually long. If display type is used the rate is $3.50 per inch for the first insertion and $2.50 per inch for each additional consecutive insertion. Special rates are given for displayed advertisements running three months or longer. Schedule will be mailed on application.

Remittances to cover full cost should invariably accompany advertisements. If too much is remitted we will refund you what is overpaid.

Advertisers will favor us greatly by writing their advertisements plainly, using separate sheets of paper. Copy should reach us by Tuesday of each week to insure insertion in that week's issue.

DOG TRAINING

DOGS thoroughly trained on quail for the season of 1894-95. I killed very few birds on my training grounds last year, and have thousands this season. My preserve consists of over 10,000 acres of the prettiest quail ground in the world, every variety of cover, and open enough to give a dog range as great as will the prairies of the Northwest. I have the best natural kennel location in the world, pure water, good healthy food, and the care of a competent kennelman. Not once in ten years do we have the distemper without its being brought to us, and it then occurs in a very mild form entirely free from serious results except in very rare cases. W. W. TITUS, Waverly, Clay Co., Miss. 42-18-tf

1015 WASHINGTON AVE., NEW YORK, December 29, 1894.

MESSRS. SPRATTS PATENT (America) Ltd., New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—I see so many testimonials and see so much praise for Spratts Patcut that I feel inclined to say a word myself. You know how long I have been a customer of yours and how much I use of your dog cakes (which are undoubtedly the best in the world) and you know the fine condition of my dogs and how well I've done with them. Well, that tells the whole story.

Yours truly, GEORGE JARVIS.

SPRATTS PATENT (Limited).

Dear Sirs:—In my expedition to the arctic regions we used large quantities of your biscuits, dog cakes and "armebis." These goods were all you had claimed them to be and even more.

Our draft dogs thrived amazingly upon your dog cakes.

For our next expedition you may be sure your goods will be ordered in still larger quantities.

Sincerely yours, WALTER WELLMAN.

Excelsior Dog Cakes

As their name implies, are the highest grade in the world, and five gold and silver medals corroborate the fact. They are economical and nutritious and are used by the leading kennels in the United States and Europe.

The Swiss Mountain Kennels have the following to say about them:

SWISS MOUNTAIN KENNELS, GERMANTOWN, PA.

Gentlemen:—I have used Excelsior biscuits now for about five years and find them perfectly satisfactory in all respects. The dogs are not only fond of them, but even when used exclusively have always agreed splendidly with them, keeping them generally in a good healthy trim.

I have several times recommended them to other parties and have never failed to find them otherwise than pleased with them. I would here thank you for your prompt attention to all orders. I am perfectly willing you should publish anything I have said formerly or at the present time in regard to the cakes. Yours truly,
